A lady desired Dr. Johnson to give his opinion of a new work she had written, and added that if it was not suitable to publish she could bring out something else, as she had other irons in the fire. The Doctor turned over a few leaves, and replied, "I advise you, madam, to put it where your other irons are."

I look at Time as one who sees
A pale leaf floating on the breeze
Amid a grove of noble trees.

It sits awhile a little nook;
To-day it is--to-morrow, look!
The great white Throne! the open Book!

We stand upon a narrow space,
Eternity rolls on apace--
Where next shall be our resting-place?

Martineau: What science calls the uniformity of Nature, Faith accepts as the fidelity of God. It is a wonderful sermon that Science is all the while preaching to us from this text, "God is faithful." Let us lay to heart the lesson, and be thankful for the teaching that has brought it home to us with such power and impressiveness.

Practical Christianity is no sanctuary sensation, no Sabbath-day service. It is the conscientious discharge of all duty, with a desire therein to honor Jehovah. It makes the whole world a temple and the whole life a priesthood, "eating and drinking and doing all things to the glory of God."

THE MASTER'S TOUCH.

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty lies unseen;
To make the music and the beauty needs
The Master's touch, the Sculptor's chisel keen.
Great Master, touch us with Thy skillful hand;
Let not the music that is in us die!
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let,
Hidden and lost, Thy form within us lie!
Spare not the stroke! do with us as Thou will!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete thy purpose, that we may become Thy perfect image, Thou our God and Lord!
--Hosmer.

All form is beautiful, exactly in proportion as it approaches to the pure and absolute form of the idea which it manifests. This, indeed, is the very definition of beauty, and the key to the strict meaning of that much-abused term, "Æsthetics," the science which relates to the beautiful in nature and art; from the cedar and the oak, down to the most insignificant flower--the humblest seed that falls into the ground--God giveth to each "a body as it hath pleased Him;" yet "to every seed his own body,"--the very body which comprehended in the idea, can alone expound and realize it.

"Rise! for the day is passing,
And you lie dreaming on!
The others have buckled their armor,
And forth to the fight are gone,
A place in the ranks await you,
Each man has some part to play;
The past and the future are
In the face of the stern to-day."

The Chinese Ambassador at the Berlin Court, Li-Fang-pao, is famed among his countrymen as one of the most eminent among their learned men. He has not neglected the opportunities which his travels in Europe have afforded him of making himself acquainted with the details of western civilization. Li Fang-pao has been examining the remains of Grecian pottery of the Trojan and pre-Trojan period, and has made a valuable discovery. He proves that the vases found in Trojan territory and buried in excavations, dating from pre-Trojan ages, such as those referred to by Schliemann, are really of Chinese origin. On one of these vessels Li Fang-pao finds an inscription to the effect that, about 1,300 years before the Christian era, some enterprising individual had enclosed in the vase three pieces of muslin and despatched them for inspection. It seems, therefore that this piece of pottery, at all events, significantly records the fact of the commercial intercourse which existed so far back as the pre-Trojan era between the industrious natives of Cathay and the enterprising merchants of Asia Minor and Greece.

LETTER V.

Popery makes the Masses superstitious: the intelligent infidels.—Who go to confession?—Ireland.—France.—Other Countries.—Reasons why Popery debases.—The Days of Popery numbered.

My dear Sir,—In my last letter, in which I stated to you the process of my mind in its transition from popery to infidelity, I asserted that the effect of your religion is to make the masses superstitious, and the intelligent infidels, in all the countries where it predominates. Although the truth of this assertion is self-evident of the well-read mind, the briefest consideration will make its truth apparent to all.

How stands the matter in our own country? Who attend your confessional and your masses in New York? How many of the educated Irish, French, or Germans ever whisper at your knees their sins, or ever bow at your altars to receive your wafers on their tongues, believing them to be "Jesus Christ himself, true God and true man," and believing that he is "truly, really, and substantially present" in them? How many of these go to your churches? Let any body wishing to know stand at the door of St. Peter's or St. Patrick's on the Sabbath, and examine the multitudes who attend these places, and they will soon learn. And even when an intelligent person is seen mixing with those who attend on your masses, he goes merely through the force of habit, or to wait upon a female relative. Permit me to say that, with an acquaintance somewhat extended in our country, I know not a single layman, of any repute for learning or science, who believes in your distinguishing doctrines. There are some I allow, of high standing and character who are nominally Catholics, but who, I learn, on inquiry, are but nominally so; and the nominally Catholic is really an infidel.

And how stands the case as to Ireland, the land of our birth, where seven of her nine millions of people are Roman Catholics? While its masses are with your Church, is not its mind in opposition to it? And what has kept the mind of Ireland from being infidel but the fact that the religion of the Bible stands out there with a greater or less degree of prominence in opposition to the religion of the priest? Thank God! the Irish massacre did not exterminate Protestantism in the fairest isle of the ocean.

And how stands the case in France, where your Church, Nero-like, extinguished the lights of truth, and caused the blood of the Huguenots to run like water? Popery has managed France in its own way, without any let or hindrance, and what has been the result? It legislated God out of existence, decreed religion to be a fable, and death to be an eternal sleep. Knowing nothing of religion but what it learned through the unmeaning rites of your Church, and by the carnal policy of your priests, it sought to erase every trace of it from existence; and although France has recovered from the intoxication of the maddening bowl, and has risen to order from the wild chaos into which popery plunged it, its mind is yet infidel. Voltaire is the pope of the mind of France, and Sue is the high-priest of the people. Your dumb show of imposing ceremony is there esteemed, not as solemn, but farcical; and upon your rites few attend save the peasantry and the women. And the world should hold the papal Church accountable for all the horrors of the French Revolution.

What is thus true of France is yet more true of other papal countries of Europe. If the nobility of Spain, Portugal, Austria, or Italy are less infidel than in France, it is because they are less educated. Their masses are superstitious—their educated men, including many of their clergy, are infidels, and their men of fortune and spirit live without any moral restraint. Popery brings no strong moral influence to bear upon the mind and conscience of any people. In the proportion that its influence is strong do people and nations sink in the intellectual, social, and moral scale.

That you yourself, dear sir, may see this, sit down and candidly compare Connaught and Ulster, in Ireland. In the one, popery almost exclusively prevails; in the other, Protestantism is in the ascendency. What a difference between them! Compare Ireland and Scotland; and, although the land of St. Patrick is far richer than that of St. Andrew, yet how heavens wide the difference between them! Compare Spain with England, Italy with Prussia, Rome with Edinburgh, Belfast with Cork; how wide the difference! Come across the Atlantic, and continue the comparison on our own Western Continent. Compare Mexico to New England, Brazil to these United States, the city of Mexico to that of Boston, or New York, or Cincinnati! How great the contrast! Come yet nearer home: compare the worshipers at St. Peter's, in Barclay Street, with those at St. Paul's, in Broadway; compare the attendants on your own ministry at St. Patrick's who worship God at the Brick Church, or at La Fayette Place, or at University Place, or on the Fifth Avenue. How wide the difference intellectually, socially, morally! And why is it that papal countries and communities thus suffer, and so sadly suffer, when contrasted with other communities where there is an unshackled conscience and an open Bible? There must be some general law or cause in operation to produce results so uniform. What is that law or cause? Sir, it is the influence of that system of religion which you are seeking with so much zeal and industry to extend. The traveler in Europe need not be told when he crosses the lines that separate papal from Protestant states; the obvious marks of higher civilization declare the transition with almost as much plainness as would a broad river or a chain of mountains. Popery, with infallible certainty, degrades man. Do you ask how? In this wise:

It takes from him the Bible, the revealed will of God, with all its clear light, with all its high motives to excite the soul to high and holy action, and without which neither civilization nor religion can be long maintained. Papal countries are countries without the Bible. I myself searched Rome and Naples in vain to find one.

It withholds from the people all right moral instruction; it suppresses the preaching of the gospel, and substitutes for it the dumb show of the Mass. The Apostles turned the world upside down by preaching, but in papal countries there is generally no preaching. I never heard a sermon in a Catholic Church in Ireland. I venture the assertion that there are multitudes of Catholic churches in Catholic countries where a sermon would be as great a rarity as would be the saying of mass in a Scottish kirk! And is it not one of the seven wonders of the day that the present Pope, the pretended successor of the warm-hearted preacher, Peter, has preached a sermon, the first preached by a pope in three hundred years! Could Peter return to Rome, unless his long absence from the body has cooled his generous but impetuous spirit, I am afraid he would treat his pretended successors as roughly as he once did Malchus.

It withholds from the people the benign influences of Christianity, the great element in the development of civilization. It withholds the Bible, the sermon; it has instituted a worship which wants nothing of heathenism but the name. That worship is performed in a language now unspoken by any living people. It excludes all reading from the people but such as the priest permits. Acting on the principle that ignorance is the mother of devotion, it erects no schools for the instruction of the common mind; it substitutes the feast-day for the Sabbath, the saints and the Virgin Mary for the Savior, confession and penances for faith in Christ, and reverence for places, unmeaning rites, relics, for the fear of God. Sir, I say with deep sorrow, Popery is not Christianity.* It is a fearful perversion of the religion of God; and for the evidence of these assertions I again point you to its influence upon the people where there is nothing to counteract it. It has degraded the once noble Castilian until there is now none so mean as to do him reverence; Italy, once the seat of empire, it has reduced to feebleness; and the once invincible Italian, who carried the eagles of his country to the extremes of the world, to an ignoble slave, and it has rendered our noble-hearted, noble-minded, impulsive countrymen the hewers of wood and the drawers of water in all the countries to which they emigrate. The degradation of Ireland, which has made it a by-word, I charge upon popery. If the priests of Ireland would give the quarter of what they receive for praying souls out of Purgatory, or all they expend on whisky or at the card-table, to the sustaining of common schools among the people, there might be three or more such schools sustained in every parish in that bleeding, famishing, yet noble country, and its sons would have an opportunity of rising to that position to which their native wit, eloquence, and genius entitle them.

These, sir, are, in brief, my reasons for asserting that the effect of your religion is to make the masses of your people superstitious. They have no intelligent views of God. They know nothing about the plan of salvation. Sacraments and ceremonies exert an undefined, mysterious influence. The priest exerts a ghostly, fearful power, before which the ignorant believer slavishly crouches, and of which he stands far more in awe than he does of the God who made him.

And the very causes which render the masses superstitious operate in an opposite direction upon the intelligent, and drive them into infidelity. They reason about your doctrines as the Earl of Mulgrave is said to have done with a priest who was sent to him by James II. of England, to convert him to popery. "Sir," said he, "I have convinced myself by much reflection that God made man, but I can not believe that man can make God." How can you meet such a withering rebuke?

My dear sir, the days of popery are numbered. The Bible is against it; civilization is against it; the mind of the world against it. Good people pray for its downfall as earnestly as they do for that of Mohammedanism. It may live through centuries yet to come, but it will be as Judaism now lives, or as paganism lived in many dark corners of the Roman world long after its conversion to the Christian faith. But my own fear is that the papal world, both as to its mind and its masses, will become suddenly infidel, as in France, and then pour down its legions upon the Church of God, to blot it out of existence. The Romish Church is one of the "gates of hell" which has poured forth armies of the aliens in opposition to the Church of Christ, but it has never, nor will it ever prevail against it.

Israel's Restoration.

Not only the solemn statements of the word of God, but the simple and significant facts of history also furnish ground enough upon which to infer that Israel is yet to be restored to that land where Abraham lived and where the Savior died.

Look at the wonderful race! For nearly two thousand years, scattered all over the face of the earth, oppressed, despised, persecuted, unmercifully butchered; yet still existing, as distinct in manners, feelings, and hopes, as when Moses was their leader and Aaron was their priest. Since God shook them out of their ancient dwelling-places, nations, thrones, kingdoms, have risen, flourished, fallen, and lost their proud subjects in the ever-varying stream of human affairs; but Israel still stands apart, unshaken by earth's mutations, with the accents of David and Isaiah still upon their lips, and still looking for the promised Shiloh to take them back in triumph to their father-land. The Christian church herself, glorious as she is in her list of martyrs and attainments of grace and truth, has, since then, been depressed, diminished, enfeebled, by violence and defections which she has found it hard to survive; but the house of Jacob with all their wrongs and spoliations have only strengthened with their trials, whilst all the bitterness of their great cup of sorrow has never made them forget that they were Hebrews, or loosened the tenacity with which they cling to God's peculiar covenant unto them. Kings have issued severe edicts and commissioned bloody executions against them, and the seditious and spiteful multitudes have afflicted them with outrages still more violent and tragical. Prisons and people, civilized and savage, Pagans, Mahometans, and professing Christians, disagreeing in so many things, have more than once made common cause for their extermination. But still they live and thrive. Though for nearly twenty centuries without a temple, prophet, country, or home, they still bear the same marks which characterized them before Vespasian set foot on their sacred land or Titus invested their loved Jerusalem.

Look, again, at their holy city. Captured, ravaged, burnt, razed to the foundation, dispeopled, its deported citizens sold into slavery and forbidden by severest penalties to visit their native seats; yet, even in its mournful desolations, it stands forth a thing to itself, and altogether distinguished from all other ruins. Who now weeps over the fall of Troy? What people pays pilgrimages of devotion to the ruin-piles of mighty Nineveh or Babylon? These great monuments of human pride and glory sleep their last sleep, and no tear falls upon their unhonored graves. But Jerusalem, even in her ashes, is still dear to the hearts of millions, and the mere mention of that name awakens pangs of mingled grief and hope as deep as those that weighed upon her captive sons when they mourned under the willows by Babel's waters. Beautifully has it been said, that ever and anon, and from all the winds of heaven, Zion's exiled children come to visit her, and with eyes weeping sore, bewail her widowhood. No city was ever honored thus. None else thus receives pilgrimages from the fiftieth generation of its outcast population. None but this, after centuries of such dispersion, could, at the first call, gather beneath its wings the whole of its wide wandering family. None but this has possessed a spell sufficient to keep its people still distinct, even in remotest regions, and in the face of the mightiest inducements. And none but itself can now be re-peopled with precisely the same race which left it nearly two thousand years ago.

Now, what mean these anomalous, we might say, miraculous facts? Why are the Jewish people still distinct, and Jerusalem's walls still dear as ever? Meet a Jew where you will, he is a mere wanderer or sojourner, in a position to move at the shortest warning. Scattered over all lands beneath the sun, he has never taken permanent root in any. And of all that have ever tried to fix themselves in the Holy Land,—Romans and Persians, Saracens and Turks, Egyptian Caliphs and Latin Christians, Mamelukes and Ottomans,—none have ever been able to gain a permanent foothold in it. Why is all this? Men of political science may try their skill at explanation; but after all the problems will reduce itself to this: that God has his own settled purpose with this people and this place, holding the one in reserve for the other until each shall be forever satisfied with its own. Here history is prophecy. And if all the holy seers were silent, the very stones themselves cry out for Israel's restoration. The rocks of Palestine will have no lord but Jacob.

We are, therefore, prepared to adopt the statements of David N. Lord, a very profound and able expositor of Sacred prophecy, that "those who assent to the true laws of language and symbols will no more deny or doubt that the prophecies teach that the Israelites are to be restored, than those who assent to the definitions and axioms of geometry will deny the demonstrations that are founded on them.

There is not a proposition in the whole circle of human knowledge of more perfect certainty than that God has revealed the purpose of re-gathering that scattered nation, establishing them as his chosen people, and reappointing a temple-worship at Jerusalem that is to embrace some of the ancient rites. It is not merely certain, but it is taught with a frequency, an emphasis and an amplitude, and invested with a dignity and grandeur that are proportionable to the vastness and wonderfulness of the measure in the great scheme of his administration over the world."

The accompaniments and great results of this final restoration of the Jewish people are so wonderful and miraculous, that it is hardly possible for us to form a proper conception of them.

Not many years from this present time, perhaps the whole story will be told. One thing is certain, that Israel's restoration is not for Israel alone, but for the whole world. It is one of those means, in the wonderful arrangements of God, for letting forth his salvation upon all the inhabitants of the earth. It is in the seed of Abraham that all nations shall be blessed. Israel's restoration shall be the world's resurrection. In the language of Hamilton, "The moment the veil is rent from Israel's eyes, the veil will be rent from a thousand prophecies; and, read in the light of restored and regenerated Judah, the word of God will sparkle with unwonted coruscations, and, like deep-colored gems that look dusty in cloud light, many of its dark sayings will brighten up into its divinest truths when beams break forth from Salem."

The End of Bonaparti sm.

The death of Napoleon-Eugene-Louis-Jean-Joseph, ex-prince Imperial of France, and only son of the late Emperor, had some peculiar features about it. In the British operations against the Zulus in which he was engaged, he had been sent forward with a reconnoitering party, consisting of a lieutenant, six privates, and a friendly Zulu; the small body had just dismounted when they were surprised by a volley from a party of Zulus ambushed in the long grass. The lieutenant and four of his men mounted their horses and escaped, leaving the prince behind them. The prince failed to mount and took to his heels, but the Zulus, who had not shot him in the volley of surprise, fell upon him with those javelins or spears called assegais which they use in war, killed him and two of the privates, and made sure of his death by thrusting their weapons into his body seventeen or eighteen times. His body was not recovered till the next day, when it was found that the Zulus had stripped off his uniform, but had left around his neck the locket and reliquary which his mother placed there before his departure from England. It will be a comfort to his mother that his body was recovered. Had the Zulus known who their victim was, King Cetywayo or Ketchwayo would have been put in position to obtain an immense ransom. What would have been the result of the surprise if the fugitive British lieutenant and the four privates who accompanied him in his flight had stood by the prince to the last we cannot tell, but they would at least have deserved honors that cannot now be awarded to them.

This sudden death virtually puts an end to imperialism in France, and in so far considerably simplifies French politics. It comes as an additional guarantee that republican institutions in France will be permanent. The natural head of the house of Bonaparte is now prince Napoleon-Jerome, commonly called Plon-Plon, cousin of the late Emperor, and one of the most unpopular men in France. He is all the less likely to become the figure-head of a new imperialist party, as he has always professed to be a Republican in his ideas and sentiments. True, he has a son, Prince Napoleon Victor, seventeen years old, who, by his mother's side, is the grandson of the late Victor Emanuel, and consequently cousin to the present king of Italy. But the boy is utterly unknown to the mass of French people, and his legal claims upon the imperial inheritance must necessarily appear slender, even to the most devoted adepts of the imperial regime. He is merely a grandson of the youngest brother of the first Napoleon; consequently unless he has in him the stuff of the Usurper who restored the imperial throne in 1851, he will have little chance to find men willing to do for him the political fighting indispensable as a preliminary to all similar changes in the government of a country.

It is generally believed that the head of the house of Bonaparte was prematurely born on a piece of tapestry representing the events of the Iliad, and Homeric indeed appears the history of this family. There was unquestionably a great amount of humbug and fraud in the doings of the individual members of the house, but taken as a whole, the family has certainly done and seen more in the hundred and ten years of its existence than any other house on the face of the globe. It was in August, 1769, that the first Napoleon was born in an obscure Corsican cottage. He had not reached his thirtieth year when his name became the terror of all Europe, and his deeds, his laws, and the tradition of his ideas have ever since, one way or other, ruled the whole of the old Continent.

The death of the heir apparent of the two Napoleons has something peculiarly unhappy about it. The Duke of Reichstadt, son of Napoleon I., died an exile at Schonbrunn, when scarcely twenty-one years old. The son of Napoleon III. is killed by savages at the age of twenty-three, and nearly one-half of his life was spent under the ban of the nation, the destinies of which he was expected to mould.

While it is natural that there should be widespread regret over the death of the young prince and sympathy with his bereaved mother, it has to be conceded that France is not likely to lose much, either by the disappearance of the Imperialist party in the legislature and in journalism, or by the reduction of the number of her monarchical pretenders from three to two. The Comte de Chambord and the Comte de Paris ceased to be dangerous to the republic five years ago. They are not likely to derive much fresh strength from the death of their young competitor.

Ancient Memphis.

A traveler in the East gives the following interesting account of his visit to the remains of ancient Memphis, founded by the first known Egyptian king—Menes. "But what did we see of this wonderful city? Only a succession of mounds," says the writer; "a few pieces of ancient statues; and far down below the present level, with its face to the water, a magnificent figure of a woman in Egyptian dress, with noble features and finely-moulded form, almost perfect, although probably 4,000 years old. As a matter of course, we lingered and looked as long as we thought sentiment required, then pushed on to the remarkable ruins of the cemetery, which was connected with this city, or I should say, magnificent city of the dead—to the very confines of which Memphis extended. It is now but a little more than a vast mountain of sand, being just on the precints of the African desert. There are so many tombs everywhere peeping out, and so large a number of pyramids—eighty-one in all, scattered about—that the interest is keenly excited at once; and at every step some new developments take place. When we remember that old Memphis was seventeen miles in circuit, and was occupied with villas, gardens, and sacred groves, we can realize more than in any other way the wondrousness of the scene which remains to us to-day. After passing the largest pyramid, considered the oldest monument of antiquity in the world, we ascended rapidly to the one little house of refuge standing in the midst of the sand, dismounted and lunched—thus securing a good resting season, and after about an hour, started out with our guides to the two special points of interest here, the Mausoleum of the Sacred Bull, and the tomb of the Priest Tih, the latter built about 3050 B. C. These were uncovered in 1860 by the Egyptian authorities, who, first noticing mounds in the sand bearing the appearance of heads, appointed a commission, and, after a labor of sixteen months, an avenue of sphinxes, 600 feet long, was laid open, the pedestals or statues being perfect in all cases. This was paved and led to the Mausoleum of the Sacred Bull, where these objects of worship had been entombed for several dynasties. There were found three separate chambers of temples, the latest where dates were found — 350 B. C.—being the only one now open. One cannot help feeling an interest in every detail of such a place. There are the long avenues, broad and high, hewn in the solid rock, while all along the sides are deep recesses where are now standing the sarcophagi of the bulls. Twenty-five perfect ones stand in one archive, each weighing forty tons, and many of them fully engraved with figures, representing life, death, and immortality. But it is no more wonderful to see them where they are than to understand how they were put there. One which was presented to the French had been abandoned when moved some little distance, as too heavy to be taken away. They are thirteen feet long, eleven feet high, and seven feet deep, and, although many of the covers have been removed, nothing was found in any of them. Above the sarcophagi are inscriptions relating to their burial, and in whose reign they died. Many tablets were found upon the walls, which were placed there as offerings to the god; these, however, were all allowed to be taken to Paris."

NEWS ITEMS.

LONDON, June 19.—A dispatch from Cape Town, dated June 3, says that Prince Louis Napoleon, accompanied by other officers, went out from Col. Wood's camp to reconnoitre and dismounted in a mealie field, and that the enemy crept upon them and killed the prince. His body was recovered.

LONDON, June 21.—The ex-Empress Eugenie swooned when she heard of her son's death, and remained insensible a long time. She rallied somewhat in the afternoon, but was unable to see anybody. Many distinguished persons called, and many telegrams of condolence were received from all parts of the world.

VIENNA, June 22.—The court will go into mourning for ten days on account of the death of the Prince Imperial of France.

LONDON, June 22.—The English court will go into mourning for the Prince Imperial until July 2.

LONDON, June 23.—A correspondent at Berlin reports that there were 1,730 conflagrations in Russia during the month of May, occasioning a loss of 7,000,000 rubles.

A dispatch from Berlin says Tiflis, a messenger, reports that the Tekke Turcomans have made an incursion into the Persian province of Budshanuet and destroyed 245 places. Russian troops from the Caucasus are arriving at Tchikalar to end the invasion.

A dispatch from Berlin announces that in consequence of the raids in Kuldja Territory by Chinese soldiers, who are ravaging the country with fire and sword, a large Russian expedition will be dispatched against them. As the raiders are likely to receive the support of the Chinese government, war may supervene.

Errata.

In brother J. F. Weather's article in our last, the word "obedient" in the third line, should read "obedient." In section 3, the Greek word that is quoted by Macknight should be ἡμεροχρόνος, and the Latin in the parenthesis (terra incognita) should read "terra incognita."

In the selection "At the after forever and ever," the phrase "enlightenment and the law," should read "enlightenment of the law."

In the article "a Strong Government," published in MISCELLANEOUS of June 18, about the middle of the third column, read "the rulers take counsel" instead of "rulers like counsel," and in the closing words read "the world's grand jubilee," instead of "the world's grand jubilee."

L. M. BURGESS.

Can aught e'er be
More lovely than the loveliness we see,
When soft, bright days,
With scented air, and flowers and grasses, praise
With loveliness
The one who made them but to bloom and bless
And raise to Him the hearts that seeing, feel
How nature's God doth His dear self reveal?

Oh, fair is earth!
Filled with its secret mystery of birth.
Each blooming flower
A wondrous text for many a precious hour;
No grain of sand
But speaks a sermon wonderful and grand,
And sunset hour and morning's radiant gleam
All for His glory furnish forth a theme.

The time will come
When all this loveliness of bud and bloom
Fair as a dream—
So fair it seems as if it could but seem
Not real be—
Will labor grow, and sin and sorrow flee
Before the coming Presence that will shine
And make what now is beautiful, divine.

Yes, earth is fair;
But, oh, what MAY it be when grief and care
Have fled away,
When tears no more shall dim the smiling day,
And when our light
Succeeds the sun by day, the morn by night,
With its effulgence—ah, too short for praise
Will be our long eternity of days.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I have long felt a lurking uneasiness on account of seeming to do little by tongue or pen in the cause of Christ, but there is a sense in which the silence is most unwilling. Gladly would I write or preach, if the way were open, as I heartily wish it was. If I would renounce my faith, there would be opportunities and invitations. Let no one think an enforced reticence easily borne. It is one of the bitterest trials.

Samuel Burns, a converted landlord, and an evangelist, from Massachusetts, has been preaching in this region. Being Orthodox in faith, he finds pretty ready admission to the pulpits of churches. In one respect, he is worthy of high commendation. Never have I seen a man of greater apparent earnestness. The amount of labor he performs, is wonderful. There are eccentricities of manner and speech to which many would object, but his intentions seem honest and upright to win men to Jesus, and, notwithstanding ignorance on some points of Scripture doctrine, his devotion, and activity, and wonderful earnestness are a reproof to many, and his open and fearless rebuke of sins that are seldom or weakly reproved by preachers in general, is entitled to respect and approbation. I have sometimes thought, if those who are more enlightened, will be less earnest, then the Lord may choose less enlightened and more earnest instruments to do a certain work, of saving men, though it be barely salvation, like seizing some one drowning, by the hair of the head. I have thought how sloth is displeasing to God, and how he honors and blesses an intrepid and almost unearthly zeal like that of this man, in spite of some irregularities or peculiarities, which a so-called cultivated taste, or even sober judgment might be inclined to disallow. But men are not alike. I could not do such a work as Burns is doing. I would not follow his methods. But I honor his indefatigable zeal, and many really good and attractive qualities, that cannot be denied or overlooked. He is out and out an immersionist.

An esteemed friend has called my attention to the late treaty of England with Afghanistan, late in May, as a probable prophetic event, and as prophetically coincident with an 1878.4, date of the Pyramid Grand Gallery. This is possible, but, nevertheless, experience teaches caution. In respect both to the date itself, and the event selected to correspond with it, it may be best to be aware of too great positiveness. It is true that events of ordinarily third-rate importance may, in the wisdom of God, have vast secret and real significance, but, for one, I am inclined to think more and speak less—to wait and watch—to beware of hurried conclusions, while, at the same time, in some degree, appreciating the great gravity of probably impending events. If the Pyramid speaks truly, we are rushing to a crisis in mundane things—and may the Lord be our guide and defence in whatever exigency.

I quote the following from the Paris correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune, which may be, perhaps, taken with allowance, though the restoration of the empire may, nevertheless, be imminent: "Lord Beaconsfield, not satisfied, I heard in the course of the same morning from another political man of eminence who is a member of the government, with trying to edge the French out of Egypt, tries to set France and Germany by the ears, and to foment intrigues here and at Berlin, the object of which is to restore the empire, and to set up the eldest son of Prince Napoleon as Emperor." This is a new candidate for the emperorship, so far as I know. There are many who, without prediction, cherish expectation, and the time may soon come when events will justify or vindicate the witness-bearing of other days; but, as the case now stands, let God speak rather than man.

I hope it will not be taken for a spirit of childish weakness, if we conclude that these are days with some, of sore temptation. And still are we in the green tree? Then what will be the dry? If the perplexities that burden steady-going souls and make them sad, are but a faint prelude of trials to come, then what strengthening every one needs in God! For one, luxury, splendor, preparation to stay on earth, (the earth as it is,)—nay, even the bulk of the conveniences of modern civilization are not much to me. I live on the edge of earthly uncertainty all the time. Having food and raiment, ought we not to be content? Very simple things satisfy me. But my heart and my soul crieth out for God.

By way of postscript, let me say, that I have copies of pamphlets on the Great Pyramid, and original hymns published awhile ago. Should any wish, I will send them very cheaply—three for twenty-five cents, or at ten cents each—and I will be glad to forward the entire residue in my possession. A postal card of explanation will also be sent with every enclosure by mail.

I would be glad to see, in plain language, and in the form of simple, solid argument, the whole Scripture disproof of the resurrection of the wicked. I am hindered by insuperable difficulties from understanding that they never rise. I am, as yet, convinced only in a small degree, but wait for the conclusive evidence. The evidence is the desideratum, the sine qua non. An honest man has no prejudice which should not yield to proof. As to 1 Cor. xv. 22, so far so good. Meanwhile, amid all discussions of doctrine, we need glad, clean, cheerfully obedient hearts, and God in us, by word and spirit with blessed power.

"Ye Must be Born Again."

In treating this, as all other Scripture subjects, great care should be taken, not only in making the Bible its own expositor, but also in adhering to the definition of words. It will not do to adopt the opinions of the "fathers," either catholic or protestant, unsubstantiated by Scripture, for grevious errors had crept into the church in the apostles' days; some affirming that the dead would never rise, and others that the resurrection was already past. 1 Cor. xv. 12; 2 Tim. ii. 18. Our text implies two things:

1. That one birth had already occurred.

2. That in order to an inheritance in the kingdom of God another must take place.

Now the question arises what does the word "born" mean? Webster defines it, "brought forth as an animal, brought forth into life." How did Nicodemus understand it eighteen hundred years ago? Hear him: "How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born?" Nicodemus very evidently understood that the birth which he had experienced, was the means by which he obtained natural life. The second birth, or the means by which it was to be accomplished, he certainly did not understand. Therefore the Master answered, "Except a man be born of water, and the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh, is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit, is spirit." John iii. 5, 6.

From the foregoing language we learn that to be born of water is to be brought into fleshly or natural life, and to be born of the spirit is to be brought into eternal or spiritual life. There is no third birth alluded to by the Savior. He recognized the fact that Nicodemus had been once born, but, affirms "ye must be born again." Again means once more, or, another time. To affirm that Nicodemus was not baptized at the time of his conversation with the Master, because he was a Pharisee, is simple assumption. "For many Pharisees came to John's baptism." Matt. iii. 7. And had the Lord urged upon him the necessity of baptism, calling it a birth by water, he (the Lord) did not use the correct language. Had water birth and spirit birth been both future, he should have said "ye must be born again" (once more) and again (once more), making two births yet future.

Taking the position that baptism is water birth, we are driven to this conclusion, for no person doubts the necessity of spirit birth, in order to an inheritance in the kingdom of God. Nicodemus being "a master in Israel," understood full well the promises made unto the fathers; that Messiah's kingdom was to be an everlasting kingdom; he evidently did not understand that spirit birth was necessary in order to an inheritance in that kingdom. Therefore the Anointed explained to him that "as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life." Hence, the necessity for another birth. No spirit birth, no eternal life—no eternal life, no inheritance in the kingdom.

But it has been said it would have been useless in the Christ to have told Nicodemus that it was necessary to have natural birth in order to gain an inheritance in the kingdom. No matter how unimportant the telling, the importance of the fact of a first, or natural birth, looms up before us in all its grandeur and significance. We never could be born again, or made heirs of that immortal, incorruptible inheritance without it, because if we had neither life nor consciousness we never could be reached by the gospel message. But that heard, and patiently and persistently obeyed, unfolds to us the means by which we may be born again. This being the case, every person can see that the first, or natural birth, is just as necessary to our inheriting the kingdom, as the second, or spirit birth.

Paul, in writing to the Corinthian church recognizes the necessity of the two births and says: "Howbeit, that was not first which was spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual. As the earthy, such they also that are earthy; and as the heavenly, such they also that are heavenly. And as we—believers—have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. xv. 46, 48, 49, 50. Thus coroborating the words of the Master himself when he said, "ye must be born again."

There can be no birth without a previous begettal. And as in the natural so it is in the spiritual—proof, "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet not many fathers, for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." "Being born-begotten is evidently the sense here—again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God that liveth and abideth forever." "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures." "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness, is born—begotten—of him." 1 Cor. iv. 15; 1 Pet. i. 23; James i. 18; 1 John ii. 9. Many more texts might be quoted, but these must suffice. From the foregoing Scriptures we learn, that we are begotten of the spirit when we believe the gospel and yield the obedience of faith. Then if we are nurtured by the spirit—"the sincere milk of the word," 1 Pet. ii. 2, —and walk in the spirit, not fulfilling the desires of the flesh, it will eventually result in our spiritual birth. But if we turn again to the weak and beggarly elements of the world, abortion will surely follow.

As there are characteristics peculiar to the first birth, so there are to the second. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither goeth, so is every one that is born of the spirit." The Savior after his resurrection, demonstrated to his disciples how this could be. "And their eyes were opened and they knew him, and he vanished out of their sight." "And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and said peace be unto you." "Then the same day at even being the first of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear; of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst and said peace be unto you." "And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them; then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst and said, peace be unto you." Luke xxiv. 31, 36; John xx. 19, 26.

I am aware that some of our highly esteemed brethren, in their anxiety to prove that spirit bodies are substantial, affirm, that the risen Lord opened the door of the room where the disciples were assembled, in order to gain an entrance. Whether He opened the door or not, the record does not state, nor will we dare conjecture. It is sufficient for us to know; that He came and went, the disciples knew not how. If they knew not who were present, how can we tell? He came and went without their knowing how. This is the simple record. This our faith grasps. To this blissful condition Isaiah refers when he says, "But they that wait on the Lord shall renew (or change margin) their strength; (from mortal to immortal) they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint," xl. 31. Paul also exultingly exclaims: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed!—born again. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52.

Who can believe that it will be necessary for the graves of the sleeping saints to be uncovered in order for them to rise? No! no! In that day we will triumph gloriously, not only over our present corrupt natures, but also over the natural laws that confined us, in earth and sea. Then death will be swallowed up in victory, complete victory! "And mortality swallowed up of life." "And our vile bodies will be fashioned like unto His glorious body." And though we will be real, substantial, immortal beings, with capabilities of which we now have but very faint conception; we will not be subject to, nor confined by natural laws. Oh glorious theme! grand beyond our most vivid conceptions. "But thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

In earnestly believing the above to be the true teachings of the Word, we do not ignore the importance of baptism. No! no. We accept the teachings of the Word on this subject also. And believe it to be "for the remission of sins," Acts ii. 38. A burial with Christ into death. A symbol of our resurrection in His likeness. An outward evidence of the inward faith that we have in Him, our once crucified but now risen Head. Believing that as he rose triumphant over death, so we being "buried with Him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who hath raised him from the dead," Rom. vi. 3-5, Col. ii. 12. We believe this is the mode by which we become incorporated into the body of Christ. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ," Gal. iii. 27.

Bro. Jonah Pierce in his pamphlet "The New Birth," page eight, under the heading "Born of water" says the above quotations—Rom. viii. 15, 17, Gal. iv. 1-8, give the how men and women become heirs with the Lord's anointed. First being begotten from above, "gives them the faith of the gospel; and second, being born of water (which is being immersed in water) adopts them into the family of God."

Now I kindly ask Bro. Pierce or any brother endorsing those views. Does spirit begettal produce water birth? Is spirit birth and water birth the same? If not, is there two births to one begettal? And those births in elements so entirely different as spirit and water! If being baptized means being born again, then we are driven to the conclusion that every person who sincerely believes the gospel, and is baptized is born of the Spirit, and is therefore forever free from all the assaults of self, and sin. Is this the case? Alas, the number of fatal abortions we witness forbids us accepting such a theory.

MRS. M. ROCK.

The Wicked One—The Devil.

This subject has been brought to my attention so as to demand notice. To reach it, observe how "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. He that offendeth in one point is guilty of all." The doctrine is, that "the just live by faith"—by believing the word. On the other hand, if we adopt a notion that contravenes, undermines and sets aside "the word of faith," we dishonor its author, and, in principle, subvert all faith. For every primal truth extends its roots and identifies itself more or less with the system of revelation.

All I claim on this subject is, that God's "word is truth." John xvii. 17. Hence, when we read of "the tempter" and the Lord Jesus, the one tempted by him, we have the record of "the temptation." Of course, the doubt and denial of the primal term in this statement carries with it the doubt and denial of all its correlated portions of truth. Then, to deny "the tempter" is to deny the one here tempted, and the temptation itself.

This law of language, in thousands of cases, is absolute. Thus, the Creator, the creature and the creation, are terms that group together related and fundamental portions of all revelation.

The notion that assumes to reduce, "the Devil—the tempter," to a figure of speech, an element of human nature, or "sin in the flesh," is subversive of the entire record. Gen. iii.; Matt. iv.; Mark i.; Luke iv. Nay, more, it presumes to teach (though with subtility) that Adam was made with "the Devil in him!" Furthermore, it turns all the authority of God as "Lawgiver, King and Judge" into a mere farce of moral government! Because then, Adam only acted out his own human nature. He then followed the law of his constitutional being, and, as then, he did not violate the law of God, he was not (on that account) cast out of Eden and subjected to drudgery and death! Hence, it modifies also the record of Adam's creation in "the image of God, very good, and in dominion;" because, on that view, he was subject to "the Devil," anyhow, to begin with!

"We know nothing as we ought to know" on this, but by revelation. It is idle, then, to argue with such who so subvert "the word of faith," because they are not held by it. Others are thus above "baptism," and the second coming and kingdom, as revealed, for the like reason. They are above being "taught of God!" "Hear, O heaven, and give ear, O earth; for the Lord hath spoken." Amen. Let us not be numbered among the rebellious. Isa. i. 2-4.

How can we stand to be judged by "the word" which we openly deny, except to be condemned? John xii. 48, as God has "magnified his word above all (who bear) his name." Psa. cxxxviii. It is not prudent to openly antagonize it.

"Yes, yes! But we have a reason you say, to object to the idea of a Devil!" Now, friend, please notice; that was the precise position taken by the arch deceiver, Gen. iii. 4, 5. He gave a reason and appealed to God to confirm his falsehood and enforce his delusion, and so he took the tempted into his "snare!" 2 Tim. ii. 25, 26; John viii. 44; 2 Cor. xi. 3.

Every theory to throw off "the burden of the word of the Lord" has some show of reason, but they are all alike in principle, and must entail delusion and disaster to all who are taken in and misled by them. Hence, we are charged to write or "speak as the oracles of God." 1 Pet. iv. 11.

DIED.

DOUGHERTY—March 15, 1879, at Stockton, Cal., Hettie Belle, daughter of Laura S. and the late Rolla H. Dougherty, aged two years, six months and six days.

Being the only babe in the family, she was the almost idolized darling of mamma, grandma, aunties and uncle. A child of great intelligence and promise, gentle and affectionate, it was with almost broken hearts that we saw her surrender to the great enemy, death. But we thank God that he gave us one who will raise our loved one, even from his power, and do not sorrow as those who have no hope of a future meeting. Christ blesses them saying, of such is the kingdom of Heaven. Bro. H. Cockaley, whose she called by the endearing name of grandpa, spoke comforting words to the many friends assembled at the funeral. H. C. K.

HOBBS—May 23, 1879, in Randolph, Pa., Mary Angeline Hobbs, wife of T. Hobbs, aged fifty-nine years.

The deceased was a most estimable person in the community, beloved by all her acquaintances, and a firm believer in the kingdom of God and eternal life in Jesus through the resurrection of the dead. Just before her death she quoted the following:

Jesus can make a dying bed,
Feel soft as downy pillows are;
While on his breast I lay my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

The writer spoke to a large audience from Rom. v. xii, showing how death came through Adam and eternal life through Jesus. Bro. Hobbs has the sympathy of many friends, for the loss of so estimable a companion. This is written by his request.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
T. H. DENN.

POETRY.

The Mother at Home and the Father in the Porch of the Pit.

In a home of destitution, made cheerless by an inebriate father, a mother's arms infold, and a mother's tears fall fast upon her dying child. 'Tis midnight, and while darkness and chill have deepened around the maternal watcher, the child instinctively feels that a darker, longer, and more chilly night is just at hand, and the last yearnings of its little loving heart are to imprint the final good night kiss on the cheeks of a father. That father is not with the weeping wife and dying child. To the vestibule of the pit he wended his way, and the rum-seller has drowned out of his soul all thoughts of home, of wife, and the dying boy, till smothered affection makes no response to the little daughter's thrice repeated entreaties at—one—two—three—"Come home." When that father returns it is to look upon a pallid form whose stilled heart is forever unconscious of the good night kiss. The rum-seller has the father's money, and his boy is dead! The verses depict the scene.

"FATHER, COME HOME."

Father, dear father, come home with me now,
The clock in the steeple strikes one:
You said you were coming right home from the shop
As soon as your day's work was done.
Our fire has gone out—our house is all dark—
And mother's been watching since tea,
With poor brother Benny, so sick, in her arms,
And no one to help her but me.

Come home! come home! come home!
Please father, dear father, come home.
Hear the sweet voice of thy child,
Which the night winds repeat as they roam!
Oh, who could resist the most plaintive of prayers?
"Please father, dear father, come home!"

Father, dear father, come home with me now,
The clock in the steeple strikes two;
The night has grown colder, and Benny is worse—
But he has been calling for you.
Indeed, he is worse—ma says he will die,
Perhaps before morning shall dawn;
And this is the message she sent me to bring,
"Come quickly, or he will be gone."

Father, dear father, come home with me now,
The clock in the steeple strikes three;
The home is so lonely—the hours are so long
For poor weeping mother and me.
Yes, we are alone—poor Benny is dead.
He soon must be borne from our sight,
And these were the very last words that he said—
"I want to kiss papa good night."

The Prophetic Chart of Time.

Many shall Search—The Seals Broken in the Last Days—The former Chronological Periods The Signs are Written for us—Some of them in Cipher—the 1260 Days—The Sabbath-keeping Era—The Seven Times of Punishment—The General Convergence—The Political Signs.

Of late years men have begun to search earnestly into the inspired Chart of Time, to ascertain, if possible, the landmarks which may denote the drawing nigh of the "day of God." This is a striking sign, for it is especially implied that though the prophetic book was to be "shut up and sealed to the time of the end," yet that at that time "many shall search therein, and the knowledge thereof shall be increased" (Dan. xii. 4).*

Daniel was told to "shut up the vision, for it shall be for many days" (chap. viii. 26), and to seal it up till "the time of the end," implying that it was not to be revealed till its understanding became necessary as the time drew near.

The revelation, or unfolding of the hidden mystery, is contained in the last book of the Bible, where the book has its seals broken, and its contents published. Why? Because, as St. John said, "it is the last time." And now that the "last days" of that "last time" have begun to dawn, many are searching through the page of the prophetic Word, and the understanding of it is largely increasing. Is not this a sign of the times?

Do we not read that, "as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man?" And how was it then? The world was living without God. busy in its everyday cares and pleasures, its building, and buying, and eating, and marrying,—ignorant of coming evil, though continually warned,—content to get on without God (see the description of those days in Job xxi.), and anxious to banish him from their thoughts while they enjoyed his gifts,—the earth filled with violence and unbelief. Is not all this the case now?

Thus, I think, the observant eyes of those who stand upon their watch-tower to watch, who can from the elevation of God's Word, and therefore from his standpoint, look upon the scene around them, whether in church or world, can discern many and many a symptom of the deepening darkness which is to settle down upon the world; and at the same time many a dawning ray of brightness of that day-spring from on high, for whose rising they watch "more than they that watch for the morning."

FORMER CHRONOLOGICAL PERIODS.

We must not disregard the chronological evidences of the closing in of this dispensation which God has caused to be written for our learning. If they form part of God's written Word, we shall only do well to take heed to them. God has on various occasions, in past dispensations, foretold to his servants the periods and dates of the events that specially concerned them; and attention to those prophecies was most needful for them.

To Noah it was foretold that, after one hundred and twenty years, the deluge was to come. He gave heed, and built the ark. Then, again, he was told that "yet seven days" and the rain should commence, and he entered into the ark.

Four hundred years was the period which God specified to Abraham as the duration of the sojourn of his seed in Egypt; and "when the time of the promise drew nigh, the people grew and multiplied," and into Moses's heart the thoughts of deliverance began to enter.

Seventy years were to be accomplished in the desolation of Jerusalem; and when "Daniel understood the number of years by books," he set his face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer that he would cause his face to shine upon his sanctuary, which was desolate.

Seventy weeks, or sevens of years, were then shown to him as intervening between the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem and the coming of the Messiah. And it was, no doubt, in dependence upon this prophesy that Simeon and Anna "waited for the consolation of Israel," and that many in Jerusalem "looked for redemption."

If God has thus encouraged the hopes and strengthened the faith of his servants in past dispensations, it is not unreasonable to suppose that he has done so in the present. I believe that he has, and that chronological signs have been written down for our learning. We must not disregard them. We may not all agree in our interpretations—it is not probable that we shall entirely—but it is surely our duty to give heed and seek to understand.

Some of these signs are written in cipher—in enigmatical characters. But that is no reason for neglecting them. In days of old there were those who "had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do;" and Job's question is still a deeply important one, "Why, seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not see his days?"

THE 1260 YEARS.

The most prominent of these chronological periods is that of the 1260 years, symbolized in the revelation as 1260 days and 42 months, and in Daniel by the three and a half times, each the equivalent of the other. During this period the fourth great empire, under its last and eighth head, was predicted to rule the kingdoms of Christendom, and persecute the people of God. There is but little diversity of opinion with regard to Rome Papal being thus designated, or with regard to the general epoch when this period commenced.

The assumption of dominant power by the Roman See dates from the opening of the seventh century, when the Emperor Phocas constituted the bishop of Rome universal bishop, and 1260 years from that date bring us to the present epoch. There is probably, however, some indistinctness as to the moment when, in the sight of God, this prophetic period actually commenced, and therefore an equal indistinctness as to its precise termination; and, doubtless, this has been intentional, in order that the people of God might be kept in a watchful frame of expectation, like "servants that wait for their Lord."

But there is a growing belief that we are on the very verge of its close; and it is impossible to view the position which Rome has of late occupied without noticing that the nations of Christendom are weary of her sway, and that the ruling powers, into whose heart God has put it to yield their kingdom to her "until the words of God shall be fulfilled," are now beginning to despoil her and to cast off her yoke (Rev. xvii. 16-18).

THE 6000 YEARS.

Then, again, it is generally believed that the six thousand years of this world's history are on the point of termination, and that the seventh thousand will be the "Sabbath-keeping" of the people of God (Heb. iv. 9, margin). This is no new idea. Jewish rabbis before our Lord's coming, and early Christians after it, alike held this belief; and if "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years" (2 Peter iii. 8), and the time of rest is the Sabbath or seventh day, we seem not to be without some indication in Scripture that this supposition may be correct. Not long ago our Christian poet Cowper wrote:

"Foretold by prophets, and by poets sung,
Whose fire was kindled at the prophet's lamp,
The time of rest, the promised Sabbath comes!
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world."

And if the latest and most received chronology be correct, these six thousand years have indeed almost fulfilled their course, and we may be on the point of being able to say, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

THE 2520 YEARS.

Lastly, it is believed by many that the "seven times" of punishment of the Jews, predicted in Lev. xxvi. 18, 24, 28, are on the point of completion. Taking a "time" as a year of 360 days, this period, in the year-day fulfillment, amounts to 2520 years; and dating their commencement from the time when God pronounced the doom of Jerusalem in the reign of Manasseh (2 Kings xxi. 12-15), and gave the nation to the Assyrians (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11), they will terminate about the present epoch.

There are other prophetic periods predicted. But these are enough, I think, to stir up the hopes of the waiting people of the Lord. If the 1260 years of the great apostasy, the 6,000 years of the present dispensation, and the 2520 years of Israel's rejection, are all converging to a common point, we may well begin to lift up our heads, and to hope that our redemption draweth nigh.

The Political signs of the end are also striking.

The development of constitutional government, foretold by Daniel as to happen in the latter days of the fourth great empire (the Roman), when the iron or monarchical power of the ten kingdoms would be mixed with the miry clay, or with the seed of men, the popular power (Dan. ii. 42, 43), is a prominent feature of the present day. It receives a notable exemplification in the manner in which the despotic house of Austria, and the monarchical nation of Spain, have lately adopted constitutional forms of government. It is "in the days of these kings" (the ten clay-iron kings of the Roman Empire) that "the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed" (Dan. ii. 44).

The wasting away of the Turkish power, symbolized, as many believe, by the drying up of the Euphrates the irruption of the Turkish power, which originated at the Euphrates, being clearly thus designated in Rev. ix. 14-21.† In Rev. xvi. 12, is an event happening under our very eyes.

The political emancipation of the Jews in almost every European state, their exaltation in so many cases to power and position, and the influence which by their wealth they exert upon the politics of the day, may also show that the period of their national degradation is approaching its termination, and that they are being prepared to enact the great part they are destined to take in the last days, when, being brought to acknowledge the crucified Jesus as "King of the Jews," they shall become the missionaries of the nations, and when "the receiving of them" shall be "life from the dead" to the "world."

The signs I have dwelt upon are numerous, and to my mind, and the minds of many, most striking. Moral, chronological, and political, they combine to send forth the cry, "the Lord is at hand." Singly we might not consider them of importance. It is not one swallow that makes summer, nor one falling leaf autumn; and there may have been times when one or another of these signs has been manifested with more or less distinctness. But there never has been a time when, as at the present, the have all been manifested together.

It is this which to me gives to their appearance such significance and weight. Surely it is not without meaning. Surely it is a warning, encouraging voice to God's children, repeating, in clearer and still clearer accents, "Behold, I come quickly;" "Surely I come quickly." May "the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ" (2 Thess. iii. 5). And "seeing that [we] look for such things, [may we] be diligent that [we] may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless" (2 Peter iii. 14).—S. A. Blackwood.

* The following interpretations of this verse are advanced in support of the above:

"Then many will come across it and get much understanding."—Luther's Bible.

"Seal the book to the time of the end, until many are taught, and knowledge is increased."—Septuagint.

"Many will run through it, and then the knowledge will be increased."—De Wette.

The Italian of Diodati, corrected by Guicciardini, and the French of Osterwald both give the same meaning.

The Great Gates of Shalmanesar.

A discovery was made last year in Mesopotamia, by Mr. Hormuzd Rassam of the British Museum, alluded to by our London correspondent of the highest archæological importance, which has not attracted the attention in this country that it deserves. It has added to the Assyrian department of the Museum its greatest treasure. This is the bronze gates of the Shalmanesar III. (B. C. 859-825) placed by him in the temple built to the Assyrian war-god, by King Asurnazirpal (B. C. 885-859.)

The city that was the site of this temple was recovered by the Assyrians in their war with the Babylonians. The reader will find on the map, below the 36th parallel, and a little east of the Tigris (consequently a considerable distance south of the ancient city of Nineveh—not far from the modern Mosul) some mounds and ramparts, now called by the Arab the Mounds of Nimrud. This the site of the ancient Assyrian city of Calch. Nine miles northeast of this spot, near the banks of the Shor Derreh, is the mound of Balawat, known as "the Ruins," and used by the English surveyors as a triangulating station.

There is a little settlement there of Moslems and Christians, and the mound has been used as a place of sepulchre. It was in digging a grave that two fragments of bronze plates, much broken and oxidized, were found by the natives, who attached no value to them, threw them away, and did not look for more. But learning from explorers that such things had a money value, they were regained, and at length found their way to London, where these fragments excited great interest. After patient cleaning and putting in shape, inscriptions were discovered, which represented the payment of tribute to Shalmanesar by the maritime cities of Tyre and Sidon. It was determined to search for the rest of this extraordinary monument. Mr. Rassam went out to Balawat, and last July returned with two of the great brazen gates which have for centuries been buried there.

There is not space here to speak of the process of this discovery, the finding of the remains of the temple and its platform, nor the labor needed to restore the bent, battered, broken and rusted bronze plates. It is enough to say that the plates have been cleaned and arranged so as to give us a knowledge of the wonderful works of art which twenty-seven centuries ago, fresh from the brasier, stood before the temple of the war-god Nergal.

The gates were of massive cedar wood twenty-two feet in height and fifteen feet in breadth. The wooden framework of their doors, posts, styles and all, was covered with rich plates of bronze—presenting to the spectator of these great portals over three hundred square feet of richly worked metal. The bronze contains eighty-five per cent of copper. The decoration of the gates was a series of long plates, two feet wide and eight feet long, laid on horizontally. Each scroll has two lines of sculptures in repousse work, chased with a graving tool. The lines were separated from each other by borders of rosettes, pierced for nails. Each door was decorated with seven of these massive, richly carved plates, making fourteen in all. The sculptures represent the campaign of Shalmanesar III, and the whole must be considered one of the grandest monuments the past has yielded up to us.

The story of Shalmanesar is told here in pictures on bronze exactly as as the exploits of Thotmes III, and Rameses II, are told in pictures cut in stone on the walls of the temples at Karnak and at Ipsamboul. And we infer from the description that the style of illustration is much the same, although the Egyptian pictorial records are some seven centuries elder.

The sculptures on these bronzes, like those on the stone, are simply and perfectly realistic. The story of the king's campaign is told so that the most ignorant could read it. There is depicted the march over plain and mountain, the crossing of rivers by boats or bridges, the life in camp, with its royal quarter, its guards, and the preparation for the evening meal; and to these minute details follow pictures of the great battles. Other plates exhibit the reception of embassies from tributary nations, the erection of monuments, the celebration of victories and of sacrifices. There is shown the surrender of the great Hittite city, Carchemish, on the Euphrates, and as the London Times, (from which this description comes) says, we have a lively picture of the scene that occurred on the banks of that river in the spring of the year B. C. 854. The tribute-bearers advance from the city, headed by a deputation of nobles, and are conducted to the royal presence by Assyrian officials. The reception is in an open space before the city. The captive king, his sons, his wives and daughters, are brought before the conqueror. Beside King Sangara and his family walk two Eunuchs. The Assyrian king is accompanied by a Eunuch who holds over his head a sun umbrella, and he is clad in royal robes and holds in his hand a bow and pair of arrows, the offering and emblem of Sangara's submission. The tribute-bearers are marshalled by Assyrian soldiers, and a brilliant staff of officers, and armor-bearers complete the picture. A part of the tribute is 300 talents of gold, 100 of silver, 300 of copper, the same of iron, 1,000 plates of copper, "a thousand woven, dyed dresses, the robes of his daughters, and every kind of rich present," "precious lapis lazuli," and a thousand sheep and oxen. Sangara had to pay the "cost of the war."

Shalmanesar continued his victorious march to the Orontes and to Aleppo, and took by siege the fortified city of Karkar, and then went on to fight the army of the allies, Benhadad, and Ahab of Israel, and the Syrian rulers of Hamad and Damascus, and a contingent of 1,000 Egyptian soldiers. This enemy numbered about 50,000, and had 1,000 camels, 10,000 tents and 1,500 chariots. The defeat of this host gained the Assyrians much spoil, and laid open to them the rich plain of Phœnecia and the wealth of Tyre and Sidon.

As the conquering army marches we see how the engineers transported it across streams. There is a picture of the constructions of a pontoon bridge. On boats made of skins stretched on twig framework and covered with bitumen (like the tub-boat now seen on the Tigris and Euphrates), are laid roughly trimmed beams of wood. Soldiers carry baskets of earth and pour it on the planks. There pronged grapples retain the pontoons in position. On the bank sits a Eunuch, surrounded by officials, giving directions. In the rear is the camp breaking up to move.

There is a very interesting picture of Tyre, that city in its rocky island surrounded by the sea—"Sea-girt Tyre." The island is rough and rugged with a sloping quay towards the shore. The city is surrounded by a wall, and has five towers, with buttresses and serrated battlements, and two broad arched gateways. Between the island and the mainland ships are bearing the tribute of the city. The scene is very animated with crowds of people, sailors and Tyrean nobles. The vessels have high prows and sterns, like Venetian gondolas, both decorated with a ram's head. The goods are piled in the middle, and a rower stands at each end, propelling the boat with a curved oar. As the boat nears the shore, two men in short kirtles rush into the surf, throw a rope over the prow and tow the boat ashore, while porters bear to land the bales of cloth, ingots of silver, bars of tin and other merchandise. In the procession of Tyrean vassals bearing tribute to Shalmanesar are two carrying bowls probably containing gold dust or precious stones, and two bearing large trays, on which are ingots of silver; these are followed by others carrying huge brazen cauldrons—a vessel much valued in Homer's time.

This picture adds much to our knowledge of the Phœnicians. The Tyrians represented have a decided Jewish cast of face, and they have on their heads the loose woven pointed cap worn to-day by the sailors of the Mediterranean.

A second series of bas-reliefs represents the wars of Shalmanesar with the Armenians, including the siege of Arne. The camp scenes are so fully depicted that we can reconstruct the Assyrian as we can the Roman camp. It was divided into four quarters; the royal, for the king and chief officers; the sacred, for the altars and shrines; the camp of the charioteers and horses; and the commissariat department. In one picture are seen thousands of loaves of bread stacked up ready for the soldiers' return from battle; soldiers are driving in the spoil from the country, some are grinding corn with a hand-mill, some are cooking, others are mixing dough.

Those who have seen those remarkable bronzes infer that the civilization of the people who made them, and who did the deeds they record, were a cultivated people, and could have been but little, if any, behind the later Greek and Roman peoples. On one scroll representing the seige of a strong-walled Armenian town, with a citadel within, the Armenians depicted are most hardy and stubborn fighters. Clad in short tunics to the knee, fastened by a girdle, armed only with a long lance and small buckler, and wearing a crested helmet, these are almost exact pictures of Greek warriors, and the pictures might be taken for Greek art. Indeed, the plate might be taken for one of the cycles of the shield of Achilles. This resemblance may open a new chapter in Homeric art.

Eliot's Indian Bible.

A copy of this work was sold at the late sale of the Brinley Library, and as it is a rare work we have no doubt that a few remarks concerning it may prove interesting to our readers.

John Eliot, the "Apostle of the Indians," came to Boston in 1631, and very zealously set about converting the copper-colored aborigines of this country. After writing a grammar of the language of the Massachusetts Indians, he commenced about the year 1650 his great work of translating the whole Bible. By the year 1660 it was so far advanced that the society sent over from London a printer named Marmaduke Johnson to assist in the printing. New types were sent for that particular purpose, and were set by a native Indian. In 1661 the New Testament appeared in a quarto volume of about 150 pages, on good paper

The Old Testament was three years in the press, and the entire Bible appeared in 1663 with the following title: The Holy Bible, containing the Old Testament and the New. Translated into the Indian language, and ordered to be printed by the commissioners of the United Colonies in New England At the Charge and with the Consent of the Corporation in England For the Propagation of the Gospel amongst the Indians in New England. Cambridge: Printed by Samuel Green and Marmaduke Johnson. MDCLXIII.

Then, on another page came the Indian title, as follows: "Mamusse Wunneetupanatamwe UPBIBLUM GOD naneeswe Nukkone Testament kah wonk Wusku Testament. Ne quoshkinumuk nashpe Wuttinneumo Christ noh asoowesit John Eliot. Cambridge: Printenoop nashpe Samuel Green kah Marmaduke Johnson. 1663."

As many as 1,500 were struck off, but it would appear that most of those that have been preserved were sent to England and probably distributed by the society. After the New Testament there was a version of the Psalms in Indian meter, translated by Mr. Eliot from the Bay Psalm Book. This had a heading, but no separate title-page.

To the superintendence of the printing of the second edition of the Bible, Mr. Eliot gave some of the last years of his life. It was begun in 1680, and not completed till the beginning of 1689. The title pages are dated 1680 and 1685. Eliot died in 1690, aged about 86. He received from the society 1800 towards the expense of this edition, but was obliged to eke it out by using a part of his own salary. At a sale in New York in 1870 a copy of this edition, from the library of A. W. Griswold, brought $350. At the Brinley sale Dr. J. Hammond Trumbull, of Hartford—the only man in the wide world who can read it—bought the Marquis of Hastings' copy for $500, and Mr. Leiter bought, at the same figure, the copy which belonged to Grindall Rowson, minister at Mendon, Mass., from 1600 to 1715, who himself was able to preach to the Indians in their own language, and translated for them several religious tracts. He was a son of Secretary Edward Rawson, and the blank leaf preceding the title has the fine autograph of "Grindall Rawson His Indian Bible Given him By his Father 1712."

CARDINAL NEWMAN AND EARL BEACONSFIELD.

On most Saturday afternoons in the last year of the first decade of the present century, two boys, aged respectively nine and five, might have been seen playing in the grounds of Bloomsbury Square, London. The boys, both natives of the Square, offered the most complete contrast to each other in appearance. The younger, whose head was profuse with long, black, glossy ringlets, was a child of rare Jewish type of beauty, and full of life and activity. The other was grave in demeanor, wore his hair close cut, and walked and talked and moved in a way which, in young people, is called "old-fashioned." He was of pure English race and Puritanical family. The names of the children denoted these differences as much as their appearance. The one was Benjamin d'Israeli; the other John Newman. Sixty-eight years have passed since then, and much has happened in the meantime, but nothing more wonderful than that the handsome little Jew boy should become a Christian and Prime Minister of Protestant England, and the Puritan lad a Catholic and a cardinal of the Holy Roman Church.

WHEN AMERICA WAS NAMED.

The Lenox Library, in this city, is very rich in old books, many of them relating to the discovery of America. Among these is the "Cosmographiæ Introductio" of Hylacomylus, printed in 1507, in which the name of America was first suggested for this continent. "Hylacomylus" was the Hellenized form of the name of Martin Waltzmüller, a professor in the gymnasium of St. Dié, in Lorraine. In this "Cosmographiæ Introductio," on the fifteenth leaf, appears the suggestion which named the continent, of which the following is a translation: "But now that those regions have been more extensively described and another fourth part has been discovered by Americus (as will appear in the sequel) I do not see why it should not be named America, that is the land of Americus, after its discoverer, Americus; a man of sagacious mind, since both Europe and Asia took their names from women." The popularity of this early geography led to the immediate adoption of its author's suggestion, and the new continent was called America by other writers.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

SELECTIONS.

[New York Observer.]

The Kirwan Letters To the Right Rev. John Hughes, Bishop of New York.

LETTER VI.

Popery has Degraded Ireland—Evidences of its Degradation—Absenteeism—Sub-letting—Tithes—The Priest's cry for Money.

My Dear Sir:—In my last letter, in which I sought to illustrate that the influence of popery is to make the masses superstitious and the intelligent infidels in all the countries where it predominates, I made the following assertion: "It has rendered our noble-hearted, noble-minded, impulsive countrymen the hewers of wood and the drawers of water in all the countries to which they emigrate. The degradation of Ireland, which has made it a by-word, I charge upon popery." To some of the evidences of the truth of these assertions I wish to call your attention in the present letter. Perhaps the present state of feeling in our country toward famine-stricken Ireland may secure for what I shall say to you some attention.*

That Ireland is a degraded country as to its masses, with all our pride of country, neither you nor I can deny. Its general poverty, its pervading ignorance, its mud hovels, its innumerable beggars, its insubordination, are the sad and tangible proofs of its degradation. They lie upon the surface of the country, where every traveler can behold them; and the untraveled American has the evidences of this degradation brought to his own door. He sees it in the perfect ignorance of his Irish servant—in the squallid appearance of the Irish beggar—in the deep-rooted superstition of the Irish papist—in the Irish brawls in low tippling-houses—in the furious passions of an Irish mob—in the large proportion of Irish convicts in our prisons, and of vicious Irish in our places of moral reform. It is, my dear sir, with feelings of regret and shame that I make this statement. My love of country has never forsaken me for an hour. With all its faults, I love Ireland still; and in the lowest depths of their degradation, its children manifest a sensibility and a nobility that would honor those in the highest ranks of civilization, and that evince what they would be under a right development of their social and moral nature. What are the causes of this degradation?

I will not, I cannot omit from the list of causes what is technically called absenteeism; the lordly proprietors of the land living in foreign countries, and expending abroad the hard earnings of their tenants at home. This is one of the grievous curses of Ireland; but even for this papists are to blame, whose frequent murders of landed proprietors induce them to seek safety in foreign countries.

Nor can I omit the system of letting and sub-letting, or renting and sub-renting of the land, by the richer to the less rich, until between the owner and the actual cultivator there may be six or more landlords, each living upon ism an ingredient which multiplies its bitterness by ten. It gives rise to a class of landlords as unpitying as famine.

Nor can I omit the system of tithes for the support of the Established Church of Ireland. An Episcopal priest is placed in every parish in Ireland, and if he has not one single parishioner to wait on his ministrations, he is yet entitled to his tithes from the parish; and these tithes are drawn from the actual cultivators of the soil, the poor tenants; and these tithes are usually let and sub-let, as is the land, and their collection generally falls into the hands of men as rapacious as vultures. Yes, and the parson for whose support these tithes are paid may be a thoroughly worthless man, and may never have made the impress of his foot upon the soil of his parish! Yes, and when the tither calls upon the poor man to pay his tithes for the support of a minister he has never seen, and for the maintenance of a religion which his soul abhors, unless he is ready to pay, his only cow, more than one-half the support of his family, is driven to the market, and there sold for half her value! and if that does not pay, his pig is driven and sold in the same way! Such is the system of tithes in Ireland! I have no language, my dear sir, in which to express my abhorrence of it. The support of such a system, in the way it is there enforced, is a disgrace to the Protestant name; it is a deep, dark, direful stain upon the equity of British legislation; it is a public protest before heaven and earth against the Church that sanctions it, and against the craven-hearted, earthly-minded clergy that can submit to be thus supported! I speak as an American! Out of your own Church, sir, I know of no ecclesiastical nuisance so utterly offensive as that of the Established Church of Ireland! And yet the very upholders of these schemes of robbery—yes, and some of the very individuals that pocket the plunder thus legally and ecclesiastically filched from the poor people, write to us about public faith and honesty, and lecture us upon the subject of slavery as if they were spotless as Gabriel! Of all this I can say, as Talleyrand is reported to have said of a lady that frequently annoyed him: "Madam," said he, "you have but one fault." "Pray, sir," said she, "what is it?" "It is," said he, "that you are perfectly insufferable." Nor have I seen, among the various plans suggested by the crown for the relief of Ireland, a hint at the abolition of this nefarious system of tithes as it bears upon the poor people who till the soil.

Bad, my dear sir, as I think of these causes, and much as they have contributed to the degradation and impoverishing of Ireland, they are but as the dust of the balance when compared with the influences of popery; and that yourself may see this, hear me to the close calmly and without prejudice.

Why this absenteeism, of which we so bitterly and justly complain? I am not about to excuse it; but one of its reasons is the opposition of the priest to the efforts of the land proprietor to elevate his tenantry, and the fierce jealousies which the priest excites in the minds of the people. There is but little absenteeism in Scotland; why is it so general in Ireland? The cause we find in the difference of the religion of the two people. If the parish priest of Ireland was like the parish minister of Scotland, the Marquis of Sligo and the Earl of Westmeath would have as pleasant a home upon their estates as the Duke of Buccleugh or the Marquis of Breadalbane.

Popery does nothing for the education of the people of Ireland. With the wealth of the middling classes under its control, and almost at its beck, where are its schools and its colleges for the education of its people? You send to Ireland for money to establish them here; why erect none there? Connaught, where your Church has complete control, is an almost unbroken mass of ignorance; and Munster is precisely like it; and these are the portions of it where the famine is now raging. Ignorance brutalizes, and sensualizes, and renders men improvident. It places our higher in subjection to our lower nature; and in withholding education from the people popery has degraded Ireland, and wherever its chains are carried by the as a burden than hailed as an accession. Without the high aspirations which knowledge imparts, and without the self-respect which it creates, they are satisfied with being menials where they might be masters, to be carriers of mortar where they might be chief builders on the wall. If the ignorance of Ireland has anything to do with the degradation of Ireland, I charge that ignorance upon popery. Prove it false if you can.

And if absenteeism, and sub-letting, and the tithe system do much to impoverish the people, popery does yet more. It meets them at the cradle, and dogs them to the grave, and beyond it, with its demands for money. When the child is baptized, the priest must have money; when the mother is churched, the priest must have money; when the boy is confirmed, the bishop must have money; when he goes to confession, the priest must have money; when he partakes of the Eucharist, the priest must have money; when visited in sickness, the priest must have money. If he wants a charm against sickness or the witches, he must pay for it money. When he is buried, his friends must pay money. After mass is said over his remains, a plate is placed on the coffin, and the people collected together on the occasion are expected to deposit their contributions on the plate. Thus pounds are collected for burying the poorest of the people. Then the priest pockets the money, and the people take the body to the grave; and then, however good the person, his soul must go to purgatory; and however bad, his soul may have stopped there. And then comes the money for prayers and masses for deliverance from purgatory, which prayers and masses are continued as long as the money continues to be paid. Masses are yet sold for people who died hundreds of years ago. Now, when we remember that never out of the nine millions of the people of Ireland are papists, and of the most bigoted stamp, and that this horse-leech process of collecting money, whose ceaseless cry is "give, give," is in operation in every parish, and that as far as possible, every individual is subjected to it, can we wonder at the poverty and degredation of Ireland? Can we wonder that its noble-hearted, noble-minded people are everywhere hewers of wood and drawers of water? Shame, shame upon your church, that it treats a people so confiding and faithful so basely! Shame, shame upon it, that it does so little to elevate a people that contribute so freely to its support! O popery, thou hast debased my country, thou hast impoverished its people, thou hast enslaved its mind! From the hodman on the ladder, from the digger of the canal, from the hostler in the stable, from the unlettered cook in the kitchen and maid in the parlor, from the rioter in the street, from the culprit at the bar, from the state prisoner in his lonely dungeon, from the victim of a righteous law stepping into eternity from the gallows for a murder committed under the delirium of passion or whisky, I hear a protest against thee as the great cause of the deep degradation of as noble a people as any upon which the sun shines in the circuit of its glorious way!

My dear sir, your religion is for the benefit of the priest, and not that of the people. It will starve the people to fatten the priest. Its object is not to spread light, but darkness; not to advance civilization, but to retard it; not to elevate but depress man, that he may the more readily be brought under your influence; and we have in Ireland a type of what our happy land will be when the priest wields the power here which he wields there.

I own, dear sir, that I have digressed a little from my original object in these letters. But in my next I shall commence with the reasons which on the most mature reflection, yet prevent me from returning to the pale of your church.

With respect, yours,
KIRWAN.

"The Witness of Christ."

"The brightness of the brightest names pales before the radiance of Christ. The scenes at the tomb of Lazarus, at the gate of Nain, in the happy family of Bethany, in the upper room, where he instituted the feast which should forever consecrate his memory, and bequeathed to his disciples the legacy of his love; the scene in the garden of Gethsemane, on the summit of Calvary, and at the sepulchre; the sweet remembrance of the patience with which he bore wrong, the gentleness with which he forgave ill; the thousand acts of benign condescension by which he well earned for himself, from self-righteousness pride and censorious hypocrisy, the name of the 'friend of publicans and sinners;' these, and a hundred things more, which crowd these concise memorials of love and sorrow with such prodigality of beauty and of pathos, will still continue to charm and attract the soul of humanity, and on these the highest genius, as well as the humblest mediocrity, will love to dwell. These things lisping infancy loves to hear on its mother's knees, and over them age, with its gray locks, bends in devoutest reverence. No, before the infidel can prevent the influences of these compositions, he must get rid of the gospels themselves, or he must supplant them by fictions, yet more wonderful! Ah! what bitter irony has involuntarily escaped me! But if the last be impossible, at least the gospels must cease to exist before infidelity can succeed. Yes, before infidels can prevent man from thinking, as they have ever done of Christ, they must blot out the gentle words with which, in the presence of austere hypocrisy, the Savior welcomed that timid guilt that could only express its silent love in an agony of tears; they must blot out the words addressed to the dying penitent, who, softened by the majestic patience of the mighty sufferer, ventured at last the monarch under the veil of sorrow, and cast an imploring glance to be 'remembered by him when he came into his kingdom;' they must blot out the scenes in which the demoniacs sat listening at his feet, and 'in their right mind;' they must blot out the remembrance of the tears which he shed at the grave of Lazarus, not surely for him whom he was about to raise, but in pure sympathy with the sorrows of humanity—for the myriads of desolate mourners, who could not, with Mary, fly to him, and say, 'Lord, if thou hadst been here my mother, brother, sister, had not died;' they must blot out the record of those miracles which charm us, not only as the proof of his mission, and guarantee of the truth of his doctrine, and as they illustrate the benevolence of his character and are types of the spiritual cures his gospel can yet perform; they must blot out the scenes of the sepulchre, where love and veneration lingered, and saw what was never seen before but shall henceforth be seen to the end of time—the tomb itself irradiated with angelic forms, and bright with the presence of him 'who brought life and immortality to light;' they must blot out the scene where deep and grateful love wept so passionately, and found him unbidden at her side, type of ten thousand times ten thousand, who have 'sought the grave,' wept there, and found joy, and consolation in him 'whom though unseen, they loved, they must blot out the discourses in which he took leave of his disciples, the majestic accents of which have filled so many departing souls with patience and with triumph; they must blot out the yet sublimer words in which he declares himself 'the resurrection and the life'—words which have led so many millions more to breathe out their spirits with child-like trust, and to believe as the gate of death closed behind them, that they would see him who is invested with the 'keys of some invisible world,' 'who opens and no man shuts, and shuts and no man opens,' letting in through the portal which leads to immortality the radiance of the skies; they must blot out, they must destroy these and a thousand other such things, before they can prevent him from having the pre-eminence who loved, because he loved us, to call himself the 'Son of Man,' though angels call him the 'Son of God.'

It is in vain to tell men it is an illusion. If it be an illusion, every human Probatum est. At his feet guilty humanity, of diverse races and nations, for eighteen hundred years, has come to pour forth its love and sorrows, and finds there 'the peace which the world can neither give nor take away;' myriads of aching heads and weary hearts have found, and will find repose there, and have invested him with veneration, love and gratitude, which will never, never be paid to any other name than his."

New Earth.

"How could 'the creature'—the world, or any part of it—be said to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, if the whole frame of heaven and earth were to be annihilated (Rom. viii. 21)? The Apostle saith also, that the creature 'waits, with earnest expectation, for this manifestation of the sons of God' (verse 19), which would have no foundation if the whole frame should be reduced to nothing. What joyful expectation can there be in any, of a total ruin? How should the creature be capable of partaking in this glorious liberty of the sons of God? As the world, for the sin of man, lost it first dignity, and was cursed after the fall, and the beauty, bestowed on it by creation defaced, so shall it recover that ancient glory, when he shall be fully restored, by the resurrection, to that dignity he lost by his first sin. As man shall be freed from his corruptibility, to receive that glory which is prepared for him, so shall the creatures be freed from that imperfection or corruptibility, those stains and spots upon the face of them, to receive a new glory suited to their nature, and answerable to the design of God, when the 'glorious liberty' of the saints shall be accomplished. As when (see Mestrezat on Heb. i.) a prince's nuptials are solemnized, the whole country echoes with joy, so the inanimate creatures, when the time of the marriage of the Lamb is come, shall have a delight and pleasure from that renovation. The Apostle sets forth the whole world as a person groaning, and the Scriptures is frequent in such metaphors, as when the creatures are said to 'wait upon God and to be troubled;' the hills are said to 'leap, and the mountains rejoice' (Psalms civ. 27, 29). The creature is said to 'groan,' as the heavens are said 'to declare the glory of God,' passively, naturally, not rationally..... If the creatures be subject to vanity by the sin of man they shall also partake of a happiness by the restoration of man. The earth hath borne thorns and thistles, and venomous beasts; the air hath had its tempest and infectious qualities; the water hath caused its floods and deluges; the creature hath been abased to luxury and intemperance, and been tyrannized over in man, contrary to the end of its creation. 'Tis convenient that some time should be allotted for the creature's attaining its true end, and that it may partake of the peace of man as it hath done of the fruits of his sin pervaded more than grace, and would have had more power to deface, than grace to restore things into their due order. Again, upon that account should the Psalmist exhort the heavens to rejoice, and earth to be glad, when God comes to judge the world with righteousness, if they should be annihilated, and sink forever into nothing? It would seem, saith Dallie—(on Psalm xcvi. 12, 13)—to be an impertinent figure, if the Judge of the world brought them to a total destruction. An entire ruin could not be matter of triumph to creatures who naturally have that instinct or inclination put into them by their Creator, to preserve themselves, and to effect their own preservation. .... Again—'The Lord is to rejoice in his works' (Psalm civ. 31). Since God can rejoice only in goodness, the creature must have that goodness restored to them which God pronounced them to have at their first creation, and which he ordained them for, before he can again rejoice in his works."—Charnock on the Immutability of God.

Plague of the Fourteenth Century.

There was one disease called the black death, the black plague, or the great mortality. The most dreadful visitation of it was one that began in China, spread over Asia, and in the year 1346 entered Europe. Europe was forty years. The black plague spread from the south of Europe to the north, occupying about three years in its passage. In two years it had reached Sweden; in three years it had conquered Russia. The fatal influence came among men ripe to receive it. Europe was full of petty war; citizens were immured in cities, in unwholesome houses overlooking filthy streets, as in beleagued fortresses; for robbers, if not armies, occupied the roads beyond their gates; husbandmen were starving feudal slaves; religion was mainly superstition; ignorance was dense, and morals were debased; little control was set upon the passions. To such men came the pestilence, which was said to have slain thirteen millions of Chinese, to have depopulated India, to have destroyed in Cairo fifteen thousand lives a day. Those were exaggerated statements, but they were credited and terrified the people. Certainly vessels with dead crews drifted about in the Mediterranean, and brought corruption and infection to the shores on which they stranded. In what spirit did the people, superstitious as they were in these old times, meet the calamity? Many committed suicide in frenzy; merchants and rich men seeking to divert the wrath of heaven from themselves, carried their treasure to the churches and the monasteries; where if the monks, fearing to receive infection from it, shut their gates against any such offering, it was desperately thrown to them over their walls. Even sound men, corroded by anxiety, wandered about livid as the dead. Houses quitted by their inhabitants tumbled to ruin. By plague and by the flight of terrified inhabitants, many thousand villages were left absolutely empty, silent as the woods and fields. The Pope, in Avignon, was forced, because all the churchyards were full, to consecrate as a burial place the river Rhone, an interment, if, not in holy ground, at least in holy water. How the dead were carted out for burial in pits, and how the terror of the people coined the fancy that through indecent haste many were hurried out and thrown into those pits while living, every one knows; it was the incident of plague at all times. Italy was reported to have lost half its inhabitants. The Venetians fled to the Island and forsook their city, loosing three men in four; and in Padua, when the plague ceased, two-thirds of the inhabitants were missing. This is the black death, which began towards the close of the year 1348 to ravage England; and of which Antony Wood says extravagantly, that at the close of it scarcely a tenth part of the people of this country remained living.

The Jews.

The dread which the Jews are awakening in Eastern Europe almost equals the dread felt for them in Western Europe six hundred years ago, and is based on the same grounds. They display a talent for accumulation with which Christians cannot compete, and which tends to make of them an ascendant caste. It is gravely asserted in the Roumanian Parliament that the true difficulty in the way of allowing them the equal rights which were secured by the treaty of Berlin, is the certainty entertained by Roumanians and Servians that they would gradually oust the peasantry till they possess the whole land. In Hungary, it is asserted, even in Reuter's telegrams, that they have purchased so many estates as to make an alteration in the Constitution needful, and in Germany literature is full of the success of the Jews in ousting the ancient families. Their remarkable success in politics, and instinct for acquiring pecuniary control of the press, are observed in all free countries, and recently called forth pamphlets, and even books, penetrated with a most energetic hate. Considering that a hundred years ago the Jews were a despised caste, their rise into a dreaded order has been singularly rapid,—too rapid, we imagine, for them to be perfectly safe in their new position. The explanation of their success is, we presume, that their peculiar capacity exactly suits the condition of modern life, and their best defence would be this,—that in the country where they are most perfectly free, France, they are least hated or distrusted. In England, their conduct in reference to Turkey has

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 9, 1879.

ALL papers advocating the personal advent and future reign of Christ are sustained and published with the utmost difficulty. Promptitude on the part of subscribers, and sacrifice on the part of friends who are able, are demanded in behalf of THE RESTITUTION.

WE are still compelled to give considerable attention to matters outside the office. Hope soon to be able to attend to our editorial duties more exclusively. Will try to answer some inquiries soon in regard to the employment of certain words in the original of some passages of Scripture in reply to correspondents.

WILL our correspondents please make their articles shorter. And some change of subjects is desirable. Some topics are becoming completely hackneyed. Readers do not like to have every paper filled with dissertations on the same themes. Let us have something on the Christian life and the qualifications necessary to become heirs of the kingdom. We shall try to make the paper more edifying in this respect hereafter, if we have to do it by making selections.

WE are personally acquainted with Dr. L. M. Willard whose advertisement regarding the cure of Ovarian and Fibroid tumors appears in another part of the paper. In a letter to us he details, at some length, the wonderful results of absorption in effecting a speedy cure in the case of Sir Bussier as well as in another parallel case. Should any of our readers be afflicted in this manner, address him as directed in notice.

A Strong Government.—No. 2.

In our last article, under the above caption, we did not go into the details but simply gave the grand outlines, and but briefly touched upon the essential principles—justice and truth upon which this coming government will be based and carefully administered. We might have further said why this government will be strong, from the fact that it will, in its political aspect, neither be democratic, republican, despotic nor monarchical, but theocratic; hence, under the supervision and immediate direction of God; it will be in this respect after the order and formula of the celestial hierarchy somewhat conforming to the arrangement as given the vision of what is termed Jacob's ladder, recorded in the Book, Gen. viii. Just how many rungs were in this ladder, we are not informed, but doubtless, they are significant, and evince the fact that, in the kingdom there will be degrees or a diversity of positions among those elected to office, even as "one star differeth from another in glory." Hence there will be no vacuum; every rung will be occupied by its proper incumbent. The two sides of this mysterious ladder may denote—in the government of the millennial age of which this vision is supposed to be a type—the two houses—the lower, if you please, and the upper house. The house of commons and the house of lords, as it is in the English government.

I think we venture nothing to say that there will be those in the kingdom as co-rulers with Messiah, that shall be honored with the titles of lord, as well as kings, and nobles, and princes, governors, judges and counsellors. The fact of Messiah being called "King of kings and Lord of lords," leaves no room to question this for a moment. But, that these distinctive appellations are strictly in accordance with prophecy and will be conferred upon those to whom it shall be given, not only as so many marks of honor in the kingdom, but as appropriately defining their several titles in positions in the Messianic cabinet. We have only to consult the Word a few moments in proof of this.

In Psa. xlv. 16, we read, "Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth." In Isa. xxxii. 1, we read, "Behold a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." In Isa. i. 26, we read, speaking of the restoration of Zion, "And I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the beginning," etc. In Jer. xxx. 21, we read, when speaking of the return of Israel and the rebuilding of Jerusalem: "And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governors shall proceed from the midst of them," etc. This accords with the promise made the faithful talent-bearers, which are each assigned by their Lord to rule over just so many cities as they had proved their ability or shown they were competent to do, as exhibited in the proper use of the several talents committed by the Master unto them. Luke xix. This strictly accords also with the promise of our Lord to his apostles, that those who should follow him in his humiliation, that he would elevate them and set them upon thrones in the regeneration or age to come, and invest them with powers to judge, or, rather rule the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix. 28. And we do not suppose that these administrative powers are to be confined to the twelve apostles alone, although they may be appointed to very high and distinguished places above their fellows, not only as deserving marks of their arduous labors in the cause of Christ, and for what they actually suffered for his sake, but because of the fact of their being fully qualified to fill out the duties of the responsible positions to which they are called.

We are not always to confine ourselves to definite numbers where they are mentioned in Scripture. We may safely venture to believe that they mean more, as I think in this case, so that the promise may be as equally applicable to others as well as the apostles; so that others may lose none of their holy ambition nor heavenly aspirations to attain to those seats of honor and power. The ten talent-bearers is another case in proof of an indefiniteness respecting the number, and, instead of strictly ten, one may reasonably suppose that there will be more than ten thousand times ten that shall engage to enter into this business arrangement and contend for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

As to the investment of some of the saved with regal honors with the crown and sceptre, this is obvious and no visionary idea. The very fact of Messiah being styled "King of kings and Lord of lords," as in 1 Tim. vi. 15, this also being the bright inscription in capital letters as seen upon his royal vesture by John in the visions of his future glory, "And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS." Rev. xix. 16. This evidently implies at the time of his reign the existence of both kings and lords, but it is distinctly stated in a brief anthem of praise to Messiah by a certain company of the redeemed, that they have attained to this position of royal endowment conjointly with the powers of a heavenly priesthood, as they are heard to sing this, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen." Rev. i. 5, 6. In Rev. v. 9, 10, the same song is repeated probably by the same company. It is called here a "New song, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." This gives us a key to the object Messiah has in electing this select portion of the redeemed to these regal positions, and to the royal priesthood, that they may exercise them in ruling, not of some distant planet or in other worlds than this, but ruling or reigning "on the earth," associated with him. This agrees with the splendid promise to the overcomers of the church in Thyatira. This promise, of course, is not confined to the heroes of this church alone, but to the whole ecclesiastical body, every member who has so manfully run, who has so diligently labored, who has so overcome the world, the flesh and the devil, as the crowned ones in Thyatira; but bear with me while I shall quote the entire promise; it is so grand; and I will give a portion of the preface to it. "But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, (attending to the woman Jezabel, the embodiment of spiritual whoredom) and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden. But that which ye have already, hold fast till I come. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; even as I received of my Father. And I will give him the morning star." Rev. ii. 24-28. We will add to this the promise to the conquerors in Laodiceans, being more to the point relative to the associated rulers with Messiah in his kingdom: "To him that overcometh will I grant to set with me in my throne, even as I also overcome and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21.

The fact of crowns being awarded to the heroes in the gospel conflict which are so frequently mentioned, renders it obvious that there is a throne connected with it, and hence, also a sceptre as an natural adjunct, and these, together, imply something like a power and place to reign.

In Rev. xxi. 24, we read: "And the nations of them which are saved (or those which are saved out from among the nations) shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor with it." These must be of that class of kings we have here been considering redeemed and washed from their sins, and here found bringing their offerings of homage and adoration to the "great King" at Jerusalem, the seat and center of universal empire; as we conceive the world in the brighter and coming age will be ruled by one grand and mighty confederation of kings, thrones and rulers. The Lord Jesus at the head and highest seat in the government. This is clear, from the echoes of the seventh trumpet: "And the seventh trumpet sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of (or transferred to) our Lord, (or to God the Father) and his Christ; (or his anointed, the Messiah) and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi. 15. They now become a divine confederation under Christ. He does not destroy these kingdoms no more than the four universal monarchies were destroyed, we read of in Dan. ii., but one is lost or swallowed up in the succeeding kingdom; though different rulers and kings take in turn these kingdoms and the government passes into different hands, meets with various changes, and is governed by different principles. So with the kingdoms of this world, when that glorious hour of deliverance comes to the church and to the groaning world, God through Christ, with his immortal retinue of saints and angels, will take to himself his great power and reign; and the kingdoms of this world will pass out of the hands of its present selfish and ungodly rulers (who have ruled in their own interest so long and closed their eyes and ears to the cries of the poor) into the hands of the Lord's Christ and his associates. And these kingdoms will be renovated, reconstructed, and set to rights after the divine order and arrangement that God's will may be done on earth among men as it is done by angels in heaven. Christ will then appoint his own rulers over these kingdoms and territories, and send his ambassadors, potentates and kings to the remotest parts of his dominion, which is an everlasting dominion.

Observe—"Promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south. But God is the judge; (i. e., the supreme ruler,) he putteth down one, and setteth up another. .... All the horns of the wicked (i. e., their power,) will he cut off; but the horns of the righteous shall be exalted." Psa. lxxv. This Psalm is synchronological with the sounding of the seventh trumpet; read it entire; also with Rev. xx., which fits right in this place as though it was made especially for it. We find here, after the great accuser and deceiver of the nations is taken captive and thrown into the abyss, that the vision stretches into the most sublime scenery, bearing a regal aspect. He sees the holy company of martyrs who were beheaded for the word, "for the witness of Jesus and the word of God." He sees them enthroned and judgment is given unto them, and they lived and reigned with Messiah a thousand years.

Although by further extending this vein of thought may interest those who are laboring and living to participate in the glory of the millennial age, yet let it suffice; we return to still further remarks—though briefly so—on the vision of the ladder. That there should be no vacuum in the celestial hierarchy, every spoke in the ladder is occupied and every intervening space between the spokes, as the patriarch saw angels ascending and descending upon it, denoting a constant and continuous communication between heaven and earth, man being at the base or bottom, and the Lord at the top, as the grand centrifugal and centripetal power, and sole supervisor, governing and controlling by his mighty mind the whole complicated and sublime machinery of the new age. But I would dwell no longer here upon this beautiful vision, as some may think that I was trying to stretch out far beyond my reach, and that the exposition given, was far-fetched. I will not claim that it is correct in every particular, but do affirm, at least, that it is a type of some grand and glorious system of things under God that has not yet been introduced into our world as yet. I know some may think to have found its antitype in the gospel dispensation, but this must be a mistake; for this is not an open and manifest ocular dispensation, but one attended with a great deal of mystery leaving room for much conjecture, difference of opinion as regards the question, "What is truth?" And this vision predicts the time when "the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants, the prophets," when the "watchman would see eye to eye," and that is "when the Lord would bring again Zion," or, more literally and properly, "when the Lord would come again to Zion." It foretells a time when there will be an open and visible communication between the upper and lower sanctuary, between heaven and earth; when the world will no longer be burdened, led astray and oppressed with a hireling priesthood, whose sole business is to preach for hire and divine for money: and when men shall be done attempting to give expositions of Scripture, like my poor self and others, but when the word of the Lord shall have free course and be glorified in a correct understanding and hearty recognition of it. It predicts the time when "the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations" shall be removed with the cloud of magnetic death for the living sunshine of celestial glory. Isa. xxv. 6 7.

In conclusion, on this point, it is probable that our Lord had an allusion to this vision when he declared to Nathaniel, "Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." John i. 51. We observe this was something to occur in the future, not then where he stood, nor any intervening time till now, but "hereafter" in the coming age, of open vision, when "the glory of the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall behold it together."

But, to return to the point, from which we have digressed, and for which we set out, namely,—the glory and blessedness of this strong government. As its King will be stronger or higher than Agag,—a famous king of the Amalekites,—so "his kingdom shall be exalted" far above all others in every way, especially in point of excellence and magnificence. Solomon's kingdom, throne, and paraphernalia was a splendid affair, exciting the jealousy, and became the admiration of all the surrounding nations. David, even up to his death, labored industriously under God to have it become such. The house of the Lord—an important adjunct of the kingdom—he was particularly careful to leave nothing undone, and that no expense should be spared; that it should become "exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries." 1 Chron. xxii. 5. And so wide spread was his fame and the grandeur of his kingdom, that the Queen of Sheba, or, as our Lord called her "queen of the south" (Matt. xii. 42,) whose dominions extended over a wide tract of country between the tropic and mountains of Abyssinia, supposed to be a rich country, from a fact we shall subsequently notice; and that she was sovereigness of no mean kingdom, and, perhaps, thought in her heart that there existed none others that exceeded hers in magnificence. She purposed to pay Solomon a visit to see if all was true that she had heard. So she sets out with a "very great company, and camels that bore spices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones; and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart, and the king answered all her questions, etc. And when the Queen of Sheba had seen the wisdom of Solomon, and the house that he had built, and the meat of his table, and the sittings of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their rich apparel; his cup bearers (or butlers) also, and their apparel; and his ascent by which he went up into the house of the Lord; there was no more spirit in her," that is, her heart which had been lifted up heretofore with the thought that the fine arrangement and glory of her own throne could not be exceeded by any on earth, now sank within her, and in comparison to what she saw here she found her kingdom to be but a small affair. "And she said to the king, it was a true report which I heard in mine own land of thine acts and of thy wisdom. Howbeit I believed not their words until I came, and mine eyes have seen it; and behold one half of the greatness, and of thy wisdom was not told me; for thou exceedest the fame that I heard. Happy are thy men, and happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom. Blessed be the Lord thy God which delighteth in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the Lord thy God; because thy God loved Israel, to establish them forever, therefore made he thee king over them to do judgment and justice." She then proceeds to open her coffers and give of the abundance of her wealth expressive of her willingness to become tributary to his throne as many others of the ruling sovereigns gladly did in those days. NEWS ITEMS.

LONDON, July 6.—A correspondent telegraphs from Kapal, Asia, that the Chinese have re-taken Kashgar. A portion of the Mussulman population fled, but many were massacred, and a large body of the Mohammedans are shut up in the fortress. The inhabitants of Kouldja are determined to fly the town if the province is restored to the Chinese by the Russians.

LONDON, July 7.—A dispatch from Rangoon reports the cholera among the British troops at Thayetmo, and several died.

A correspondent with the general headquarters, under date of June 15, says Cetywayo occupies an impregnable position northeast of Ulundi.

LONDON, July 7.—A correspondent at Berlin draws a gloomy picture of the state of Russia, owing to the Nihilists, the failure of the crops, and the ravages of the corn beetle. Fifty thousand rubles have been appropriated to exterminate the beetle.

The prospects of a cessation of the famine in Cashmere, India, are gradually improving. The Spring crops look slightly better. The area of the Autumn sowing exceeds expectations, and the importation of grain is proceeding satisfactorily.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, July 7.—Advices from Hayti say that Port au Prince is in flames. Business is entirely suspended. Whole blocks of buildings are in ashes. The Custom House is closed in consequence of the revolution.

PANAMA, June 28.—The Star and Herald says passengers from the south coast report a battle at Calama and the capture of that point by the allied forces. The Chilian losses are stated to be 1,500 killed.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

He that follows the Lord fully, will find goodness and mercy following him continually.

We spend half our lives in making mistakes, and waste the poor remainder in reflecting how easily we might have avoided them.

There are flowrets down in the valley low,
And over the mountain side,
Which were never praised by a human voice,
Nor by human ever descried.

As the light which illuminates our atmosphere, and gives brightness to our dwellings, and vision to every eye, is from the sun, and is dependent on its rise and motion every day, so we and all our mercies, and all our strength, for every day and hour of our lives, come from God, and are dependent on him.

In the deepest night of trouble, and anxiety, and sorrow, God gives us so much to be thankful for that we need never cease our singing. With all our wisdom, and prudence, and foresight, we need never refuse to take a lesson in gladness and gratitude from the happy bird that sang all night, as if the day were not long enough to tell its joy.

"'Tis sweet to trust my Savior,
To lean on his strong arm,
To have no cause of danger,
Though foes around us alarm.
To go wherever he calls me,
To drink the cup he drained,
To trust whate'er befalls me,
Self lost—but Jesus gained.
—Lida J. Clarkson.

Character alone is immortal. Not what we have but what we are, is enduring. Not that work in which we engage outside of us, but that which we carry on within us, is everlasting. As we pass from earth we shall leave behind our property, our relationships, our positions, and we shall enter that world with but our character that we can call our own. We are making ourselves for eternity. Infinite will be the loss and disgrace if we build after the wrong plan; eternal be the gain and honor if we follow the right one.

Up to the solemn arch my eyes are turning,
And slow I see the white-winged clouds go by;
My faith is strong, and still my heart is yearning,
For I shall see him coming by and by.

God is to be trusted, but not to be tempted.

BE HUMBLE.

If thou art a vessel of gold, and thy brother but of wood, be not high-minded. It is God that maketh thee to differ. The more bounty God shows the more humility he requires. Those mines that are richest are deepest; those stars that are highest are smallest; the goodliest buildings have the lowest foundation. The more God honoreth men, the more they should humble themselves; the more fruit the lower the branches on which it grows. Pride is ever the companion of emptiness.

"Swifter than a weaver's shuttle"
Pass our days in rapid flight;
Soon will come the day unmeasured,
When we'll know no more of night.
There's a little time to labor,
Just a little space to pray,
Then the Master comes in beauty,
And begins that endless day.

BREVITIES.

The steamer Nishni Novgorod is announced to sail from Odessa to the eastern shore of Siberia with 700 convicts gathered from Russian prisons, their destination being the island of Saghalien. The vessel will also carry 50,000 poods of grain, cloth, and other materials for the support of these criminals, in addition to implements, seeds, and, milistones. This new method of deportation is intended to lessen the expense thereof, so enormous hitherto. The steamer, it is hoped, will make the voyage in about sixty days, whereas the overland route takes nearly two years.

Bible Banner: The scene of the Mountain Meadow massacre is now the very picture of desolation. Before the Mormons murdered 131 innocent men, women and children there, in 1857, the Meadows were known far and wide as a paradise in the desert, with an abundance of grass, crystal streams and ever-flowing springs. To-day the grass is gone, the water-courses dried up, and nothing but a dreary waste marks the once beautiful spot. It is said that the earth is also sinking, and the bones which were collected after the massacre, though thrice buried, continue to reappear, while settlers in the vicinity shun the spot as haunted, and say that the winds from the Meadows bring piercing cries for help to their ears.

Leprosy has made its appearance in several parts of the Spanish province of Alicante, and the authorities, alarmed by the number of cases and the mortality, have taken steps to establish a special hospital for lepers. In the province of Valencia 116 cases were reported last year, of which 71 proved fatal; and in this province there has existed for a long time a leper's hospital. Leprosy is known there under two names, the malady of Maures and the malady of St. Lazarus; and it manifests itself under two forms, the tubercular, or leprosy of the Greeks, and the vulgar, or leprosy of the Jews. Cases of recovery are extremely rare. Full statistics respecting it are not to be procured, as its victims often resort to concealment. The notion that leprosy is to be found now only in Asia and Africa is erroneous; it is met with in various countries of Continental Europe.

The Queen of All.

Honor the dear old mother. Time has scattered the snowy flakes on her brow, plowed deep furrows on her cheeks, but is she not sweet and beautiful now? The lips are thin and shrunken, but those are the lips which have kissed many a hot tear from the childish cheeks, and they are the sweetest lips in all the world. The eye is dim, yet it glows with the soft radiance of holy love which can never fade. Ah, yes, she is a dear old mother. The sands of life are nearly run out, but feeble as she is, she will go further and reach down lower for you than any other upon earth. You can not walk into a midnight where she cannot see you; you can not enter a prison whose bars will keep her out; you can never mount a scaffold too high for her to reach that she may kiss and bless you in evidence of her deathless love. When the world shall despise and forsake you, when it leaves you by the wayside to die unnoticed, the dear old mother will gather you in her feeble arms and carry you home and tell you of all your virtues until you almost forget that your soul is disfigured by vices. Love her tenderly and cheer her declining years with holy devotion.

A Child's Faith.

In the Highlands of Scotland there is a mountain gorge twenty feet in width, and two hundred feet in depth. Its perpendicular walls are bare of vegetation, save in the crevices, in which grow numerous wild flowers of rare beauty. Desirous of obtaining specimens of these mountain beauties, some scientific tourists once offered a Highland boy a handsome gift if he would consent to be lowered down by a rope, and would gather a little basket full of them. The boy looked wistfully at the money, for his parents were poor, but when he gazed at the yawning chasm he shuddered, shrank back, and declined. But filial love was strong within him; after another glance at the gift and at the terrible fissure, his heart grew strong, and his eye flashed, and he said, "I will go, if my father will hold the rope." And then, with unshrinking nerves, and heart firmly strong, he suffered his father to put the rope about him, lower him into the wild abyss, and to suspend him there while he filled his basket with coveted flowers. It was a daring deed, but his faith in the strength of his father's arm and the love of his father's heart gave him courage and power to perform it.

Waiting.

ANNA A. STEELE.

Waiting for thy kingdom, Lord,
When all our sorrow shall be o'er;
Waiting for that time to come
When nations shall learn war no more.

Waiting for the morning dawn
Of that bright celestial day,—
Waiting for our Lord's return—
Come, O, Lord, without delay.

Waiting to see that "world to come,"
Waiting thy glorious face to see,
Waiting to hear thy welcome voice
To say—"Well done, come dwell with me."

Here and There.

Here is the sorrow, the sighing,
Here are the clouds and the night,
Here is the sickness, the dying;
There are the life and the light.

Here is the fading, the wasting,
The foe that no watchfully waits;
There are the hills everlasting,
The city with beautiful gates.

Here are the locks growing hoary,
The glass with the vanishing sands;
There are the crown and the glory,
The house that is not made with hands.

Here is the longing, the vision,
The hopes that so swiftly remove;
There is the blessed fruition,
The feast, and the fullness of love.

Here are the heart-strings a-trembling,
And here is the chastening rod;
There are the song and the cymbal,
And there is our Father and God.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I must have THE RESTITUTION as long as I can pay for it, for I think it is the best paper I know of, and the most truthful. It cheers me in my lonely widowhood. I prize its weekly visits more than I can express, and may God put it in the hearts of all our brethren to sustain it till Jesus comes. The prospect truly is encouraging for true followers of Jesus, and while we struggle on in this mortal life, may we have strength to overcome and have an abundant entrance into the kingdom. My prayer is, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

From your unworthy sister in Christ,
HARRIET COVEY.

Omro, Wis.

Editor Restitution: My affairs financially have not been in a very healthy condition for the past year or two, or I assure you I would not be in debt to such a great and noble cause as the one in which you are engaged. I have seen the time when I have taken and sent to others from four to six copies of THE RESTITUTION, and am as willing to do so again; and shall as soon as my means will allow. Our Father knoweth all the secrets, and my prayer is that he will at the resurrection of the just—reward you for your work and labor of love, in so handling the affairs of THE RESTITUTION. You may expect to hear from me shortly, and dear brother, please continue to send me THE RESTITUTION. I have long felt like writing a few lines to THE RESTITUTION office in regard to the affairs of the little band of believers in Christ. We have been highly favored and much prospered by a spread of the truth. It was the writers great privilege to be permitted to bury into Christ, four more obedient ones to the one faith and hope a few months ago, and we have great hopes of as many more in a short time. We give God the glory. The bride is fast being selected and the day of the Lord is nigh at hand. Soon may He come is my prayers, for there is no hope for the world until he does come. As ever I am your brother in hope.

Editor Restitution: Dear brother of the one faith, inclosed you will find one dollar for THE RESTITUTION six months. I have been borrowing your excellent paper and reading for some time and cannot do without it any longer. We have no regular preaching at our church, and I am almost starved for want of good healthy food. I hear what is called the orthodox once in a while, which makes me see the necessity of sound doctrine. I remain yours of the Abrahamic faith.

Editor Restitution:—On Sunday, July 6th, I had the pleasure of baptizing into the name of the holy one and welcoming to the fellowship of the church Mrs. Blackman, one of the oldest residents of Austin. By this act of faith and obedience she becomes a part of "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that (she) should show forth the praises of him who hath called (her) out of darkness into his marvelous light; which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God; which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy. Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as strangers and pilgrims abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that, whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation." 1 Pet. ii. 9-12.

I spoke briefly upon the subject of the "New Birth," placing particular emphasis on the words of Jesus to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." John iii. 1-5. I endeavored to impress the absolute necessity of the birth of water and of spirit, on account of the solemn words of the great Redeemer, "He cannot enter the kingdom of God." Many teachers who seem to have a desire to evade the force of those words, try to explain it by affirming that the birth of water has reference to natural birth only. O how foolish; O how dangerous; let us not be guilty of taking away the force of God's word, and thus cause our fellow man to go astray. Our dear Lord's language is addressed to men who need salvation, and not to a non-entity which has no existence in fact. He says: "Except a man (not before he becomes man) be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Notice the words, "born again." There would be no force in the word "again" if it had reference to the birth which gave him a physical existence, as the word again means "once more, another time." You will notice the Savior's words caused Nicodemus to question as to how a man could receive the natural birth another time, but the Savior explained that the second birth was something higher than the natural—the first—birth, which was a birth of water and spirit, and would culminate in an unending existence in God's kingdom. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us," (how?) "by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus iii. 5. Now, what is "regeneration" but new birth? and the idea of cleansing is conveyed by the word "washing," and what we are cleansed from by this "washing of regeneration," is shown by the words: "Arise, and be baptized and wash away thy sins." Acts. ix. 18.

No one will certainly deny that the word "regeneration" means new birth, and the words "wash" and "washing," as used in the texts just quoted, has reference to baptism, and the result of the washing or cleansing from sin, and that it would be impossible for a man to ente God's kingdom as an inheritor clothed with sin; how forcible the Savior's words come to us: "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." WILLIAM H. WILSON.

Editor Restitution: We cannot do without THE RESTITUTION, as we are only favored with preaching here once in a great while. Bro. J. M. Stephenson favored us with three discourses, April the 27th. The preaching to say the least was good and the first that we had, had in over three years. We should be very much pleased to see some of the preaching brethren out this way soon, to proclaim the "glad tidings," there are several here that would be baptized if they had an opportunity. If any should conclude to come, they will please send notice to me, that I may publish the good news. Hoping to see some of you soon, I remain your brother in Christ.

SELECTIONS.

Dying not the Climax of Pain.

There is no foundation for the idea that the pain of dying is the climax to the pain of disease; for, unless the stage of agony is crossed at a stride, disease stupifies when it is about to kill. If the anguish of sickness has been extreme, so striking from the contrast is the case that supervenes, that, without even the temporary revival which distinguishes the lightening before death, "kind nature's signal for retreat," is believed to be the signal of the retreat of the disease. Pushkin, the Russian poet, suffered agony from a wound received in a duel. His wife, deceived by the deep tranquility which succeeded, left the room with a countenance beaming with joy, and exclaimed to the physician, you see he is to live! "But at this moment," says the narrative, "the last process of vitality has already begun." Where the symptoms are those of recovery, there is in truth more pain to be endured than when the issue is death, for sickness does not relinquish its hold in relaxing its grasp. In the violence which produces speedy insensibility, the whole of the downward course is easy compared to the subsequent ascent. When Montaigne was stunned, he passed, as we have seen, from stupor to dreamy Elysium. But returning life had thawed the numbness engendered by the blow, then it was that the pains got hold of him which the imagination pictures as incident to death. Cowper, on reviving after his attempt to hang himself, thought he was in hell; and those who are taken senseless from the water, and afterward recover, re-echo the sentiment, though they may vary the phrase. This is what, upon reflection, we should expect. The body is quickly deadened, and slowly restored; and, from the moment corporeal sensitiveness returns, the throes of the still disordered functions are so many efforts of pain. In so far as it is a question of bodily suffering, death is the lesser evil of the two.

Of the trial to be undergone before the dying sets in, everybody from personal experience or observation of disease has formed a general idea. Duration is an element as important as intensity, and slow declines, which are not accompanied by any considerable suffering, put patience and fortitude to a considerable test. "My friends," said Fontenelle a short time before he died, "I have no pain; only a little difficulty in keeping up life."

When Cavendish, the great Chemist, perceived that his end drew near he ordered his attendant to retire and not return till a certain hour. The servant came back to find his master dead. He had chosen to breathe out his soul in solitude and silence; and would not be distracted by the presence of man, since vain was his help. Everybody desires to smooth the bed of death; but unreflecting feeling, worse than the want of it in the result, turns it often to a bed of thorns.

It is not always that sickness merges into agony. The strained thread may break at last with a sudden snap. This is by no means rare in consumption. Burke's son, upon whom his father has conferred something of his own celebrity, heard his parents sobbing in another room at the prospect of an event they knew to be inevitable. He arose from his bed, joined his illustrious father, and endeavored to engage him in cheerful conversation. Burke continued silent, choked with grief. His son again made an effort to console him. "I am under no terror" said he; "I feel myself better and in spirits, and yet my heart flutters I know not why. Pray, talk to me, sir! talk of religion, talk of mortality; talk, if you will, of indifferent subjects." Here a noise attracted his notice, and he exclaimed, "Does it rain!—No; it is the rustling of the wind through the trees." The whistling of the trees, brought Milton's majestic lines to his mind, and he repeated them with uncommon grace and effect:

"His praise, ye winds, that from four quarters blow,
Breathe soft or loud; and wave your tops ye pines;
With every plant, in sign of worship wave!"

A second time he took up the sublime and melodious strain, and accompanying the action to the word, waved his own hand in token of worship, and sank into the arms of his father—a corpse. Not a sensation told him that in an instant he would stand in the presence of the Creator, to whom his body was bent in homage, and whose praises still resounded from his lips. But commonly the hand of death is felt for one brief moment before the the work is done. Yet a parting word, or an expression of prayer, in which the face and voice retain their composure, show that there is nothing painful in the warning. It was in this way that Boileau expired from the effects of dropsy. A friend entered the room where he was setting, and the poet in one breath, bade him hall and farewell, "Good day and adieu," said he; "it will be very a long adieu," and instantly died.

In sudden death, which is not preceded by sickness, the course of events is much the same. Some expire in the performance of the ordinary actions of life; some with a half completed sentence on their lips; some in the midst of a quiet sleep. Many die without a sound; many with a single sigh; many with merely a struggle and a groan. In other instances two or three minutes of contest and distress; and in proportion as the termination is distant from the commencement of the attack, there will be room for the ordinary pangs of disease. But, upon the whole, there can be no death less awful than that which comes in the midst of life, if it were not for the shock it gives the survivors, and the probability with most that it will find them unprepared. When there are only a few beats of the pulse, and a few heavings of the bosom between health and the grave, it can signify little whether they are the throbbings of pain or thrills of joy, or the mechanical movements of an unconscious frame.

Silent Tears.

A dear friend of the writer was most unjustly slandered. He, about that time, received a most charming epistle from a poor widow, overflowing with grateful expressions for favors received. Here and there over the pages were some unwritten words mingling with fresh ink flowing from her pen. These were signs written by the dying sets in, everybody from personal experience or observation of disease has formed a general idea. Silent Tears.

A dear friend of the writer was most unjustly slandered. He, about that time, received a most charming epistle from a poor widow, overflowing with grateful expressions for favors received. Here and there over the pages were some unwritten words mingling with fresh ink flowing from her pen. These were signs written by the heart, but understood among all nations. Silent tears were they. Mary's tears on the Savior's feet augustine calls "the blood of the heart." It suggested an incident that proves how wrongfully language is often used. An inebriate, cruel to his loving wife, is often said to have acted in a brutal manner. This we believe to be a slander on the animal creation. Instances abound where the faithful household pet, through a strong mysterious affection, has followed his master's bier to the cemetery and there remained, actually starving himself to death. How exceedingly rare has human love led a friend to die such a martyr's death.

In California a number of miners, after some years of hardships, still clung to their camp. A few cattle were daily driven out to an enclosed pasturage. On their being driven home one evening a young heifer went near a fence and stood still. The skin of her flrstborn was carelessly hanging thereon. The hardy miners were there, and saw the mysterious affections of that brute's maternal nature flowing down to the ground in great silent tears. One of the miners thought of his darling sleeping in the silent valley. He lifted his horny hand and wiped his eyes. Another began to weep, until all of them were crying for relief to their pent-up emotions.

Who would presume to rank an inebriate, who is madly plying the glass with the waters of death with an irrational animal, as kind and full of love for her offspring as that californis brute? Take the following case, one of ten thousand, and the language applied is a mere mockery of the truth. A young lawyer won and married a bride that was the object of her parents' refined and devoted love, and the favorite of all the circle of her numerous friends. A beautiful cottage, elegantly located and beautifully furnished by her parents, was the happy home of this favored pair. Several years glided by, and the husband began to ply the sparkling glass. Warnings from the Bible, entreaties from his devoted partner, the solemn pleadings could not arrest his downward path.

One fierce wintry night he came home reeling through the deep snow, and found his wife with a miserable cold room, an invalid, and trying to keep her two babies warm. The drunken madman swore he would soon have it warm enough. Midnight came. The tempest had increased. The elements were in fierce conflict, and the raging fiend in human form was within. How he fired his home will never be known. Madmen care for nothing. The flames, fanned by the wind, drove out his wife, beating her darlings, to face that awful tempest. A quarter of a mile off stands the nearest house. Soon exhausted, she sank down in the deep snow, with her helpless babies clinging to their mother. But a few moments sufficed to reduce their lovely home to ashes.

In the morning the sobered author of this ruin, with the parents and friends, were searching under snowdrifts for the lost ones. At length, wrapped in a spotless winding sheet they were found. White as marble, the lovely features of the mother disclosed frozen silent tears on her cheeks, and the cherub forms clasped in her arms.

Taking the census of all mankind the inscription on the grave of those victims would be, murdered by their husband and father! And yet he was dignified by being called a brute. That word, given to the triple murderer, was an outrage on the entire lower creation. If the shining cherubim or seraphim can lay down their harps and suspend their songs, would they not gaze with wonder on such a scene of woe, and under the very effulgence of the eternal throne shed silent tears?

The Hour and the Man.

No careful student of history can fail to be struck by the fact that in every crisis of human affairs men have been raised up with special qualifications for the work that needed to be done at that particular time. The hour strikes for the achievement of a great reform, and lo! a man appears upon the stage, commissioned and equipped of God for the task. He gives the key-note for rallying thousands, he sounds the charge against an iniquitous institution, mighty in aspect, but ripening for destruction. He calls a nation to repentance for its crimes against humanity, and warns it of the Divine retributions for sin. Such men are the prophets of God in their generation—misrepresented, persecuted, maligned, and sometimes slain; but elsewhere honored of God, and sure at last to be honored of men. What a catalogue of such men, "of whom the world was not worthy," might be culled from the pages of history—men whose bloody footsteps are the way-marks of human progress, and to whom, under God, we owe what is most valuable in our civilization, and most beneficent in the application of Christianity to society and its institutions.

DIED.

BENNET—Of consumption, Feb. 22, 1879, Jane, wife of James Bennett.

She was baptized into Christ by the writer about eight years ago, and since that time has lived a devoted Christian. She was the daughter of John and Elizabeth Richards, and after she embraced the faith was married to James Bennett. During the last two years of her life she was greatly afflicted, but she endured all her suffering without a murmur or complaint. In her last moments she was cheerful and said that she expected to sleep by her brother's side and that she wanted the writer to preach her funeral sermon, and five minutes afterward fell into her last sleep to awaken no more till Christ shall come. Her age was about twenty-three years. Thus we see that young, and old, and middle-aged all pass away. A funeral discourse was delivered by the writer from 1 Thess. iv. 13.

Two months later Jenny's mother, Elizabeth Richards, also fell asleep. She was born in the state of Virginia, August 21, 1820, and moved with her parents to Illinois when quite young. At the age of sixteen she united with the Campbellites and retained her membership with them till the year 1869, when she and her husband removed to Kansas, and still retained her membership with the Campbellite till she heard the gospel of the kingdom proclaimed by the writer. Becoming dissatisfied with both her faith and baptism she resolved to be immersed into Christ in the faith of his death, burial and resurrection, and thus yield an intelligent obedience to the gospel requirements. Accordingly sister Richards and three of her daughters were immersed by the writer since which time she has lived a faithful Christian. Like the house of Martha, Mary, and Lazarus her house was ever open to Jesus and his friends. She was a kind mother, a devoted wife, and an earnest Christian to the last. Her death occurred April 24, 1879. Thus three out of the family that I baptized—the mother and two daughters—have been claimed by the enemy death. She left a husband and four children, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. A funeral discourse was delivered to a large concourse of people from 1 Thess. iv. 13. We have laid her by the side of her daughter and son to rest till Christ shall come to make them up. May the Lord bless the bereaved husband and children, and though greatly missed by her children, may they all meet again.

POETRY.

Where Are We?

CARRIE WILLIAMS.

Where are we, in the solemn wake of time?
Look to the way-marks, as the years move on;
Surely they speak from every age and clime,
That Gentile times have very nearly gone.
Earth's teeming millions, as the storm-tossed deep
Are restless, surging—hurrying to and fro
Be faithful shepherds sleep a fatal sleep;
Knowledge protests signs to teach or know.
Unheed increases; mines of hidden lore
Broad earth to ages past, are opened wide;
Expanses and held from shore to shore
While swiftly flow man's thoughts beneath the tide.
Time, space, all distance fa[l] before his skill,
His will the mighty elements control,
Even lightning bows, his mind to fulfill,
Yielding obedience to the half to fulfill,
War, famine, strife, disease of ev[il] soul.
Mankind assail, and thousands [fall] from life,
While raging elements find vent in storm.
Till every land with boding fear is rife.
Men's hearts are failing them for utter fear
As they behold earth's sorrows multiply;
The Christian only feels his heart to cheer,
Well knowing that redemption draweth nigh,
Well knowing that the signs on every hand
Portend the near approach of Him we love,
Of Israel's King on Olive's Mount to stand,
His power, His might, His majesty to prove,
Then peace shall dwell beneath His righteous away,
And justice reign supreme from shore to shore;
Safely the poor shall dwell in His blest day,
Wasting destruction shall be known no more.
Over all the earth the Savior shall be King;
His right to reign all nations yet shall own,
And to the Holy City tribute bring.
Wars shall be ended, sorrow be unknown.
Millennial glory then shall fill the earth;
The saints of every age and every clime
Brought forth immortal by the second birth,
Shall no more know disease or death's decline.
Fadeless, immortal youth shall crown each brow;
Associate rulers with the Lord our King;
What matter to us what our portion now,
The song of victory we yet shall sing!
Where are we? Almost o'er the desert waste
Where wickedness unbounded rules the hour;
"How long, O Lord?" we pray the morning haste;
Come quickly and assert thy rightful power.

St. Joseph, Mo.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Old and the New, or, the Closing of the (Gospel) Age and the Beginning of the Millenium.

As we stand upon the crumbling verge, and as the very last sands are dropping from the hour-glass of Gentile time, we sigh for a better, even an heavenly country; not beyond the bounds of time and space, but the earth made new,—freed from the effect of the great transgression; the future and eternal home and abode of the saints. We have felt our way carefully down through the ages from the beginning of the first age before the flood, to the closing of the Gospel or Gentile age. We have learned several important facts that deserve more than a passing notice:

1. God's purpose in creating the world and arranging the ages, in which his wisdom, power and glory shine forth in majestic splendor, which culminates in peopling the earth with a race of holy, immortalized beings This fact alone challenges our admiration and our adoration, and will swell with anthems of loud hallelujahs to God and the Lamb throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity.

2. We have learned that the heathen dogma of the immortality of the soul, has no foundation in God's blessed book, the bible, and, therefore, God in his purpose and arrangement has not provided for a place of eternal sin and suffering, but has given the most positive assurance of his purpose to have a clean universe. Has he purposed and will he not accomplish it? Has he said and shall or will he not do it? As truly as I live all the earth shall be filled with the glory of God. Numbers xiv. 21.

The Millennium—when does it begin? We are all agreed as to the meaning of the term, simply one thousand years, but as to the time and manner we are not all agreed. A large majority of the Protestant churches hold and teach that the millennium will be located this side the coming of Christ, and will be a spiritual reign, and that the world will be converted under the preaching and present arrangement of the Gospel. This view is open to many valid objections:

1. It has no place in the bible.

2. It conflicts with Christ's own most positive teaching as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, &c.

We have shown as clear as bible language can make it, that the last part of the gospel age will be like the antediluvian age. When will the millennium or the one thousand years reign of Christ begin? Will it be at the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven to the aerial, when the first resurrection and rapture or translation of the saints will take place, or will it be when Christ and his holy ones which compose his body, the church, arrive at Jerusalem, the city of the great king, and is seated on his father David's throne on Mount Zion, and reign before his ancients gloriously. There is an interval of time between the rapture of the saints and their taking possession of the capitol of the [illegible], in the upper one of the less than forty years; it may be longer. It will be a space of time fraught with the most momentous events the world has ever witnessed; (if as we believe) it will be the antitype of David's reign. Another important thought suggests itself: will Christ and the church which are translated, caught up, to meet him in the air, be manifested to the world before their arrival at mount Zion in Jerusalem? This question we have not fully settled but incline to the belief they will not. These two questions are important and demand our profound investigation. The Lord help us to lay aside our preconceived opinions and enter upon a careful and prayerful investigation of the word of God. To quote the many Scriptures that relate to and have their fulfillment in the execution of the judgments written immediately after the rapture of the [illegible], would be a great task and would [illegible] our article far beyond its intended limit.

In our investigations down to the present we have history to corroborate or back up the Scriptures. History is prophecy fulfilled. Prophecy is history unfulfilled. To [illegible] nor God and his holy word we should speak of the future with the assurance that we do of the past, and of both as if they were eye witnesses and they were accomplished facts—a faith short of this is not well-pleasing to God.

The order of the Millennium or Age-to-Come.

1. The coming of Christ, to or in the clouds of heaven, to gather his people, the resurrection of the righteous dead, the changing of the righteous living in a moment—in the twinkling of an eye. 1 Cor. xv. 51.

2. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. No chance for a mortal resurrection of just and unjust of a great assize or court of judicature. Was Paul mistaken or was Dr. Thomas? The marriage supper will be celebrated in the aerial before their descent to the earth; their journey to mount Zion, the capitol of the kingdom of God. 'Tis coronation's blissful morn! The bride in purest white, the bridegroom with his bride-adorned are crowned on Zion's height—on the glorious mount of Zion. Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Hallelujah! This accomplished, then will begin the fulfillment of the glorious prophesies of Isaiah ii. and Michael iv., together with a large amount of the utterances of God's holy prophets, especially the sweet singer of Israel.

To itemize, to arrange and set in chronological order what transpires under the reign of Christ during the millennium, the age of 1000 years, is a herculean task, far too great for mortal men in the flesh; it is God's prerogative who sees the end from the beginning. It is ours to read, study carefully and believe what God has left on record in his holy word, and as we see event after event and item after item of the prediction of the prophets fulfilled, and especially in our own day, we should take a low place at the feet of Jesus, giving glory to God, for the hour of his judgments has come.

It is indeed strange, and in some respects amusing, to see the diversified views of men relating to the 1000 years reign of Christ, the Millennium. Some locate it in the past, others during the dark ages, others a spiritual, and others in the future, but are going to have the New Jerusalem a literal city hanging in the skies for a 1000 years. It is hard to tell which of these is the farthest removed from any support in the word of God. Paul says he—Christ—must reign till he has put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. Isa. ix. 6 says the government shall be upon his shoulders, of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of his Father David, and upon his kingdom to order it, &c. The angel to Mary, Luke i. 32, confirms the same thing. David's throne was upon the earth in palestine, in Jerusalem, on Mount Zion; so says the unerring Word of God. And there will it again be located when the tabernacle of David is raised up and the residue of men will seek after God and all the Gentiles on whom the name of the Lord is called.

The Millennium or Age-to-Come. Will it be a perfect age? Not as a whole. It will be the seventh thousanth year period from the creation, or beginning of the world, when the elements that compose the globe or planet, earth, were brought together, arranged and set in order and by the Elohim pronounced very good: in the millennium will be perfected God's plan and purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus before the foundations of the earth were laid. The first thing in order after the inauguration of the kingdom will be the fulfillment of Rev. xx. 1, 2, 3. This will be a mighty advance towards re- [illegible] also a sceptre as an natural adjunct, [illegible] as regards the [illegible] chained, shut up in prison, and a seal set upon him that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled. Who that has lived in this or the previous ages and endured the ills of human life and bore the consecrated cross of Jesus Christ and has fallen under the power and dominion of death in hope of having a part in the first resurrection, what an honor it would be when the king shall ask who will go, to answer Lord here am I, send me as a missionary to carry the age-lasting gospel to the escaped of the nations. A very different state of things from this or the past ages! No tempting devil to incite the evil passions of poor fallen humanity; no hinderances in the way; all the improvements of this age will be at God's disposal, and will be used as means to an end in accomplishing the great work of restitution.

I want to ask the editor and the correspondents of THE RESTITUTION, and hosts of others who believe the millennial doctrine, would you not shout and make heavens high arches ring, to go at the bidding of King to carry the gospel to the poor heathen who have never heard of the fame of Christ nor seen his glory? Very likely you will have a part in that glorious work or be assigned to a rulership over one, two, or five cities. The qualifications must be made here, perfected through resurrection by the spirit of holiness. Rom. i. 4: This work will begin in the mustard seed form of the kingdom, when the law goes forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Then the nations will learn war no more, but everyone will sit under his own vine or fig tree, and none to hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain. Oh, my dear Lord, let me be even a door-keeper in the house of the Lord, in that beautiful land brought back from the sword, where the fir tree, the pine and the box will grow, and the earth will yield her increase, and where the tree of life will grow in the midst of the paradise of God.

I would like to give an exposition of the fourteenth chapter of Zachariah's prophecy, but I am inadequate to the task. My light is not clear nor dark, but would respectfully ask some of our brethren who have a clear understanding of that deeply interesting prophecy to come to the front and give to the household of faith the benefit of their investigations. The first thing named in this chapter is the day of the Lord which we understand to be 1000 years. The third verse reads, "Then shall the Lord go forth and fight with those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." When, and where, and how, did he fight in the day of battle? Was the Lord visibly present in any of the battles fought by the Hebrew nation? Is there any evidence that the Lord or Christ will be seen by his enemies before his feet stand upon the Mount of Olives? Although we have asked help from our brethren to ventilate this deeply interesting prophecy, we cannot forbear asking a question about the great and momentous events which seem to us to have their fulfillment in the near future. In the fourth verse it is stated his feet stand upon the Mount of Olives; the mount cleaves in the midst; half removes toward the north and half toward the south. There will be a great valley or plain. This has always seemed to us to be Paradise restored. The sixth verse has a little obscurity attached to it. The light, to me, seems to refer to the light and glory of the millennial age. It will not shine in its full splendor until the even time or the end of the age, when the sum total of the great work of the restitution of all things spoken of by the prophet shall be accomplished; when he, Christ, shall deliver up the kingdom to God the father, that God may be all and in all. A word of comment upon the last part of the fifth verse. "And the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with the (or with him)." Where do they come from? From the aerial or clouds of heaven by way of Sinai, Edom, Bozrah, Temon, Mount Paran up to Palestine, to Jerusalem the city of the great king?

A word more before we leave this wonderful prophecy. From the sixteenth verse we understand that the temple service and worship will be restored, and the left of the nations that escape God's judgments will go up to Jerusalem from year to year, to worship the king, the Lord of Hosts, and keep the feast of the tabernacles. Sublime, grand, and glorious beyond conception, will be the scene when the shekinal glory shall again fill the house of the Lord; a greater than Solomon will preside, or be the central figure in the shining group of immortal beings that shall rule and govern in the kingdom of God in the Millennium or Age-to-Come.

WHEN SHALL THESE THINGS be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming before us? There is nothing to prevent but our own unwillingness, our want of faith and obedience. Ample provision has been made on God's part. Christ has made the one great atoning sacrifice of himself, whereby and through which poor, lost, fallen sinful man, may become reconciled and restored to the favor of God. Now is your time to make choice of that good part that shall never be taken from you.

SELECTIONS.

[Including Reads.]

His Appearing—Personal, Premillennial, and Practical.

An address by Rev. Prebendary Auriol, Delivered at the Wimbledon Prophetic Conference.

The Work of the Present Dispensation —The Gathering in of the Elect—The Symbols of Union Between Christ and His People—The Head and the Members—The Heir and Joint-heirs —The Bridegroom and the Bride—When shall those Things be?—Previous Trials—The Privileges of the first Resurrection—The Time of the Manifestation—The practical Bearing—The Coming Hastened.

I am thankful that the subject which has been assigned to me on the present occasion is of so truly practical a character; and I trust it may please our gracious Lord to make these meetings at which we are gathered together a means of stirring up our hearts, and calling forth fresh zeal for the glory of His name, for the benefit of souls, and that there may be found amongst us a people prepared for the coming of the Lord.

The gathering in of the number of God's elect is the work of the present dispensation. Believers in the Lord Jesus Christ from God's own elect Church in every part of the world; and when the Lord, the Head over all things to His Church, shall have gathered in, in his own time, and by his own grace, the members of that mystical body, he will himself personally come, will gather them together in one, and bring them with him as witnesses of his triumph, as sharers of his glory, and as rejoicing with him over a redeemed earth.

This is the subject of which we have now to speak. And, in the first place, we may infer it from the very expressions which are used in Scripture to denote

THE UNION BETWEEN CHRIST AND HIS PEOPLE.

He is said to be the Head; they are declared to be his members. It will surely be when all the members shall be complete, by the life-giving power of the Holy Spirit, that the Lord will come, leading the armies of heaven, as represented in Rev. xix.

Again, He is represented as the first born among many brethren, the head is that character of the family of God; and to "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name, which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." And it will be when all his brethren who are joint-heirs with Christ have been born into his spiritual family that the Lord will appear, and present them to His Father, with the words, "Behold I and the children which thou hast given me."

And so again we find that it is immediately in connection with the exclamation, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God;" and then he draws this distinction between them and the world, "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it know him not," that the beloved Apostle adds, "Beloved, we know not what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

But this truth is more distinctly brought before us by the illustration which is so frequently given of the union of Christ with his people in connection with his second coming—I mean, where he is spoken of as the Bridegroom, and the elect Church as his bride.

Now, when shall that Church be presented as a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing? It is far from being manifested in this character now; but it will be when the Bridegroom shall take to Himself his bride—then it will be perfect in holiness; then, and not till then, we believe that the prayer of our Lord will be answered, "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee"—"that they may all be one in Us."

But it may be asked, in the language of the Apostles, as addressed to their Divine Master, "Tell us

WHEN SHALL THESE THINGS be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming that question our Lord tells of all manner of trials to befall the church and the world: wars and rumors of wars, pestilence, famines, earthquakes, false prophets, persecutions, afflictions, and offences; the abounding of iniquity, and the waxing cold of the love of many; but there is not a single word which leads to the anticipation of a time of universal spiritual prosperity before they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and the account of our Lord's prophetic discourse, given us in the gospel of Luke, is precisely similar.

Now it is entirely in accordance with the word of prophecy that Paul, in 2 Thess., whilst he tells us of a falling away, of the revelation of the man of sin, the mystery of iniquity, and the revelation of the wicked one whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming, gives no reference whatever to a period of peace or of universal diffusion of the truth before that Advent. If, therefore, we believe in the expectation of the glorious events which are the subjects of the prophetic writings of the Old Testament, and that the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, we cannot date the fulfilment of these promises before the personal coming of the Lord with His people and bride—and this appears of itself to be a sufficient argument for the truth of the pre-millennial Advent.

We believe, indeed, that a large portion at least of the writings of the prophets of the Old Testament refer to the future of God's ancient people Israel, and to the kingdom which the Lord will establish, with Mount Zion for its centre; but we think we should fall into a similar error with that which evidently prevailed among the Jews at the time when Jesus was upon earth if we omitted to look for the fulfilment of other prophecies concerning our Lord which must take place before that kingdom shall be established, which he will assuredly claim, and of which it was foretold of him that he should reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

On the other hand the object of expectation and joyful hope for the church is, I believe, that the Lord will come and all his saints with him; that then his saints comprehended all who have fallen asleep in Jesus, from righteous Abel to the last of those who die in the Lord, all who shall be summoned from their graves by the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, and all his true saints who, being alive on earth at his coming, shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and whom he will bring with him.

is that of them who live and reign with Christ a thousand years, and it is said, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection;" but who of those who have fallen asleep are declared to be blessed but they that sleep in Jesus? and who are the holy and the just but the saints of God to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom? This is that for which the people of God should be waiting now. As our Lord directs us, "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh they may open to him immediately."

This was that for which the Apostle Paul was ready to suffer the loss of all things, and to count them but dung, if by any means he might attain to the resurrection from among the dead; this is the object which he sets before us in the Epistle to Titus, "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ"—and is it not a blessed hope when his saints shall appear with him in glory?

It will be the time of the manifestation of the sons of God. All whom he has graciously been pleased to make his children shall be manifested. With the body of their present humiliation changed to be like the glorious body of their exalted King, to reign with him over the earth—not to mingle with the inhabitants of the renewed earth, even in the millennial kingdom, but to reign over it; in being employed by their Lord for the administration of his kingdom. There is nothing carnal in this idea of the risen saints shining in their portion as kings and priests, fulfilling the offices which may be assigned to them—but something very glorious in the answer which will be then given to their Savior's prayer, "Father, I will that they also whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am, that they may behold the glory which Thou hast given Me!"

of these glorious truths, and the consequent duty of the church to hasten his coming by faithful testimony and missionary effort. Some forty or fifty years ago one strong objection which was constantly put forth against the teaching of the pre-millennial coming of Christ was that it would damp the ardor and lessen the zeal of the promoters of missionary efforts.

Now we maintain that the very reverse is the case, and that there is no motive more powerful or more influential than that which is presented to the waiting church by the blessed hope of the appearing in glory of the Lord their Redeemer, and their personal interest in his triumph. For we must remember that the Lord has told us that "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."

In proportion, therefore, as we desire that end, and look forward to it as our Lord's accomplishment of the number of his chosen, and his freeing them from every enemy, and from death, their last enemy, giving them the victory, should we do all in our power that that gospel of the kingdom —which is to be the means of redeeming men from the power of darkness, and translating them into the kingdom of God's dear Son—may be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; for it is then that the end shall come.

It is interesting to observe, in Rev. xiv., the account of the lambs standing on the Mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads; and then immediately after we have the vision thus described: "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel, to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." And what is the object of that preaching but to gather out those saints in whom the Lord will be glorified, and by whom he will be admired at his coming, because the testimony concerning him was believed. Now here we seem to have of the near approach of the last days. The gospel is perhaps more widely preached among the nations of the world than in any former period. True it is that if we had to wait for universal success attending that preaching, we might be discouraged; but do not the faithful messengers of the gospel stand as witnesses to the nations? Does not the excellence of the Christian teaching and the Christian character, when it is truly exhibited, stand out as a witness for our Lord and his truth? And while God, in his providence, is setting before us open doors into lands almost unknown, and others where the gospel has never penetrated, does it not become the Lord's truly waiting people, who desire to do his will with zeal, energy, and devotedness, to enter by these open doors, and by all means to publish the gospel of the kingdom?

Or, if we look at it in another point of view, that every regenerate soul added to the true, living church of Christ will, in the great day of the Lord, be brought forth as a jewel for his Savior's crown, how earnest should we be, if we desire the glory of the Lord, if we desire the blessedness of souls, if we desire the consummation of that for which we have been redeemed by his precious blood, to do all that we can to hasten his coming by faithful testimony to the truth! For I would remind you that the expression is a scriptural one. In the Second Epistle of Peter he uses it as hastening the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Every nation where the gospel is preached, every soul that is added to Christ's people, is hastening the glorious advent of the Lord. And you remember how Peter uses this very argument in the time shortly following the season of Pentecost as recorded in Acts iii.

Would, then, that the view which we take of the coming of the Lord, and his elect, redeemed Church, might be truly a practical one, stirring up our desires and fixing our determination, that we may stand in one lot at the end of the days, doing the Lord's will, waiting for the Lord's return, whatever may be yet before us, hoping to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

The British Museum is about to acquire a well-preserved Egyptian papyrus, belonging to the time of the later Ptolemies. It contains nearly the whole of the thirty-fourth book of the Iliad. The museum has secured another papyrus, even more ancient, recently found in an Egyptian tomb, and containing an almost complete tran-

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth with the Christ as King, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Be Ye Therefore Perfect.

To some, the above seems a hard requirement. Like certain ones of old, who said to Jesus, "This is an hard saying who can hear it." It is often declared that it is impossible to obey this command; that we are such fallible beings that we cannot attain to such a standard, and that God has declared that there is "not one that doeth good."

Now, if both the above statements are applied to the same class, there is a flat contradiction. But a little attention given to the subject will clearly show that the command "be ye therefore perfect" is given to those who have been brought into covenant relation with God, while the statement that "none doeth good; no, not one," is applied to a class who do not sustain that relation to God, but, as Paul says, in Rom. iii.: "They are all (both Jews and Gentiles) under sin." This, then, determines the condition of each class, —one the children of God, the other the unconverted or sinners.

The standard of character is placed high, but when we consider the high destiny of those to whom it is given we cannot reasonably object to it. Important positions are to be filled in the coming kingdom; the welfare and happiness of vast numbers of human beings will be intrusted to the care of those who will be the future rulers over the nations of earth. Think you, brother or sister, that you could successfully govern a nation, when you do not now control your own temper? Could you disseminate joy and delight throughout a kingdom, if you now fail to impart it to your own family? Let us not deceive ourselves; the future government will be given to those only who overcome everything that is contrary to the will of God. Have you a temper that is your master? Then learn to control it.

Poets have sung of the heroes that triumphed in battle, but Solomon says that "He that ruleth his own spirit (disposition, or temper,) is greater than he that taketh a city."

Let no one be flattered with the idea that a quick, irritable temper in any one can be disposed of, either by the grace of God or self-culture. No, no; it is to be controlled or held in subjection; not eradicated or destroyed. Too little attention is paid to the mighty work of self-government, and, upon this, depends the grand issue. Think how often we are commanded in the epistolary writings to overcome our selfish propensities and to be in subjection to the law of the spirit of life. How often it is enjoined upon us to cultivate the traits of character that constitute us the children of God. These are not imaginary, but real characters that are described in the epistles to the churches. But, alas, how rarely do we meet persons who have so carefully cultivated all the traits that make a perfect or complete character, that we can say, There is one in whom is reflected the image of our blessed Lord! Let us remember that a beautiful test of our moral fitness for the Master's use is given in the allusion to the process of refining and purifying silver. The refiner watches the crude mass until the intense heat disengages the dross from the pure metal, and this is indicated when the refiner beholds his image clearly reflected in the silver when separated from the dross. How many of us have reached that point of moral perfection? Of some it may be said, they possess some lovely traits of character; but, alas, some flaw in the germ deprives it of the title, perfect! But, perhaps some will be ready to ask, Will nothing short of a perfect character be accepted by the Lord?

In answer to this question that will thrill the hearts of the humble, trusting children of God, I will say that a perfect character can be formed only by a perfect rule. When we shall have yielded complete obedience to the perfect rule given us by the Master, then, and only then, have we a perfect character.

Now for a divine test. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." James iii. 2. Again, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. Additional proof might be adduced, but enough has been presented to establish the proposition.

To illustrate still further, we will compare "the perfect law of liberty" to a chain of seven links; if each link remains unbroken it is a perfect chain, but if one link is broken, the perfect chain is destroyed. It is not necessary that each link shall be broken; severing one breaks the chain. Hear James, the apostle: "For he that said, do not commit adultery, said also, do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law." Might we not as truthfully say, "He that commanded men to believe the gospel of the kingdom, also commanded them to be baptized? Now if some have been baptized, but did not believe the gospel, are they not transgressors of the law?" The same logic will apply to any part of the perfect rule of life given us.

In conclusion, I want to say to all the faithful, I care but little about what the world says or thinks about me. I am not much concerned about the destiny of those who lived a thousand years ago, or those who will live a thousand years hence; but my chief desire is, that I may be counted worthy to fill some humble position in the vineyard of the Master; and the next earnest wish of my heart is, that others may strive to qualify themselves for the blest inheritance. Only a little while and the glorious scene will burst upon our vision; no time then to right wrongs; too late then to perform those good deeds so often resolved upon. Let us attend to all these things now. Amen.

Yours, anxiously waiting,
J. P. WAGONER.

The New Earth and the New Jerusalem.

And I saw a new heaven and a new earth. Rev. xxi. 1.

What else did he see? "And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." The new earth is, one thing and the new Jerusalem another, though closely connected. The latter is his tabernacle in which he will dwell with men, where he will wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain. In that new earth there shall be no more sea and no more curse. His servants shall see his face when they serve him, and they shall reign there forever and ever. This is the brightest picture, if interpreted literally, that mortal man ever witnessed. In harmony with this is the language of Peter iii. 13, "We, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." The hope of inheriting the new earth and city is eminently practical. "Wherefore beloved seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found in peace without spot or blemish." "Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness." "And he that sat upon the throne said, behold, I make all things (heaven and earth) new. He that overcometh shall inherit all things." Rev. xxi. 5, 7. What a mighty motive to induce all to overcome the world! But the motive depends very much for its influence on what the heavens and earth spoken of are understood to mean—whether the literal or allegorical plan of interpretation is applied to them. They are explained allegorically by the modern church with few exceptions, so that the new earth hope has but little influence on its members, and is seldom alluded to. Why is this? It is because the church, Roman and Protestant, follow blindly their ministers and commentators, and they turn the new heavens and new earth into figures of speech.

Now, I propose to mention some things which I do not believe with reference to the promised heavens and earth, and some things I do believe. I do not believe that heavens and earth are used in the Bible metaphorically (especially in the New Testament) to represent something else. They are often personified, by which figure, life intelligence and action are attributed to them for an important purpose, as in Isa. i. 2, "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth, I have nourished and brought up children and they have rebelled against me." The literal heavens and earth are addressed by Jehovah as if they were intelligent witnesses of the rebellion of his people. In Isa. xiii., the prophet seems to look beyond the destruction of Babylon when God will punish the world for their iniquity. "Therefore I will shake the heavens and the earth shall remove out of her place. And it shall be as the chased roe" &c. It is the real heavens that are shaken and the real earth that is removed and becomes as a chased roe, and means the same as the passing away of the first heavens and earth spoken of by our Savior and his apostles.

Jesus says, Matt. xxiv. 35, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Peter says, "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise," and John says that the first heaven and earth passed away (to give place to the new). Paul comments on the prophecy of Haggai ii. 6, "For thus saith the Lord of Hosts: yet once it is a little while and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land." Do not the heavens, earth, sea and dry land represent the nations? No, for he goes right on to say, "And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come." Paul says it "signifies the removing of those things that are shaken, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain." And the kingdom that shall be under the whole heaven, or throughout the whole earth, and be possessed by the saints, shall be immortal because the earth where it is set up shall never experience another earthquake.

All these plain testimonies of the prophets, of Christ, and the apostles in reference to the passing away, relate to the real heavens and earth. But what does the passing away mean? Let Paul explain. Heb. i. 10: "And thou, Lord, in the beginning, hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thine hands; they shall perish: but thou remainest and they all shall wax old as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up and they shall be changed." They will not so perish, be folded up, or pass away, that they shall not be changed to new heavens and earth. The change will be so great that it will be as if they passed away or fled so that no place was found for them.

It is not a figurative earth that flees away, but the fleeing away is figurative. The figure of Hiperbole is used in this and many other passages. This figure is used in Isa. xxxiv., where it is said, "The mountains shall be melted with their blood." Literal mountains are spoken of but they are not literally melted. In this chapter, third verse, it is said, "the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies; he hath utterly destroyed them, &c. And all the hosts of heaven shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all their host shall fall down as the leaf falleth off from the vine and as a falling fig from the fig tree." Then the prophet abruptly breaks off to foretell the judgments of Idumea. These words are nearly identical with the language used in connection with the sixth seal in Revelation, and doubtless refers to the same events. They are in immediate connection with the prophecy that Jerusalem shall be a quiet habitation. The glorious Lord shall be unto us a place of broad rivers, for the Lord is our judge, lawgiver and king. He will save us, and the inhabitants shall not say I am sick. Therefore these judgments and wonders before and upon the assembled nations will be the same that all the prophets speak of just before the coming of the Lord to deliver Israel from his last great trouble. Micah i. 2, "Hear all ye people; hearken O earth." Here the earth addressed cannot mean the people for they are both addressed separately. "For behold the Lord cometh forth out of his place and will come down and tread upon the high places of the earth. And the mountain shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft as wax before the fire," &c. Are not these mountains and valleys literal? They may or not be literally melted and cleft.

Again, I do not believe that the old earth means a wicked heart, and the new earth a changed heart. Because in the beginning God laid the foundation of the earth that has now become old and the heavens are works of his hands, and he would hardly lay the foundations of a wicked heart. If the new earth means a christian, then he will inherit himself!

This interpretation is allegorical enough for a Quaker or Swedenborgian. I could as easily spiritualize the second coming of Christ. I cannot believe that the immortal saints when they are crowned to reign with Christ will be the new heavens, and Israel and the nations be the new earth. Neither will the kingdom be the new heavens, for that is to be given to the saints under the whole heaven. I cannot see that the new heavens and earth will commence with the millennial reign of Christ, although there will be many physical changes both of the atmospheric heavens and the earth, especially of the holy land, making the earth much more fruitful and healthy, and removing partially the curse.

In the divine order, we have first the beasts—kings of the earth—and their armies gathered against Christ and his army and their overthrow. Then the thousand year reign, after that, general resurrection and judgment, and then the new heavens and earth, and new Jerusalem.

Let us, by being joint heirs with Christ, be prepared to inherit all things when made new—when the uttermost parts of the earth shall be given to his possession.

E. HOYT.

Fruit of the Vine.

Verily I say unto you I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.—Jesus.

By the expression "the fruit of the vine," our Savior had reference to the wine upon the table. Having just celebrated the passover He now institutes the communion. The language above shows the kind of wine used, viz., "new" wine: hence if we would follow the example given we ought to use new wine.

Fermented wine contains alcohol. Alcohol is not the fruit of the vine. It is just as absurd to call alcohol the fruit of the vine as to call carbonic acid or vinegar the fruit of the vine. They are the fruit or product of decay and not of the vine. There is no vinegar in grapes. There is no carbonic acid in grapes. There is no alcohol in grapes, nor yet in the juice of grapes. It is only when grape juice decays that alcohol begins to form. It is then called fermented wine. Fermentation is not the product of the vine. But Jesus used the product or "fruit of the vine;" therefore he used unfermented or "new" wine. Ought we not to follow his example in communion? A. J. EYCHANER.

"Just as I Am."

No other plea needed. "The blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin." Come, then, poor wandering ones. Do not let the syren "sometime" keep you from Christ forever. She will tell you, you are not ready now, you are not fit to come, but Jesus is ready to take you ready to forgive, and he will be fitness for you. Oh, if you loved him as I love him, if you felt as I do, what exceeding honor it is to bear his name, you could not stay away. Do you really want to be his, or has your business and pleasures more charms than the everlasting future, the eternal weight of glory? All these are vanity, "Use this world as not abusing it for the fashion of it passeth away."

Lay hold on eternal life, grasp the enduring riches, do not hold the truth in unrighteousness, but show your faith by your obedience. Go down into the watery flood and come out with a name that you never wore before, the name of Jesus. Go down and come up to walk the new life, that is so full of all that God can give of grace, mercy and peace. Throw off the chains of slavish fear and become God's free men; come and obey.

Not until you do, can you say, "our Father which art in heaven." Not until you do, can you have a title to a future inheritance. Not until you do, can you have hope of a resurrection to eternal life. The crowns and the palms are not for the disobedient. Cowards will never wear the resplendent robes of Jerusalem's inhabitants. Be ashamed of Jesus now, and he will be ashamed of you when he comes. I want to bring you to Jesus. Will you come? Do not let your lives all speed away in Satan's service but come now!

SELECTIONS.

The Nobleman's Offer.

A forcible illustration of the sin and folly of those who doubt the Lord's promises of salvation, and delay to accept His proffered grace, is found in the following account of the offer made by a British nobleman to his tenants. The substance of the story we have often heard, and believe it to be entirely true. We give it as reported in the Interior, from the lips of George J. Mingens, superintendent of the New York city mission.

Lord Congleton, one of the band of earnest Christian workers, among whom Lord Shaftsbury is perhaps the most widely known,—men who would be noble without hereditary titles, and who share that exceptional grace to which not many mighty or noble are called;—had thrown himself heartily into evangelical work both among the London poor and upon his own estates. Not being gifted with all that persuasiveness of speech which some possessed, he found that few believed his report, and grieved that the message of God's love which he bore was rejected and neglected by so many. Pondering the matter in his mind he sought to teach his tenants a lesson of faith which they could not well forget, and which might incline them to believe the testimony concerning Christ and His great salvation.

The session of Parliament was over, and he started for his country-seat. The morning after his arrival he had the following notice posted in various conspicuous places about the village that lay upon his estate, and on the grate gate of his private grounds:

NOTICE.

"Lord Congleton will be present, with his steward, at his office in the village, between the hours of 9 A. M and 12 noon,———day of———; and will then and there pay freely all accounts and debts, to whomsoever owing, of any of his tenants who cannot discharge their obligations. To avail themselves of this offer, the applicants must present their accounts in the form of separate bills, containing the exact statement of the amounts and nature of the debts owing to each creditor. They must give, also, a statement of their own means and whatsoever property they may have. CONGLETON."

Soon, around each placard a crowd began to gather. Curiosity, astonishment, possessed the villagers. "What does it mean?" And crowds gathered around the office. To one and all, the steward gave only one answer: "That is Lord Congleton's signature: the notice speaks for itself." Further explanations of his master's motives he refused; nor would he answer any questions. "He was simply ordered to fix up those placards. That was all he knew."

The day drew on, with an increasing excitement on the part of the poor. Some looked at the latter clause. It seemed to intimate they must surrender all they had, to claim the benefit. They were not insolvent; and so they concluded not to apply. Others had accounts of a nature they did not like to expose to his lordship. Others had little faith in the whole matter. 'Twas some new, unaccountable whim of Lord Congleton's. "But there's his own signature; he'll never dishonor that," said a neighbor. And so discussion ran high.

Many gathered up their accounts, and made out the required statements, resolving to see how others fared, and if they succeeded, to present their list of hopeless debts. Some planned how to keep back part of their assets, and some again, deterred by arguments or ridicule, gave up all thought of the matter.

The day came, and the crowd of tenants and lookers-on were gathered near the office. All efforts to gather any further information were fruitless. A little before the hour Lord Congleton's carriage drove up, and he stepped hastily into the office, and the door was closed and locked after him. Precisely at nine a step came from the inner room, and they heard the bolt thrown back.

Men looked at each other. None were willing to go first, fearing either the confession of poverty, or the ridicule that would meet an unsuccessful application. "You go and try, Jones," said a man to his neighbor. "I'm not so poor as you think for," was the reply, albeit each had shown friends their lists, and consulted with them about the debts they mean to present. So the minute wore by, while men looked upon each other and waited.

It was near ten o'clock when an old couple, who for two or three years had been inmates of the poorhouse, entered the group before the office. "Is it true," they said "Lord Congleton has offered to pay all his debts?" "Don't know; he has paid none yet." "But has any one been in?" "Not yet." Just then the notice hanging outside the office door caught the old man's eyes. It was faded by sun and rain. "Why wife," said he, "this has been here for days, and I know his lordship's signature. Thank God! we can die at least free of debt," and they started for the door. "Aye, aye; you go first, old man, and tell us how you fare." "I don't think you are out of the poorhouse yet." "Guess he'll be fooled." So their neighbors comments fell upon their ears as they entered.

Within the inner office they found Lord Congleton and his steward. The old man laid his statement and bills upon the table, saying: "These are my debts, my Lord. I have nothing but live in the poorhouse. This, however, matters little, if I die debt-free."

"Why should I pay your debts?" asked the nobleman. "I cannot tell why, except that you say you will. I know your signature, and believe your promise." "That is enough," said Lord Congleton.

The steward then made up the account and drew a check, which he handed to his master. He looked at it, compared it with the statement, and passed it with his signature to the old man. He earnestly thanked his benefactor, and then started to the door, saying:

"I must tell my neighbors." "No, you shall not," said Lord Congleton, "they must trust my word."

Then the old couple were shown into another room to wait till twelve; and in the meantime the steward told his master their history. Coming down from comparative comfort, their poverty had been misfortune, but not fault. Lord Congleton was interested in them, and ordered the lease of a little place to be made out in their name, which he added to the check.

Outside, the time wore away; and as the old people did not come forth, all settled down to the opinion there was nothing in it. Twelve drew near. Men looked at each other but did not go. Slowly the hour rang out, and with the last stroke the door opened, and the old man came out. "Have you got your money?" With that he showed his check. "Good as a note of the Bank of England!" There was a rush around Lord Congleton as he entered his carriage, and men shook at him their statements. "My Lord, will you pay my debts?" "Lord Congleton there's my account."

"Friends, it is past twelve o'clock," said he, as he drove away.

A company of Russian soldiers, while recently on their way to Elisabethpol, were beset with clouds of grasshoppers, that frightened them more than the Turks ever did. At night they could not sleep; their guns, their uniforms, and they themselves were covered with masses of these insects, that crept into their mouths, noses, and ears. The officers fled into the houses, but the plagues of grasshoppers had previous possession. A region of fifteen miles was thickly covered with them, and all the grain and grass were instantly destroyed.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 16, 1879.

THE appearance of the yellow fever at Memphis, caused quite a panic, and the inhabitants left the city by thousands. The first case was that of Frank Mulbrandon, an Irish shoemaker, who died. There were a few other cases, some of which resulted fatally.

THE heat for a number of days past has been exceedingly oppressive throughout the country generally. In Charleston, S. C., the thermometer reached 101 degrees in the shade on July 10. Before this the greatest heat known there for over twenty years was 99 degrees in 1871. The heat was up to 99 degree here yesterday, July 15. Deaths from sun stroke have been quite frequent in certain localities. Destructive storms and tornados have been the results, in some places of the unbalanced state of the atmosphere.

WE shall need the co-operation of all our friends, who sympathize with us in the faith and hope of the Gospel, to carry our paper successfully through the remainder of the year. We are fully persuaded that we are nearing a grand crisis in the history of the world, and especially that there is a time of fearful calamity approaching. Our only safety is in watchfulness and prayer. We shall not have the opportunity for either labor in the Lord's vineyard, or of making sacrifice for his cause for a very long time. Let us all remember that in due season we shall receive the reward if we persevere to the end.

The Dignity of Man.

And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish and the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. Gen. i. 26.

We always look with interest upon a relic of ancient times. Age has a charm and attractiveness peculiarly its own. "Venerable with age" is an expression of our daily language; the true representation of our natural thought. Conservatism—a wise conservatism—so far rules every heart as to beget a reverence for the past.

So it is, that when we stand amid ruins of former architectural grandeur, around which time has flung its ivy mantle, the fallen towers, the crumbling archways, the mouldering walls, the grassy floor on which we tread, all attract us. We think how kings once held solemn conclave where we stand; how these ruined chambers were once "big with the vanity of state," or the greater vanity of priestly pomp and show; and we feel

"We never tread upon them but we set
Our foot upon some reverend history."

Such as these are some of the attractions which linger round the old book of Genesis. The dust of centuries hangs upon it; millenniums have passed over it. Its compiler was Moses; but even he made use of materials far older, probably, than his own days; the records it may be of the very infancy of our race. Milton, in his grandest poem, represents an angel as sent to instruct Adam in the great things concerning his own origin; and Pollok, adopting the same idea, tells how "from the lyre of angels he learnt the early dawn of time;" and the conception is no mere flight of poetic fancy. What Adam learned in those great days when he walked with God, and sang with angel ministrants, he may well have deemed worthy of record. Angel's words, may be, are these; written by Adam's pen; telling what else mankind could never have known, of the birthday of our race, the origin of man; how man, touched by the Almighty power, sprang into being, a fair conception, good even to the all-searching gaze; only, alas! to stumble beneath the withering power of his own corruption and sin.

Other schemes indeed are pressed upon our consideration as revealing the birth of humanity; one scheme especially in our day wins large approval;—that man is a development, not a creation. The leading ideas necessary to its adoption would appear to be, first, a considerable disregard of the plain facts of history and geology; secondly, an exceedingly vivid imagination. The last is especially indispensable. It is a veritable "leap in the dark"—a procedure no wise man adopts. The credulity of science bids fair to exceed the credulity of superstition. For ourselves, until the evidence which is always coming, but never arrives,—until the missing links, always close at hand, but never discovered, are revealed,—we are content to take the record of Genesis as history; the wisdom of Genesis as the wisdom of God; and learn here how Adam was born; trace as here, to the creating power of Jehovah, the origin of man.

And the manner in which that origin is here described is most suggestive, when thus contrasted with the theory to which we have referred. The inevitable tendency of such a theory is to debase and degrade man. He springs in truth from the dust. The mournful dirge of Job becomes a scientific reality: "I have said to corruption, Thou art my Father; to the worm thou art my mother." The man of loftiest genius and noblest aspirations is bidden to behold his progenitors in the grinning ape of the forest, the oyster on his rocky bed, or in "every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth," our illustrious ancestors. But here everything is reversed. Straight from the great Creator's hands, Adam steps into the new-made world, and the step is that of a king. The one central thought of the passage is the dignity of man; the original glory and nobility of humanity.

I. Notice the preparations made for his reception. The creation of Adam is the last act of the great six days' work, the crowning glory of the whole. Not on the first day, when chaos ruled, and the barren earth was wrapped in her threefold mantle of water, cloud, and darkness, does man appear. The light must wake at the Almighty call; the waters must tremble and disperse at the sound of the Omnipotent voice; the mountains uprise in giant majesty; the valleys smile in beauty; grass and herb and tree must adorn the renewed earth; the sun dispersed the clouds; the moon and the stars appear; "the time of the singing of birds" must come; and air and earth and sea teem with lesser life, ere the world is deemed ready for man. The palace is built before the king is born; a palace grand and beatiful, with star-lit roof and carpet of flowers; a palace whose beauty even sin cannot destroy, for its God-given glory charms us still. And as if this was not enough for so illustrious an occupant, one spot fairer than all beside is chosen; the renewed world, one great circumference of beauty, finds a centre loveller still; the Lord God planted a "garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed;" a fitting home for so illustrious a being.

II. The deliberateness with which Jehovah is represented as entering upon the work of the creation of man also points out his importance in the scale of being. When God made the light the procedure was of the simplest possible character. He said, "let light be," and light was. So again when the clouds were uplifted, when the seas rolled together, and the mountains were formed, when the newly revealed earth sprang into fertility, when the sea teemed with life and the air rang with song, even when the loftiest of the animals roamed new-born the new-found world, in each case the word of Omnipotence sufficed. "He spake, and it was done; he commanded and it stood fast." But not thus is man called into being. With solemn deliberateness, as if marking the supreme importance of the word, God said, "let us make man." The idea of a plurality in the Godhead conspicuous through the whole chapter, here takes its boldest flight, and its loftiest conception. There is a consultation—a council of the Godhead is summoned; ere a step so pregnant with issues of good or ill is taken, Omnipotence pauses, and wisdom speaks with thoughtful earnest words, "Let us make man."

III. The natural dignity of manhood is still more clearly set forth in the form which he assumed. In our image, after our likeness, is the divine decree; and with manifest and unmistakable emphasis the decree is described as a fact (ver. 27), "so God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him." He was formed of the dust of the ground; his material organism differed in no way from the lowest of the creatures; but the image of God was impressed upon him; something of the dignity of Godhead shone within him. Of him, and of no creature beside, it is said "in our image, after our likeness."

It is sometimes assumed that this glory descends upon humanity because it is said (Gen. ii. 7) that "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." But when it is pointed out that exactly the same description is given of the creation of the lower animals, and the same phrase used to denote them, it is manifest such an idea is baseless. In this respect, as in regard to the materials comprising his frame, the words of Ecclesiastes are true, "Man hath no pre-eminence over a beast."

Our poet laureate has hinted a far more real indication of the glory of man when he speaks of him as

"Common clay [a' - from the common earth,
Moulded by God, and tempered with the tears
Of angels to the perfect shape of man."

"The perfect shape of man." The human form, erect, with nobility of countenance and dignity of carriage, unlike that of any lower creature, would appear to be the grandest conception of the divine mind; the highest and noblest form which Omniscience can devise or Omnipotence create. Angels, bright with the glory of the throne, wear the same form, and so much resembls men that again and again have they been supposed to be such. When the three angels drew near to Abraham on the plains of Mamre, he imagined they were three human wayfarers. When the disciples looked into the empty tomb of the risen Lord, they saw two young men in shining garments—angels who had come to share his triumph. The highest glories of created intelligence can find no loftier embodiment than the form worn by man.

And that same form was worn by Christ, for he was the angel's head and Lord; "the angel of the Lord;" "the angel of His Presence." Divinity, ere it was clothed in flesh, was manifested in an angel's glory; "the glory which I had with thee before the world was." The remembrance of this lends a marvelous literalness to the declaration that Adam was made in the image of God. It was to one wearing the erect angelic form that the Father said, "let us make man in our image, after our likeness;" and in that form man was created, the copy of the nature of him who is the image of the invisible God. When Nebuchadnezzar looked in long after time upon the furnace into which the three bound men had been cast, he beheld four men walking loose in the flame, and perhaps came near the truth when he said the form of the fourth is like that of the Son of God, for so close even from the beginning has been the relation between Christ and man, so exalted is the dignity of the latter.

IV. With equal clearness the same fact is set before us in the dominion bestowed upon man. "He is crowned as never king since; God bestows the crown, and angels sing the coronation anthem." For his renewed earth God must find a king, and that king is man. "Let them have dominion over all the earth." He is the Lord of the light, the ruler of the air and seas, the king of the mountains, the crowned monarch of creation. Sun and moon and stars appear for him; oceans roll around his feet; for him the lightnings play and the thunders peal; the clouds pour their blessings upon him, and for him the earth is rich with life; the desert of the ocean is peopled for his benefit; the birds make sweet music for his ear; all the treasures of the world are his; "Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet;" all the creatures acknowledge his right; the great world bows and owns its king. Such is the dignity of man.

1st. If man be thus naturally exalted, how deadly a thing is that sin which has destroyed his glory! In the light of the original dignity of man we see the hideousness of sin. Sin hath defiled the fair palace built by the Almighty hands and fashioned by the Almighty fingers; it lies in ruins all around; its pristine songs have given place to sadest wailings; "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain;" the palace is a graveyard—a graveyard made by sin. And far more complete is the ruin of its occupant. The image of God has become the image of worms. Man has flung away his splendid crown, and laid himself in the dust. Of this once God-like being is it said, "like the beast that perish;" "like sheep they are laid in the grave, and death shall feed on them." So, very suggestively, we speak of ourselves as the heirs of death and the children of the dust. The Romans called man by a name (homo) derived from their word for the ground (humus), and from the same Latin word we derive one of our commonest names for mankind—humanity. Conscious of our sin and fall, we call ourselves groundlings; for dust we are and unto dust must we now return; the very dust of earth indeed is the ashes of its sleeping sons. And thus too the dominion of man has been destroyed. Sin has driven his subjects into rebellion; his throne is hurled down, his crown is shattered, his sovereignty is a by-word! The very name of king has become distasteful by reason of the exceeding blackness of the crimes which have stained many of its wearers; crimes beneath whose weight the whole misgoverned world reels to-day. The lord of creation is the slave of sin!

2nd. If such be the natural dignity, and such the actual degradation of man, we can in some degree understand why Christ came to save him. A devout man cries, "When I consider the heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and stars which thou hast ordained, what is man that thou art mindful of him?" This thought is said to have had much influence over Byron. The world is the abode of man, over whose birth "the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted for joy." A being so honored, filling so mighty a place in the divine deliberations and plans, created in the divine image for divine purposes affecting the whole universe of being, the Son of God can graciously stoop to redeem. And so it was that in the fulness of time the word was made flesh, and man received his crowning glory in the God-man Christ Jesus.

3d. And here is the true dignity of man. The pride of long descent, the boast of heraldry, the pomp of power, are as nothing. In the image of God is man's glory; that image which every act of sin tends to disfigure and destroy. Literally so, for sin debases and degrades the human countenance, and reduces the man to the brute. By a wise instinct, our mother tongue has seized upon the word which expresses the perfect shape of man, and uses it to denote correctness of character. A just and honorable man we call upright. An unjust man is not an upright man; the image of God is defaced, his manhood is robbed of its glory. By all the God-given grandour of our nature, Christ beseeches us to abstain from sin. "Quit you like men," and sin must fly.

"To thine own self be true,
And it must follow as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

Every act of sin is an act of high treason against God; it is more; it is high treason against ourselves. The one patent of nobility is goodness; the one road to royalty is upright manhood; and beside these, the tawdry dignities of the world are utter vanity.

"Howe'er it be it seems to me,
'Tis only noble to be good;
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

Our Christian schools are the true schools of the kings. Every waif of humanity won from the devil and from sin is a soul saved, a king crowned, a new imperial anthem sung by angels in heaven.

4th. Then what must be the issue of the whole? God made man upright; he has fallen; Christ has stooped to save him; but well nigh the entire mass of humanity either has not heard of Christ, or hearing, will not receive him. Must we ring our hands over the hopeless ruin of man? Is this palace, so fair even in its ruin, to be ruined still, and flung at last untenanted upon space, to bear witness to the discomfiture of Jehovah and the devil's victory? Is man, the discrowned king, forever to lose crown and dominion? To ask is to answer. Man's sin may defer, but cannot frustrate, the counsels of God. The purpose so wisely formed, and so deliberately executed, shall be completely fulfilled, and the dominion man has lost shall be regained. In the epistle to the Hebrews (ii. 6-10) the apostle quotes the wide stretching declarations of the sovereignty of man uttered by the Psalmist (Psa. viii.) and at once applies them to Christ; unto the angels the world to come is not promised, but by this psalm it is promised to Christ. Already by the suffering of death he has been made a little lower than the angels; by his resurrection and ascension he has been crowned with glory and honor, and though we see all things put under him, these things fulfilled are a pledge of the whole, a promise of the restoration of man's dominion in him. Ere long the palace shall be rebuilt, and the king re-crowned, the hordes of sin be cleared away and the cold touch of death forever disappear; the world, built with care and love divine, shall be renewed with greater care and yet diviner love; the image of God shall shine resplendent in man; the paradise of God shall be restored and its boundary here shall be the circuit of the earth; the groanings of creation shall melt into songs of deliverance, and mingle with angelic minstrelsy, for

"The Lord of life the Lord of light,
The King of all created,
Shall back return to claim His right,
On clouds of glory seated;
With trumpet sound, and angel song,
And hallelujahs loud and long,
O'er death and hell—defeated."

Work of the Wind.

The wind has been playing general havoc in the South. The telegraph has given but short accounts of the recent tornado, but the local papers are filled with accounts of disaster. In Texas the tornado seems to have been especially severe. The village of Lisbon is seven miles from Dallas. About three o'clock in the afternoon of Tuesday last the residents of that place observed a cloud in the west whose it was not much larger than a man's hand. It was of a greenish color. Pretty soon it began to twirl, then it ascended and traveled in an easterly direction. At the same time a cloud appeared from the southeast. It was black and murky. The two heavily-charged bodies of electricity continued to travel toward each other; the lightning became vivid, almost blinding, and soon they met over Lisbon, and with a deafning crash of thunder the work of destruction began and was quickly ended. Not more than three minutes' time sufficed to lay waste one of the finest sections of the country in Texas. Of the two clouds one appeared in a funnel shape, and although there was a heavy rain, much heavier than usual, it could not be said that it was a waterspout, for the wind seemed to come from the funnel-shaped cloud, or at least it went the course in which that cloud traveled until it collided with the cloud from the southeast. Then followed wind, hail, rain, death and destruction. Hail-stones were found as large as a goose egg. Several people were killed outright and many others badly hurt. Numerous houses on the outskirts were demolished. Advices from different places in Texas give details of loss of life and wide-spread destruction.

South Carolina seems to have suffered even more severly. The tornado swept over that State and over Georgia on Wednesday. Accounts of the storm at Walterboro, Colleton county, have already been published, but the dispathes did not tell by any means the extent of the storm. In Walterboro alone sixteen persons were killed, and the number of injured cannot be estimated. Among the killed was a young man who had been married but a week. All the churches in the town—and there were seven—were completely demolished. Houses were destroyed in a twinkling. Pianos, stoves, bedding and all sorts of heavy as well as light household articles were blown in every direction. The clothing of ladies was blown entirely off in the streets, and their cries mingling with those of the injured and of mothers who had lost their children were most pitiable. Probably seven-tenths of the residents of the place are homeless, and subscriptions for their relief are being sent in.

One of the sufferers by the storm says: "The storm came from the south, blew straight for about one minute, then shifted to northwest and came back with new fury, striking and bounding here and there. The trees are piled with their tops both ways. Several are snapped short off, and, as far as I have seen, not a pine is standing anywhere in the track of the storm. The streets are blocked with trees and the roads to the east almost impassable. The destruction commenced about a mile south of the village and came straight for us. One hundred trains of steam cars running over bridges at full speed could not have created a more terrible noise. I believe I was dazed by the approaching horror, of which somehow I gathered an idea. I said to a young man standing near me: 'Something terrible is coming; Walterboro' has never yet experienced what we shall see to-day.' I saw it, I heard it, and was powerless. What could I do but wait the result? To add to the horrors of the night, a thunder storm hung over the village and the most terrible thunder continued the whole night."

The Buffalo Christian Advocate says: "A matter of great interest concerning the Jews is stated in a letter written by Rev. Dr. Shedd from Hamadan, Persia. It is to the effect that one of the oldest colonies of Jews is found in Hamadan. Their ancestors were carried captive by the Assyrian king twenty-five centuries ago. For months past the colony has been agitated by the question, 'Is not Jesus the Messiah?' Four of the chief men, the heads of one thousand houses (about five thousand people), have, after long trial, been publicly baptized, and many others are asking to confess Christ. As in the days of the Apostles, the whole city is moved, and one Nestorian helper is day and night beset with Jews seeking instruction in the New Testament."

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Having returned from the west about six months ago, I must confess that, owing to the circumstances with which I am surrounded, were it not for the reading of THE RESTITUTION I would entirely despond. Here, in these parts, infidelity and skepticism predominate; sectarianism among the whites, is at a very low ebb. I have been trying to proclaim "the truth" in my weak manner for about three months. What I have done already has had a considerable effect. Many believe, but they do not think they can take the Master's yoke upon them. We are certainly living in the "perilous times" spoken of in the Scriptures, and it certainly becomes us to be on the watch. To my mind, everything indicates the near return of our Savior.

Yours in Christ,

BREVITIES.

Palestine is to have a railroad from Jaffa (Joppa) to Jerusalem. Gen. F. D. Lovett, of Cincinnati, Ohio, has the contract for building. It is to be a narrow gauge, and the distance is about forty miles.

Simultaneously with the eruption of Etna, in Italy, the inhabitants of a village in the Russian province of Podolsk were suddenly frightened by a subterranean thunder, followed by an earthquake. The people flew out of their houses, and beheld a startling spectacle. The houses were moving, together with the ground beneath them, down the slope toward the river Dniester; a number of the houses fell in ruins; many trees were thrown down and buried in the ground, and cracks appeared in the earth, filled with water. In five minutes everything became quiet. There was no loss of life; but thirty houses had been destroyed, and others were carried twenty feet from their original location and rendered unfit for habitation.

De Serfa Pinto, a Portuguese, has just retraced the line of the first expedition of Livingstone, who went up from Cape Town, crossed the great southern desert, and then turning westward reached the coast of Africa, the first white man to cross the interior of the continent. Pinto, starting from the west coast, pushed his way inland, armed his party by repairing some abandoned rifles Cameron left in his track three years ago, fought his way to the Zambesi, and, after measuring the great falls Livingstone discovered and finding them 555 feet high, went south, nearly perishing in the desert, but finally reaching the Transvaal. The most remarkable discovery made by Pinto was of a race with features like the Hottentots, but white and with no hair.

The fine mural paintings discovered in the grounds of the Palazzo Farnesina, in Rome, during the excavation for the Tiber works, have now been nearly all detached from the walls. Two experienced artists were summoned from Pompeii to perform the delicate operation. These frescoes, great and small together, are thirty-two in number. They are fine works in the Greco-Roman style. The lower portion of the walls is devoted to landscapes. Above are dramatic, historical, or mythological scenes, which the archæologists are endeavoring to interpret. The figures have marvellous artistic merit. Of very correct draughtsmanship, in color and effect they resemble Dutch sketches, and although at least twenty centuries old, they are as fresh as if recently painted. Each painting when detached, with the plaster adhering to it, is carefully packed in a separate case.

The interest of the Anthropological Exhibition at Moscow, Russia, is on the increase. There are already over one hundred Russian types of the old times beginning with the tenth century. There are many holy pictures representing the saints; also portraits, engravings, and casts of the Czar, statesmen, and other notable persons by Russian artists who, in the sixteenth century, were brought in Russia by order of the Czars, along with other European rarities. Perhaps the most interesting exhibit in the department of types is that of living typical persons of different Asiatic tribes under the sceptre of the Czar; Sarts, Tashkentzi, and Egyptians are to be seen, placed amid their usual home surroundings. Besides the Russian types, there are types of Oriential tribes that existed thousands of years ago, but are now extinct. Among these are contemporaries of Moses; there is Nebto, the daughter of Sesostris, and there is Pharaoh Menentes. There are also many casts from the ruins of ancient cities, and from temples and monuments.

SUPERSTITION OF THE POPE.

The Italian correspondent of an American journal relates the following incident, which shows the mental weakness of the man who according to the dogmas to the Roman Catholic Church, is to be considered infallible: "One morning when Commander Sterbini was about to serve him with some salt, the cellar slipped from the tray and fell to the table. The Pope rose from his seat, looked at the ground to see if any salt had fallen there, and then said: 'Only see, the salt is upset, and had it fallen on the ground I believe I should not have lived over to-day.' Taking out a note-book he wrote in it a moment and then observed: 'We shall see whether we do not have the loss of some beloved Cardinal to deplore before long.' Nine days after Cardinal Acquini died, and the Pope called on Sterbini to read aloud the note he had made in the book, and then said to those around him: 'Had the salt been scattered on the floor instead of upon the table, verily I believe I should be standing now before the judgment-seat.'"

POETRY.

The Mourner.

"Think not the Almighty wills one idle pang, one needless tear."

Mourner and I why droop thy spirits?
Wherefore silent tear-drops fall
Down thy cheeks, now pale with anguish,
Telling griefs that are not small.
Earth's best joys to thee seem languid,
Quickly passing hence away;
Hope's bright star is faintly gleaming,
O'er thy dark and troubled day.

But a hand unseen is guiding
All thy footsteps, by his will;
Not one pang, nor tear of sorrow,
He will ever cause for ill.
Every little flower unfolding,
From the earth, his love declares;
Every little bird of heaven,
In that love and kindness shares.

And shall not the same kind being,
Who so clothes the tender flower,
Guard and keep thee in thy weakness,
By his own Almighty power?
Yes, though friends (too lowly cherished
In thy heart's affection deep,
Coldly turn from all thy kindness,
Leaving thee alone to weep.

Though afflictions deep abide thee,
Sickness, death, and want assail;
He will not forsake nor leave thee,
For his word can never fail.
Then weep not, nor be disheartened,
His substitute to his will;
Not one pang, or tear of sorrow,
He will ever cause for ill.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Strong Government.—No. 3.

We referred to the case of the queen of Sheba, and quoted so much by way of comparison, to show that if the glory of Solomon's kingdom, and the beautiful arrangement after which his reign was conducted and all the affairs of his household, and the order of his devotional exercises as connected with the house of the Lord, brought forth such bursts of admiration from this good queen, and sentiments of commendation and congratulation to all associated with him in his kingdom. What will be the expressions of admiration with the kings of the earth who shall prove loyal to the throne when a "greater than Solomon" shall come and

Plant his heavenly kingdom here,
And glorious in his saints?

How much more will there be to admire? Was Solomon's reign glorious? Messiah's reign will exceed it sevenfold. Was his kingdom proverbial for beauty and magnificence? Messiah's kingdom will be doubly so. And many kings pay tribute to Solomon and assist to perpetuate his throne; and was the peor of the people happy under his administration, and could say, "God save the king?" believing it to be a strong government. Was there peace in his days? There shall be "abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth," in Messiah's times. Did the "kings of Tarshish and of the isles, bring presents to the kings of Sheba and Jeba offer gifts?" Did surrounding rulers reverence him? All kings shall fall down before Messiah; all nations shall serve him, "and all dominion (or rulers) shall serve him." Did Solomon's dominion extend over a large era of territory? Unlimited will be Messiah's. "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." His "kingdom (will be) under the whole heaven." Dan. vii. 27. It will pervade over the entire world, "and the stone (representing the kingdom) that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Dan. ii. 35. "And the kingdoms (all the kingdoms) are become our Lord's and his Anointed One." Did Solomon's name endure, and were men blessed under his mild reign? Yes; but more so with Messiah. "His name shall endure forever; his name shall be continued (to be held in grateful remembrance by countless myriads) as long as the sun," (or shall be as a Son to continue his Father's name forevermore). "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow," etc. Phil. ii. 9-11.

"Jesus the name high over all,
In hell, or earth, or sky,
Angels and men before it fall,
And devils fear and fly."

"And men shall be blessed in him," as his administration will be fraught with the greatest possible benefits to the subjects of his government; and all nations shall dwell upon the earth in prosperity, and undisturbed peace and tranquility. For in his days it is said, "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariots (of war) in the fire." "He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the finest of wheat." Psa. xlvi. 9; cxlvii. 14; compare Ezek. xxxix. 9. "And he shall rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall convert their swords into ploughshares, and change their spears into pruninghooks; (or scythes for reaping down the golden grain); nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn (the art of) war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid." Micah iv. 3, 4. The empire will not only go under the name of peace, but will be peace. The Messiah will not say, "let us have peace," as one has said, upon a corrupt and false basis, but it will be peace, founded upon the immutable principles of "judgment and justice," which will be the habitation or stability of his throne, while equity and truth will go before his face. Hence, "Men shall be blessed in him; (hence) all nations shall call him blessed." Psa. lxxii. And he will now be realized as "the desire of all nations," and they will look no longer for "the coming man."

Again, was Solomon's kingdom the theme of conversation, and did men applaud the dignity of the King and the glory of his throne? What does David say, touching his greater Son and his kingdom? "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised; and his greatness is unsearchable. One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts. I will speak of the glorious honor of thy majesty and of thy wondrous works. And men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts; and I will declare thy greatness. They shall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness. .... All thy works shall praise thee, O Messiah; and thy saints shall bless thee. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power; to make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom. Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion (or reign) endureth throughout all generations, (or ages). Psa. cxlv.

Did Solomon have his Hiram with his numerous stalwart attendants to acquiesce in all his desire in cheerfully sending his servant in bringing the timber of the fir and cedar tree from the forest of Lebanon, and to excavate gr at and "costly stones" from the quarry to lay the foundation of the house of the Lord and to erect other suitable buildings? And did Hiram furnish artists who were skilled in making brass ornaments to beautify the house, and was the navy of Hiram always at Solomon's service to convey gold from Ophir with algum trees and precious stones? Was there no lack of assistance and material to fully mete out the desire of the king's heart in completing this wonderful temple and perfecting every wise arrangement in his kingdom? And was gold in abundance? Yes, God moved upon the heart of the king of Tyre as he moves the waters of the sea, and turned the hearts of many of the stubborn and rebellious to the favor of Solomon "as he turns the streams in the south;" and he had all the aid and all the material he needed to accomplish the full desire of his heart and his fairest dreams were realized. Surely

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps on the sea
And rides upon the storm.

"Deep in unfathomable mines
With never failing skill,
He treasures up his rich designs
And works his gracious will."

And now, as God executed his purpose in the case of Solomon, his kingdom, setting him upon the throne of Israel and in the erection of the beautiful temple which was lustrious by the abundance of gold and precious stones with which it was so richly ornamented—a place for the people to worship him—effectually disarming the enemy and giving peace and prosperity for a time throughout the whole realm of his dominions, will he not more so especially interpose in the times of Messiah—the greater than Solomon—when he shall come to the throne of his father David,—David's greater Son, —and when a greater temple than Solomon's will be erected, and when a greater city than the city of David shall be rebuilt,—"the city of the great King,"—"Jerusalem, which now is, and is in bondage with her children?" Will he not raise up other Hiram's and Cyruses, and raise up millionaires and wealthy misers who have been toiling and hoarding up gold for this very purpose, of beautifying the temple at Jerusalem, though not intentionally? But, will not the time have come then when they, as well as others, will realize the truth of the statement, that few believe now, and fewer act as though they did believe it in any sense whatever, the way they greed after it and grasp it with almost a deadly grip, namely,—"The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts." Haggai ii. 8. No matter if it is locked up in Herrick's fire-proof safes, or in the most impregnable bank vaults, or enclosed tightly within indestructible bags of the miser, bound up with ten thousand cords, which has so long been a daily pleasure for them to bind and unbind, or encased in jars hermetically sealed; when the hour for use comes, the safes will be opened, the vaults will disgorge, the bags will be emptied of their treasures, the jars will be broken and the precious will come out from their many hiding places for the Master's use, as he shall have need of it as when he needed the colt for his entree in humiliation into Jerusalem, (Mark xi. 1-10); so whatever he may desire in his majestic entree the second time in the Holy City will be granted. All heaven and earth will be at his disposal, and freely contribute to that end—to render his entrance there and his kingdom an august spectacle, both deserving and worthy of the distinguished honors which shall there and then be conferred upon him. Angels and men will stand ready there and then to crown him Lord of all, both King of the Gentiles and "the King of the Jews," and gladly acquiesce that it is he "whose right it is to reign." And he will enter Jerusalem in a truly regal aspect so different from the first, and the people will accord to him a warmer welcome than ever. Did they cry out before, saying, "Hosanna, blessed, blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Blessed be the kingdoms of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest." At the second time there will be a far grander ovation and much warmer welcome than this. The sunshine of the coming glory will leave in comparison that as the dimness of the pale moon.

But, let us see for a moment what the prophet says in regard to the august splendor of the coming kingdom, and in regard to the numerous contributaries to that end, and the disposition that shall be made of those powers who refuse to aid in the matter, and deny homage and loyalty to the King: "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Lift up thine eyes round about, and see; all they gather themselves together, they come to thee; thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Then thou shalt see and flow together, (observe, 'all nations shall flow unto it,' Isa. ii. 2; compare Psa. cii. 22, Zech. viii. 20-22); and thine heart shall be glad and enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee. The forces (or wealth—many) of the Gentiles shall come (or be made subservient) unto thee, the multitude of camels, shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; and they of Sheba shall come, they shall bring gold," (as in the times of Solomon). Observe—"And the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, ... in great abundance," Zech. xiv. 14; and incense and they shall show forth the praises of the Lord. All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee; the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee, they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory. Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows, (or resting places—doves being emblematic of peace messengers). Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee. (Thus, we observe none come empty handed, but freighted down with the precious metal, that there shall be such a superabundance that, if need be, to pave the very streets of the city). And the sons of strangers shall build in thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee, ... Thy gates shall be open constantly; they shall not be shut day nor night, that men may bring unto thee the forces (i. e., the glory and wealth) of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. For the nations and kingdoms that will not serve thee, shall perish. All nations and kingdoms now must either become tributary and loyal to the Messianic throne or those nations will be utterly wasted; they must kiss the Son as admonished to do, or "perish from the way." Psa. ii. 12. And the mode of their destruction will be the most simple through ordinary and natural channels, as prophecy clearly defines it. "And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain," and the result will be in the fearful words of prophecy: "Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their sockets, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth." Zech. xiv, 12, 17. But to return. The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious. The sons also that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee the city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel. Whereas, thou hast been forsaken and hated so that no man went through thee; (this could not be very well applied to the popular churches as many do so misapply it); I will make thee an eternal excellency and a joy of many generations (or ages). Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shall suck the breast of kings; (figures employed to express the readiness and willingness on the part of subordinate powers and the kings of the earth to acquiesce to every overture made on the part of Zion's King, and withhold naught from what they may possess that may, in any way, contribute to the majesty, dignity, and glory of the divine government). .... For brass I will bring gold, (as abundant as this metal was in Solomon's days, so will gold now become equally as plenty,) and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood, brass, and for stones iron. These comparisons are made in proof of the plenitude of fulness of all these rich material there will be at the King's disposal to do with them as seemeth good in his sight. I will also make thy officers peace, and thine executors righteousness, (i. e., the subordinate rulers and officials will assist in administering the government strictly in accordance with justice and truth). Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders. "They shall not hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain," Isa. xl. 9; but thou shalt call thy walls salvation, and thy gates praise. "In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah." We have a strong city, or government. Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. "The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee, but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. .... Thy people also shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land forever. .... A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation; I the Lord will hasten it in his (i. e., Messiah's) time." Isa. lx.

We hope to be excused in quoting so largely from this chapter of Isaiah, from the fact that there is none other in the Old Testament that speaks in such glowing terms and describes in such beautiful imagery the power, glory, strength, and majesty of the incoming government and reign of Messiah. What language could paint in fairer colors the superal splendor and the ineffable glory that shall there obtain? We might add much more from the word touching the grandeur and glory of the kingdom and the greatness of the dominions, but let it suffice. We fear that we have gone far beyond the bounds already generally accorded, but may the importance of the subject prove an apology for its length.

And now, brethren and friends, let me say, in conclusion, is not such a government worth living for? Does it not commend itself to our favor, and do we not see enough in it to wean us from this world as it is, and its beggarly elements? And is not the bright prospect of living and reigning with the ever blessed Messiah, and becoming a happy constituent of his strong government, and partaking of the splendid privileges and basking in the sunshine of its glory, a sufficient stimulant to redouble our ardor in "the work of faith, the labor of love, and the patience of hope," carefully and vigorously enduring unto the end, bearing the cross, that we may finally wear the crown? To this end may the gracious benedictions of heaven be accorded you. Amen.

YELLOW FEVER.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., July 13—9:30 p. m.—Judge Ray died to-night at 9 o'clock and was buried almost immediately afterward in Elmwood Cemetry, under the auspices of the Masons. His son lies in a critical condition.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., July 14.—No new cases have been reported. Mrs. Tobin, living on Bradford street, died this morning at six o'clock and was buried at eight. This leaves but one person in the entire city, Judge Ray's son, who is sick with fever, and he is reported dying.

MEMPHIS, July 13.—Water Valley, Miss., telegraphs that one case of fever has occurred there, and that proved fatal. Much anxiety existed.

LONDON, July 12—5 a. m.—The remains of the Prince Imperial, escorted by the Royal Horse Artillery, arrived at Chiselhurst at nine o'clock last night. Immense crowds of people witnessed the arrival of the procession. The corpse was transferred to the hall in the Camden House, which had been prepared for its reception.

LONDON, July 12—2:30 p. m.—The funeral of the Prince Imperial took place in accordance with the arrangements already published. In addition to the notable persons heretofore mentioned the Russian, German and Danish Ambassadors to England were present. A body of Paris workmen viewed the coffin previous to the funeral.

LONDON, Eng., July 13.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Alexandria reports that the Egyptian steamer Samanoot has been lost at sea. She was returning from Mauritius. Twenty-three natives and two Europeans perished.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 14.—Advices received by the National Board of Health state that the yellow fever excitement at Water Valley, Miss., has abated, and there are no new cases.

LONDON, July 14.—A dispatch from Constantinople represents that the Circassians are terrorizing the District of Adabazar, on the east coast of the sea of Marmora, by murdering and plundering.

DIED.

BECCH—Wednesday, June 18, 1879, John N. Beech, aged seventy-three years and seventeen days.

He had been ailing several months past, but it was not until Friday, June 13, that he was taken dangerously ill. At that time he was attacked with gall stone colic from which he suffered intensely and which occasioned peritonitis. From this time he considered his days were few and so told his family and friends. All Friday, Saturday and Sunday he suffered great pain, but through all he bore up heroically. Sunday night he called us to his bedside and told us he was going to leave us soon, and conversed clearly and calmly, making known his wishes concerning the disposition of his property. About noon on Monday he went into a semi-conscious state from which he was aroused with greatest difficulty. He soon aroused, he called his wife, children and grandchildren to him and kissed them all a fond good-bye. From this he lingered part of the time wholly conscious and part of the time only partially so, until Wednesday morning, when he died easily as he would pass to sleep. He died peacefully as a man in full hope; he died as he lived—respected and beloved by all. A wife, one son and daughter are left to mourn their loss.

KIRBY—At Henderson, Ky., July 3, 1879, Marianna B. Kirby, aged forty-eight.

Sister Kirby is one we shall all miss much, knowing none who can fill her place. She was one of the pioneers of the truth in this locality. My acquaintance with her during the past twenty years, was of the most pleasant character. Like Timothy of old, she was conversant with the Scriptures from achild. The Bible, with her, was the one book, conveying one great, grand and beautiful system of teaching from Genesis to Revelation. Modest and unassuming in her manners, always keeping self out of view. Amidst all the weakness of the flesh, she never lost her love for the truth. She was always ready to assist the enquiring mind in the understanding of the word. Her capabilities in this direction were more than ordinary, having a remarkable memory and being fluent in speech. Her work is done. For the last twenty years she has earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, and could say with Paul "I have kept the faith," and now her record is with God who looks at the heart. She now sleeps sweetly in Jesus, ready to come forth to the resurrection of the just from heaven when she shall behold his face in righteousness, and be satisfied, when she awakes with his likeness.

POETRY.

Oh, That the Hour.

L. M. BURGESS.

Oh, that the hour were near,
When I should see His face!
When all my loved and dear,
Saved by His bounteous grace,
Should kneel with me before
The great white throne
To praise Him for His love
And all that it has done.

Oh, that the hour would come
When sin and grief should cease;
Discord to music turn
Before the Prince of Peace!
Then might our hearts be heaven,
Our wilderness bloom
Freed from the thorns that in them now
Find such abundant room.

Oh, for the hour when we
With lips and eyes shall sing
The sweetest songs that e'er were sung
To praise our glorious King!
When every thought shall praise
His goodness and His power,
And His most gracious love shall be
Our theme in every hour.

Oh, that the hour were near!
Nearer perchance it is
Than e'er we dream, with all its joys,
Its satisfying bliss.
He knows our hearts, and when
We plead "Thy kingdom come,"
His willing steps will hasten on
To take His wanderers home.

SELECTIONS.

The Silver Cup.—An Illustration of the Resurrection.

A gentleman of the country, upon the occasion of some signal service this man had done him, gave him a curious silver cup. David, (for that was the man's name), was exceedingly fond of the present, and preserved it with the greatest care. But one day by accident, his cup fell into a vessel of aquafortis; he, taking it to be no other than common water, thought his cup safe enough; and, therefore neglected it until he had dispatched an affair of importance, about which his master had employed him, imagining it would be then time enough to take out his cup. At length a fellow servant came into the same room, when the cup was near dissolved, and looking into the aquafortis, asked David who had thrown anything into that vessel. David said that his cup accidentally fell into the water. Upon this, his fellow servant informed him that it was not common water, but aquafortis, and that his cup was almost dissolved in it. When David heard this, and was satisfied with the truth of it with his own eyes, he heartily grieved for the loss of his cup; and, at the same time, he was astonished to see the liquor as clear as if nothing had been dissolved in it, or mixed with it. As, after a little while, he saw the small remains of it vanish, and could not now perceive the least particle of the silver, he utterly despaired of ever seeing his cup more. Upon this he bitterly bewailed his loss, with many tears, and refused to be comforted.

His fellow-servant, pitying him in this condition of sorrow, told him that their master could restore him the same cup again. David disregarded this, as utterly impossible. "What do you talk of?" said he to his fellow-servant. "Do you not know that the cup is entirely dissolved, and not the least bit of the silver to be seen? Are not all the little invisible parts of the cup mingled with the aquafortis, and become parts of the same mass? How then, can my master, or any man alive, produce the silver anew, and restore my cup? It never can be; I give it over for lost; I am sure I shall never see it again."

His fellow-servant still insisted that their master could restore the same cup; and David as earnestly insisted that it was absolutely impossible. While they were debating this point, their master came in and asked them what they were disputing about. When they had informed him, he says to David, "What you so positively pronounce to be impossible, you shall see me do with very little trouble. Fetch me," said he to the other servant, "some salt water, and pour it into the vessel of aquafortis. Now look," says he; "the silver will presently fall to the bottom of the vessel in a white powder."

When David saw this, he began to have good hopes of seeing his cup restored. Next his master ordered the servant to drain off the liquor, and to take up the powdered silver and melt it. Thus it was reduced into one solid piece; and then, by the silversmith's hammer, formed into a cup of the same shape as before. Thus David's cup was restored with a very small loss of its weight and value.

It is no uncommon thing for men like David in this parable, to imagine that to be impossible, which yet persons of greater skill and wisdom than themselves can easily perform. David was as positive that his master could not restore his cup, as unbelievers are, that it is incredible God should raise the dead; and he had as much reason on his side as they. If a human body, dead, crumbles into dust, and mingles with the earth, or with the water of the sea, so as to be discernible no more, so the silver cup was dissolved into parts invisible, and mingled with the mass of aquafortis. Is it not then easy to be conceived, that as a man has wisdom and power enough to bring these parts of the silver to be visible again, and to reduce them to a cup as before, so God, the Maker of heaven and earth, must have wisdom and power enough to bring the parts of a dissolved human body together, and to form them into a body again? What though David could not restore his own cup? Was that a reason that no man could do it? And when his master had promised to restore it, what though David could not possibly conjecture by what method his master would do it? This was no proof that his master was at a loss for a method. So though men cannot raise the dead, yet God who is infinitely wiser and stronger, can. And though we cannot find out the method by which he will do this, yet we are sure that he who at first took the dust of the ground, and formed it into the body of man, can, with the same ease, take the dust into which my body shall be dissolved, and form it into a human body again. Nay, even if a body be burnt, and consumed by fire, the parts of that body are no more really lost than the invisible particles of the dissolved cup. As David, then was wrong in thinking that it was impossible for his master to restore his cup, it must be at least equally wrong for us to think it impossible that God should raise the dead.—Hallet.

Bearing the Cross.

Much is said, among professed Christians about "bearing the cross;" but I fear little is understood or really practiced in this matter. Some seem to think speaking in meeting is the cross they must bear; and when they have done that they think little more about the cross. I apprehend that is a very small item in bearing the cross. Men are all naturally in love with this present world. To this world we must become crucified. Crucifixion is a hard death; but few persons are willing to die such a death; there is, however, no other way of entering into the kingdom of God. We must be "crucified unto the world, and the world unto" us. Most professed Christians, it is to be feared, have made a covenant with the world, not to part with it; and the tempter satisfies them if they speak in meeting sometimes, and give something to support the gospel, they may keep their covenant with the world; but, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John ii. 15.

How then are we to be separated from the love of the world, and be crucified unto it?

First—By a believing view of the Lord Jesus Christ, who became poor—was despised of men—a man of sorrow, acquainted with grief—endured reproach—resisted temptation, though he "suffered, being tempted"—when he was reviled, reviled not again—murmured not, though wounded, bruised, put to grief, and his soul made an offering for sin, scourged, spit upon, his hands and feet pierced with nails, his soul in agony; all this he bore, and no lisp of impatience ever escaped him. Would you be crucified unto the world, go learn of him; contemplate his poverty, his life, his sufferings, his resignation, his patience, his loving and forgiving spirit, till the whole mind is humbled within you; and then realize this truth—"If so be we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Rom. viii. 17. Do you ask what it is to suffer with him? I answer—To suffer with the same meek, patient, forgiving, resigned spirit that he had. This leads me to say—

Second—If you would bear your cross and be crucified unto the world, remember, every trial of your life, whether temporal or spiritual, personal or family, from friends or enemies, direct or indirect, great or small, of short continuance or long, or whatever be the nature or character of it, is by the appointment or permission of that God who willeth not the death of the sinner, but who is seeking by all these trials to crucify you unto the world, and fit you to be glorified with his Son Jesus Christ. How shall this design of our heavenly Father be accomplished? It cannot be, unless you "bear your cross." Do you ask again—What is it to bear my cross? I answer—It is to suffer all the trials, of which I have spoken, patiently. You are not to quarrel with the instrumentality God may employ, nor indulge in fretfulness under it. If you do, you do not "bear the cross." And though you should speak like an angel in meeting, yet if you fret and complain under any of the trials of life, by which God is seeking to crucify you unto the world, it is hypocrisy for you to talk about your "bearing the cross"—you are but deceiving your own soul. God has assured us, "all things work together for good to them that love him," Rom. viii. 28; yet, you can murmur, fret, and complain at those things which God has permitted or appointed! Alas, alas! Do not dream you are ripening for the kingdom of God while this is the case. No, you are ripening for death—for perdition. Saith our Savior, "In your patience possess ye your souls." We shall learn soon, or when it is too late, that those words are words of solemn and awful import. If you indulge in murmuring, complaining, or impatience at any trials, insults, sufferings, or injuries, from whatever instrumentality they may come, and that spirit is increasing upon you; you are just as surely traveling in the road to perdition as God has said, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." I speak not now of one, "overtaken in a fault," to which all are liable in the hour of temptation, but I speak of him upon whom this spirit is not abating but increasing; and it is increasing, except we bear our cross daily; for every day will bring some cross, in some form. Happy the soul who is constantly looking to God for grace to bear every cross. We may pray to have the cross removed; but we may not pray for it only in submission to the will of God. "If it be possible let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not my will but thine be done." That is our example; and we cannot safely follow any other.

"My grace is sufficient for thee," will often be the answer; and did we know now what we shall know hereafter, we should praise God for every trial and every cross we have to bear; yea, a living faith will praise God even now, that he does not leave us to our own way, lest we should be like the children of Israel, whose impatient murmurings were answered by giving them "flesh," but "leanness" was "sent into their souls." "Be patient in all things;" that is, bearing thy cross; then, when Christ appears, you shall have a crown.

Watchers for the Day-Star.

The words "until the day dawn and the day-star arise" (2 Pet. i. 19), as referring to Christ's second coming, imply that it is night now. And so it is, comparatively speaking. The Scriptures speak of our dead as "those that sleep in Jesus." But "they that sleep, sleep in the night;" and until the sainted sleepers hear the voice of the Master, as he comes to awaken them out of sleep, the morning will not begin.

Yes, it is night yet, compared with the millennial day about to dawn. It is night as yet, while the sun of our life is behind the cloud. It is night as yet, while the shadows of sin and wickedness stretch their gloomy pall across the earth. And as I hear the Master saying to me, "Feed the flock of God over which the Holy Ghost hath made you minister," I know that I am a shepherd, keeping watch over my "flock by night." But this is not all. I, for one, am watching the day-star. I am looking to catch the gleams of its coming glory. And I should count myself worthy of the severest rebuke of my Lord if, coming suddenly, he should find me sleeping.

Upon the pinnacle of the temple in Jerusalem a watchman used to be stationed, who was to keep his eye upon the eastern horizon, and at the first gleam of sunrise was to give the signal to those below, that they might commence the morning worship. Jewish writers tell us that for the watchman to have gone to sleep would have been such an offence that he would have instantly been degraded from his office, the penalty in such cases being that the watchman should be stripped of his garments, and those garments burned with fire. "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem," says God, by the mouth of Isaiah. "Behold, I come as a thief," says Jesus in the Apocalypse; "blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments." For one I am determined not to be beguiled into sleep or silence by the words of the worldly-wise, who incredulously ask, "Where are the signs of his coming?"

Nor do I believe that the coming can be long delayed. All the promises seem to be ripening. The signs are rapidly fulfilling. The clock of time seems just ready to peal out the hour of morning watch, and I feel that I have no right to shut my eyes to the signs of the dawn. And, as standing in my watch-tower in the Christian pulpit, you shout up to me, "Watchman, what of the night?" you will hear no other answer than this: "The morning cometh, and also the night"—the morning of resurrection glory to all God's saints; the night of outer darkness to such as are found in unbelief.

In the rapid spread of the gospel among all nations, and in the pouring out of God's spirit upon all flesh, I see the tokens of the morning. In the rapid growth of infidelity, in the daring blasphemies of Antichrist, I see the most unmistakable signs of approaching night. And so to you who are weeping by new-made graves, where the darkness of death hovers; to you who are sometimes appalled and affrighted at the unchecked ravages of sin and wickedness in the world, I repeat the inspiring words of Paul, "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." And to you who would save souls from sinking into the shades of endless night, I would repeat those other words of Christ himself, "Work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

But you may say, objecting, "The majority of people do not agree with you in regard to the possible nearness of the morning." But that is no objection. The majority of the Jews had no idea of the nearness of Christ's first coming when it occurred. Only a few eyes recognized the star in the East when it appeared. Only a few out of the great throng of Hebrew worshippers had any apprehension of the wondrous event that was occurring.

"When came in flesh the Incarnate Word
The heedless world slept on;
And only simple shepherds heard
That God had sent His Son."

And Christ gives us intimation after intimation that it will be precisely so with his second advent, that comparatively few will be looking for it, that the great mass will be astonished and overwhelmed by its suddenness.

And therefore he says, "Watch ye, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh!"

A Common Error about the Christian Life.

That the Christian life is all in the beginning. I am sure that the general thought, while it is not too much concerned about the beginning of Christianity in the soul—because it cannot be too much concerned about it—is not enough anxious about its subsequent development. It would have been just as wise for the ancient racer, after he had gone through the training process, and stripped himself for the contest, and entered the arena, and run on three steps, to have stopped there, and declared the race won and himself entitled to the prize. Why, the judge would answer, the race is but begun. Your preparation may have been assiduous and admirable, but it is in the law of the arena that the entire course must be accomplished, and the prize adjudged as you shall have carried yourself around the whole circle. The race itself is the only test of your preparation and beginning.

But, somehow, we have too generally come to think that if we can only get a man to acknowledge his sinfulness, and walk for a time in darkness, and then pass out into a better state of feeling, to break forth in joy and songfulness, to see new light in the sun, and fresh greenness in the grass, to profess trust in Jesus Christ, that then the whole race is run, the victor's crown is on the brow.

Now it may be that a man passing through such an experience has become a Christian, and it may be he has not. You cannot predicate Christianity altogether upon feeling. It is not all fervors, and raptures, and high excitements, and suffusions of sentiment. These may be the glorious door into the noble Christian life and they may be the door into delusion. Christianity is deeper than feeling. Christianity is a changed nature. To be a Christian is to be a new creation in Christ Jesus. Christianity is the setting of the purposes towards God; it is resolute determination to arrange our action with, and not athwart, the will of God; it is living as ever in our great Taskmaster's eye. And so the only test of the truth of the beginning is the whole race succeeding. "By their fruits ye shall know them," said the Savior. The genuineness of the new life is to be judged of what you do each day in your business, in your family, amid your pleasures—not so much by what you thought you felt on some dim day years back. Christianity is more a life than a feeling. If the life bloom other than Christian the strong presumption must be that the root out of which the life issues is other than Christian.

It is the spring time, and I want flowers in my garden. I go to a seed store and ask for hyacinth bulbs. Unless my sense of smell be acute the man may sell me onions instead of hyacinth bulbs. They look very much alike. I take them home and plant them, and water them, and watch them. If instead of the perfumed pyramid of flowers I get some weed or vegetable, then I am sure I have not planted hyacinths. So it is with Christianity. Unless the bloom be Christian it is certain that the bulb is not. The only test of saintship is endurance in saintship. The beginning is not everything in Christianity.—Dr. Wayland Hoyt.

Ætna—Graphic Account of the Late Volcanic Eruption.

In the same week the South as well as the North of Italy suffered a great disaster. Mount Ætna, the highest volcano of Europe and highest mountain of Italy except the Alps, woke from its usual uneasy slumber and poured a river of fire upon the lovely green slopes and plains below. The inhabitants of the villas and the numerous villages in its vicinity were alarmed on a May afternoon by several shocks of earthquake, by thunder, lightning, heavy showers of rain and awful subterranean noises. Three new craters were seen on the summit of the mountain which for a week poured out burning lava, smoke and cinders. This stream said to have been fifteen hundred feet wide in some places, and from fifteen to thirty feet high, ran down the mountain at first with frightful rapidity. But its course was slower as it reached the lower part of the mountain and the plains, and it was divided into three parts. At night it was a living mass of fire, above which was seen a cloud of fine, black, metallic sand, that borrowed the red hue of the lava and resembled the aurora borealis. In the day time the lava in some places looked dark and dead, as if it were fifty years old, but its own weight often broke open the moving mass, and the waves would slip one over the other, revealing a fearful mass of fire within.

The roads near the eruption were like a battle-field. Soldiers had charge of them and were ranged along the sides to keep order, while some were placed on the edges of the advancing stream of fire to prevent the curious from advancing too near to it. It had a forward and a lateral movement, and was liable at any moment to fall over on those who approached too near, as some did to light cigars.

One line of people was leaving the doomed country, with such relics of their possessions as they could carry away with them, and another was hastening forward to view the wonderful scene. The unfortunate owners of vineyards in the track of the lava saw the vines, the olive-trees, the barns, the fields of grain, and even the houses, burned by the fire and covered with a thick stratum of lava. Years must pass before this can be cultivated, and thus men who a week ago were rich, are now as poor as the humblest of their servants. Fortunately the violence of the eruption has ceased and the river Alcantara has not been dried up by the lava stream as it was feared it would be. This is one of the principal rivers of Sicily, which supplies several towns and many gardens, mills and villas with water. The lava came within a hundred feet of its bank, but as the current became less rapid, the river was saved. Neither was any town covered by the lava, although the communications of one—Randaggo—were cut off and its trade ruined. It is related that the inhabitants of Linguaglossa and Randaggo, two neighboring towns, were gathered on the national road between them. They watched the fiery stream advancing, and when at last it crossed the bridge of Fiaciaro and fell down a little hill into the vineyards, they shook hands and bade each other farewell, while the burning mountain slowly crossed the road and separated them.

The Sicilians call Mount Ætna the "beautiful mountain," and seem to admire more than to fear it, although, on an average, it ruins their fields once in every ten years. This eruption is said to be the most violent of this century, but in 1693 an earthquake which accompanied one of its eruptions destroyed forty towns and burned or killed near one hundred thousand persons. The mountain is 10,171 feet high and is divided into three zones. The first of these is beautifully cultivated and covered with lovely villas; the second contains at least fourteen different forests of oak, chestnut and pine trees; the third zone is a desert burned by the sun above and the lava below. Few plants and no animals can exist there, for it is an arid desert of cinders, sand and moulten lavas.—Sofia Bomptani.

Hebrew Poets.

The sacred poets never contemplated the glories of creation, but with the lively gratitude of sincere worshippers, delighted to witness and to feel the all prevading mercy of Jehovah. The ecstacy at the views of the scenes before them was the fervent expression of real emotions. They loved a minute enumeration of its beauties because it was a moving, animating picture of the glory and benevolence of God, because their souls were moulded by its influence, their hearts were touched with human kindness; they sympathized with the happiness of all animated nature, and rejoiced to sing their grateful, involuntary praises to the Giver of good.

There is scarcely an object in nature, which they do not personify. The sun, the moon, the stars, the winds, the clouds, the rain, are the ministers and messengers of Jehovah. The fields and the trees break forth into singing, and even clap their hands for joy. The mountains melt at his presence, or flee from his wrath in terror; and the sun and moon hide themselves from the terrible flashing of his armor. What unutterable sublimity do such bold personifications communicate to that chapter in Habbakkuk, commencing—

"God came from Teman—
The Holy One from Mount Paran.
The mountains saw thee and were troubled;
The overflowing of waters passed away;
The deep uttered his voice.
He lifted up his hands on high,
The sun and the moon stood still in their habitation;
In the light of Thine arrows they vanished,
In the brightness of the lightning of Thy spear,
In indignation Thou didst march through the land,
In wrath Thou didst thresh the heathen."

The Holy Spirit in the Word.

In the diamond fields of South Africa a diamond was found, celebrated lately under the title of dy-stone; placed under a magnifying glass you see enclosed in all its brilliancy a little fly with head wings and eyes in the most perfect state of preservation. How it came there no one knows. But no human skill can take it out. So the Spirit of God is found in Holy Scripture, from which no power of man can remove it. Infidelity and criticism have now done their utmost. All kinds of weapons have been employed, but the result has been triumph for the word. As soon may the rising waves wash out the stars as that the efforts of man shall blot out God's truth.—Rev. Dr. Macvean.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Consciences, like limbs, are made strong by using them.

Rowland Hill: We can do more good by being good than in any other way.

O, who can count the value of a friend.
Or tell the worth of love that's true and holy,
That brings down heaven with earth to blend,
Uniting all in one—the high and lowly.

Bishop Beveridge: If the way to heaven is narrow, it is not long; if the gate be straight it opens into endless life.

The greatest evils in life have had their rise from somewhat which was thought of too little importance to be attended to.

Yes, blessed hope! a brighter morn will dawn
Than mortal eyes have ever looked upon,
When from the silent tomb, the briny deep,
The pure, the blest, will wake no more to weep
In happy union all will note prolong,
And swell the chorus of redemption's song.

They lose all the profit of wealth, even in this life, who just hoard it up. So he who tries to keep religion to himself, will get as little good from it as he lets others get. Use what you have if you would have more.

Thou lonely one, lift up thy head, array thee for the feast;
He that hath tarried long is near—the glow is in the east!
Oh, Morning Star, so soon to lend thy chosen one away—
Oh, Sun of Righteousness, bring in the everlasting day!

A short race, a rough pilgrimage, a dangerous voyage, a fierce combat, a hard day's work; and then a glorious prize, a happy end, a good home, a complete victory, and an eternal reward; fear not, the end crowns the whole.

The two most precious things on this side of the grave are our reputation and our life. But it is to be lamented that the most contemptible whisper may deprive us of one, and the weakest weapon of the other. A wise man, therefore, will be more anxious to deserve a fair name than to possess it, and this will teach him so to live as to be afraid to die.

O man! if hard thy fortune,
However fate importune,
Turn not to wrong—none find, nor will
Their good enlarged by doing ill.

Anybody can soil the reputation of an individual, however pure and chaste, by uttering a suspicion that his enemies will believe and his friends never hear of. A puff of the idle wind can take a million of the seeds of a thistle and do a work of mischief which the husbandman must labor long to undo, the floating particles being too fine to be seen and too light to be stopped. Such are the seeds of slander so easily sown, so difficult to be gathered up, and yet so pernicious in their fruits. The slanderer knows that many a mind will catch up the plague and become poisoned by his insinuations, without ever seeking the antidote. No reputation can refute a sneer, nor any human skill prevent mischief.

Jewish refugee returned to Karlova, in Roumelia, on an official invitation. A mob of Bulgarians broke into the house occupied by these Jews, and stoned the inmates. The Jews appealed in vain to the authorities, and were chased out of the town.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

SELECTIONS.

[Prophetic Times.]

Jerusalem.

In Jerusalem, the metropolis of Israel, 2078 years before the birth of Christ, 1323 years before Romulus and Remus were suckled by the wolf, kings reigned, and confederate sovereigns fought and conquered around it, and near it Abraham, the father of the faithful, had a pleasant interview with Melchisideck, God's High Priest. Add to these 2078 years the present date, 1879, and you have 3957 years during which the Holy City has braved the waters of time and the sword of hostile nations.

It is a hoary antiquity! and it is the only city in the world of which we have anything like a connected, reliable history, for so long a period of time. Think of the surging nations that have come up against it, like the waves of the sea, during that time!—the surrounding tribes and nations, "the Egyptians, the four universal monarchies;" the myrmidons of Epiphanes, (whose command was to exterminate the Jews,) the later Persians, the Franks, the Saracens, and the Turks; verily Jerusalem, like the Jews, seems ever dying, and yet destined not to die; for there it is on these hills, after all these years of glory and of woe, the object of contention, still, to all the nations of the east and west! It was the Church of the Resurrection which aroused France, England, Russia, and the Porte, and congregated their armies around the walls of Sebastopol.

Nor is Jerusalem's warfare accomplished; for there is certainly one great siege before her still, and this last great battle, which casts the beast and false prophet into the lake of fire, shall be waged around Jerusalem's walls in the latter days. What a mighty centre of earth's weary history is this City of Jerusalem! What a number of heroes and warriors have, from Joshua to Napoleon, fought and conquered in this promised land! How many nations and kingdoms has this widowed city seen rise, flourish, and pass away, like a dream! The metallic kingdoms have fought, and conquered, in vain; they are all extinguished in darkness; but Jerusalem, and the scattered nation, remain!

Thus, it seems to be God's purpose that this city should be intimately connected with the history of our earth, from the call of Abraham till the end of time; for out of the wars of Antichrist, and the destruction of the congregated nations, it shall arise to imperial splendor; and the restored and converted nation, (the Jews,) under the sceptre of the Prince of Peace, shall obtain the first dominion. The presence of the Incarnate God shall make Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, and the name whereby he shall be called is, Jehovah Shammah: "The Lord is there!" Ezekiel xlviii. 35. Jesus, as the son of Abraham, sustains the destiny of the Jewish nation; as the Son of David, he is the head of all royalty and power; as the son of man, he gathers up and unfolds the glories of humanity; as the Son of God, he possesses the nature, and sustains the majesty of the Godhead.

Even so, in the millennial ages, Jerusalem and the Jews shall be the head and centre of all earthly dominion; the law-giving capital of the redeemed and jubilant world. Thus we trace the history of this city from Abraham to the Incarnation; from the Incarnation to the second personal coming, and from the second advent to the judgment of the Great White Throne.

But let us state, distinctly, some of the particulars which render Jerusalem such a centre of attraction: Look, now, over the brook Kedron, and fix your attention on those spots; the place of weeping, the sacred harem, and the Church of the Resurrection, (which, for the sake of mercy, we may call the "temple," the mosque, and the tomb,) as the visible symbols of the three religions of the books, and forming the three local centres of the Jews, the Moslems, and the Christians.

The temple belongs to the Jews. It was the centre of their worship, the dwelling-place of God, where the glorious Jehovah, in visible, but cloudy majesty, met with, and directed the chosen people. He was, literally, the national God and the temporal King of Israel, who chose them, at the first, in the person of Abraham; confirmed their sacrifices by fire from heaven; led them through the wilderness by the fiery, cloudy pillar, out of which he declared his will to the people; conquered all their enemies under Joshua, the man of war; dwelt in the tabernacle twenty years, in Gilgal, and then rested in Shiloh 329 years, until the death of Eli, the priest; and finally filled the temple of Solomon with his glorious presence at the dedication, and made the Holy of Holies his throne until the Babylonish captivity; after which the visible glory departed from Israel, and the government was transferred to Nebuchadnezzar and his successors, until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled, (Luke xxi. 24,) when the Son of man shall come in the clouds of heaven.

It was no wonder, then, that the temple touched the heart of the Jewish nation, for it was the centre of their worship, the symbol of their calling; the residence of their celestial king. Their history, both national and religious, was fully identified with the temple. Its first destruction was their captivity; its final destruction was their dispersion; and it seems likely that, at their approaching restoration, it will rise in splendor once more.

Look at these poor, ragged, heart-broken Jews, as they weep by the foundations of the old temple, every Friday evening in the year, and see how the heart of the nation is wedded to that ancient and sacred spot!

Another thing which shows the importance of Jerusalem is, the healthy literature which is connected with it. The Jews are, in a peculiar sense, a literary nation.

The Greeks got their alphabet from Phœnicia; and the whole story of Virgil is based on the affections of a Syrian Princess.

"Ye have the letters Cadmus gave;
They were not meant to teach a slave," cries the indignant poet to the degenerate descendants of the ancient Greeks. But that which sanctifies and glorifies the literature connected with Jerusalem and the Jews is, its relation to God and the salvation of man. They were the keepers of a divine revelation, which for importance, in all respects, surpasses all the secular literature of the world.

From Jerusalem went forth the heroic band of apostolic men to stem the tides of licentiousness, superstition, and infidelity, with which the world was filled. They bore along with them a sacred literature, which won its way to the hearts of the peasant and prince; which brought glory to God and salvation to man; which purifies and refines all earthly relations, while, at the same time, it raises the most depraved of our species to glorious and immortal hopes. All these literary glories, which belong to the law and the gospel, circulate around the Holy City of Jerusalem. The ten commandments, the prophets, and the psalms, the four gospels, the epistles, and the apocalypse, have all their moral and their physical centre in Jerusalem. The name is mentioned, daily, by myriads of tongues; the psalmody of all Christian nations, and churches, has incorporated the names of the Holy City, Olivet, and Calvary, Gethsemane, Bethlehem, and many others, with the deepest, holiest affections of the human heart. The catechisms, the commentaries, the creeds, and confessions, and all the literature in the civilized world, are based upon the foundations which the Lord laid in Zion, the city of David, by the writings of the prophets, evangelists, and apostles of the Lord. Let the church hold fast these memories of a Redeemer's love. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me." But, apart from the sacred Scriptures, which are the fountain of religious knowledge, and all modern civilization, what a stream of semi-sacred literature has flowed to the church from Jerusalem and the Holy Land, within the last fifty years!

I believe more works have, during that time, been written on Palestine and the Jews than on all the other countries of the world! I do not believe this is exaggerated. The press is actually teeming with literature of all kinds connected with Palestine and the prospects of the east. This mighty impulse has arisen from many and various causes, of which I may mention only the following:

1. Missions and missionaries from the European churches led the way by their fervent zeal and intelligence; they turned the Christian heart to its native home, "The mother, dear Jerusalem," of which Christians sing so frequently, and awakened a deeper interest among them for the sufferings and persecutions of the scattered nation.

2. The subject of prophetic inquiry began also to stir the Christian churches profoundly, and so Jerusalem naturally came to be an important element in all the arrangements of the future. For it is not easy to interpret the prophets without giving Israel a conspicuous place in the destinies of the nations. It is quite as easy to shut the church out of the prophecies of the new-restored Israel out of the prophecies of the Old Testament. This study of the prophetic word, then, has resulted in a multitude of publications bearing on Jerusalem, and intensifying exceedingly the general interest taken in the state and prosperity of the promised land.

3. Palestine being so easily accessible, multitudes of travelers from various countries visit the Holy Land, as a religious recreation or for literary purposes, when they are returning to their native land.

Finally, the politicians have been led to think of Palestine by the state of the Ottoman Empire. That terrible tyranny, based on fanaticism and love of plunder, has spent all its religious enthusiasm. The power that for centuries made Europe tremble is gradually wasting away; and the surrounding nations are waiting to divide the spoil. Russia is aiming at Constantinople, England is anxious for Egypt, France aiming at Jerusalem, and the Holy Land is at present out of the question for any share in the spoil.

These speculations and probabilities have led multitudes to think of Syria and Jerusalem, who have little concern either for prophecy or religion, but all these causes and many others not mentioned, have contributed to swell the currents of literature which flow in upon the Oriental world. Take all that is good out of Old Rome, take all that is beautiful out of Greece, but you must come to Jerusalem for religion, for the knowledge of God, for the pardon of sin, for the assurance of a bright hope and eternity.

In conclusion, the future of the Jewish nation is fully and clearly defined for the millennial age, called the latter day glory, the times of refreshing, the coming of Christ and his reign on the earth for one thousand years and the first resurrection, and translation of living saints. The Jews shall be restored to their own land, they shall acknowledge Jesus to be the Christ, the two nations, Israel and Judah, shall be united under the reign of Christ, Ezekiel xxxvii. 15, 24. And they shall become the first and most glorious of the earthly kingdoms, Isaiah lxi. 4, 9; Micah iv. 8, Jerusalem shall be rebuilt and enlarged, the measurement of which is to be forty-one miles in circumference, Ezekiel xlviii. 8, 35; Isaiah lx. 10, 14, the centre from which living waters shall go forth to the ends of the earth, the residence of the glory of God, called the throne of the Lord, it shall be called Jehovah Shammah. "The Lord is there."—S. Bonhomme.

LETTER VII.

Reasons for not returning to the Papal Church.—Prohibition of the Scriptures.—The Way and Manner of Papal Worship—Ceremonial Law of Popery.—Obstructions raised between God and the soul.

My Dear Sir,—Agreeably to the promise made to you in my last letter, I now commence a statement of the reasons which, on the most mature reflection, yet prevent me from returning to the pale of your church. I wish to avoid prolixity of statement and minuteness of detail, as I feel that I am addressing one who can see the point and weigh the force of an argument without either. Detail is only needed by the stupid.

When, in the kind providence of God, my mind became interested to know what God would have me to do, I cast around for a true guide to the solution of the question. Where could I find such a one? Books are written by fallible men; priests had already imposed on my understanding; fond parents, deceived themselves, taught me superstition for religion; all men are liable to err. I felt there was a God, and that I was bound to obey him; but where is the rule of my obedience? This was the question. I was told of the Bible, but of that I knew nothing; and then I knew the Bible to be by your church a prohibited book, or to be read only by priestly permission. I sought the Bible, and read it. I found it to be the true and only guide to the right solution of the question as to what God would have me to do; and, without fear of the Pope, or of the anathemas of the Council of Trent, and without a line of license from prelate or priest, I have continued to read it for years. If this is mortal sin, I am daily living in its commission. Thus far I will confess to you. And the virtual prohibition of the unfettered reading of the Bible by your church is one of the main reasons why I cannot return to it. That your restrictions amount to a virtual prohibition, your candor will not for a moment deny.

And let me ask you, dear sir, why this virtual prohibition? Who has given you authority to say that I must not read what God has given to direct me into all the ways of faith and obedience? God has commanded me to "search the Scriptures;" who has given you authority to forbid me? What right have you to forbid me more than I have to forbid you? Produce your credentials! Where does God place his revealed will in the keeping of Pope, prelate, or priest, to be doled out to his erring children in such ways and parcels as they may deem best? He has no more placed the Bible under your control, or that of your church, than he has the sun in heaven, or the vital air, or the gushing fountains of pure water. Nor can I conceive of any principle that can possibly induce you to withhold it from the people, without gloss or comment, save one: "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to light, lest his deeds should be reproved." It is said that Herod, when convinced that he was not of the royal line of the Jews, burned their genealogies and records, that his false pretenses might not be confuted by them. Is it for a similar reason that your church withholds the Bible from the people? The Bible lays the axe at the root of the upas-tree of popery: is this the reason why it is withheld? If you reply to these letters, will you tell us plainly how it is withheld?

Another of the reasons which prevent me from returning to your church is the way and the manner of your public worship of God. On reading the New Testament, I find that Jesus Christ embraced every opportunity of declaring the will of God. After his ascension and the descent of the Spirit, the Apostles went everywhere preaching the gospel of the kingdom. The worship of God, as taught us in the New Testament, consists in prayer, praise, and the preaching of his word for the instruction and edification of the people. To the instruction and edification of the saints everything in the church of Christ is made subservient. Is it so in the Church of Rome? Do your masses convey any instruction to the common or uncommon mind? Do they ever give—have they ever given one true idea of God or of religion to a human soul? If so, I should like to know it. May not individuals attend upon them from youth to gray hairs, and yet know not the first principles of the doctrines of Christ? I have attended recently, sir, a High Mass at one of your cathedrals. It was on the last Christmas day, and in the Cathedral at Baltimore. I bore the unmeaning pageant for three mortal hours together. There was the archbishop in his robes, with his cap, his crook, and his crosier; there were priests in numbers, moving about, making their crosses, obeisances, and genuflexions. When the bishop rose, the crook and crosier moved before him, and the priests, as waiters, went behind him; the book was shifted from side to side, and was read and chanted in ways that no mortal hearer could comprehend. There was the raising of the Host, and the bowing down of the people—the incense, and all other usual accompaniments of such a service; and it struck me as one of the most farcical pantomimes that I ever witnessed. Forgive this honest statement, if it is within your power of absolution. I left the house without receiving a solitary religious suggestion, and puzzled and confounded for a solution to the question how intelligent men could possibly submit to act such a farce, and to pass it off upon a crowd of poor-looking people for the solemn worship of God. And if your Mass, when thus performed with all the splendor and pomp of your ritual, is thus unmeaning, how insipid must it be when performed in your country chapels by ignorant priests, who hunt up the sheep only to shear off their wool! God, my dear sir, is an intelligent God; he has given me intelligence with which to worship him. For the intelligence within me, either as to its increase or exercise, your church makes no provision in its public worship. I must not, then, return to your church, and seek to have my soul, made for the inhabitation of the Spirit, satisfied with the mummery of your muttered masses in the public worship of my God. My soul craves bread, and you give it stones.

Another of the reasons which prevent me from returning to your church is the burdens which it places on my conscience, which crush without correcting it. It institutes a kind of a ceremonial law, which restricts where God has given liberty, and which licenses where God has prohibited indulgence. With your fast and feast days, who can keep up without an almanac in his hands? and how many of your people can read? Should I blunder in counting the days of the week, and, mistaking Friday for Thursday, eat meat, my conscience is wounded. If, in performing penance, I miscount my beads, and say a less number of paternosters than required, my conscience again suffers. If, ignorant of the "Laws of Lent," which have been just published by you, I should eat three meals on a day between "Ash Wednesday and Easter Sunday," or should eat meat on the "Thursday next after Ash Wednesday," or on any day of the Holy Week," my conscience would be again burdened. And these are but specimens of the thousand and one ceremonial regulations of your church, as burdensome as they are unmeaning, which fret and crush the conscience without directing or strengthening it; and while thus restricted in things indifferent, I am freely indulging in things which the divine law prohibits.

Now, sir, who has given you authority to make laws where God has made none? Where is the law in the statute book for your Lents, your feast-days, your fast-days, your Easter days? Why fast or feast at one time more than another? Who has given you authority to say what I shall eat, or how often, in any one day of the year? What unutterable arrogance to tell me I cannot eat fish and flesh at the same meal; what priestly intolerance to tell me, with my Bible open before me, that if I transgress these laws I sin against my God! You know that the gospel is a law of liberty; you know that if a man eat meat he is not the worse, and that if he refrain he is not the better; ye. know that the Bible teaches that man is defiled, not by that which entereth into him, but by that which cometh out of him; and why burden souls and fetter consciences by silly enactments about things in themselves indifferent, and about which God has made no regulations? Oh, sir, like the Scribes and the Pharisees of old, you are busied about the mint, the anise, and the cummin, forgetful of the weightier matters of the law; and I deeply regret that a man who has forced himself up to station and influence against so many adverse circumstances, had not force enough to break the chains of early religious prejudice, to rise up to the region of intellectual, and moral and religious freedom! You are too much of a man to stoop to such nonsense. I would leave such things to those who know no better. Even at the risk of your mitre and princely income, you should give such chaff to the winds of heaven.

On these subjects, dear sir, your church must return to the Standard of the Bible and of common sense before I can return to it.

Another of the reasons which prevent my return is the obstructions which your church raises between me and my God. My Bible—that hated book by Pope, prelate, priest, and papal peasant—teaches me that if any man sin, he has an advocate with the Father Jesus Christ. It everywhere teaches me that I may have free access to God through Jesus Christ; that if I sin, I may go for pardon directly to the throne of God, through the mediation of his Son; and this is a precious privilege—a privilege which may be enjoyed by all "without money and without price." Now, what do you ask me to do in order to receive the forgiveness of sins, and to be restored to the favor of God? You send me to Peter or Paul, or some other saint on the catalogue, who may have never known me, and who may never hear me if I pray unto them; or you send me to Mary, whom you blasphemously call the mother of God, to ask her to intercede for me. Nor will this suffice. I must go to your confessional, and tell you all my sins, incurring the fearful penalty of refusal of pardon if I withhold one. Thus you take from me the privilege of going to God myself—a privilege purchased for me by the death of Christ. You tell me I must go to the priest, and from the priest, to the saint or to the Virgin, and the saint or Virgin will go for me to the Savior, and he will go for me to the Father! and then, when pardon is granted, it goes from the Father to the Son, from him to the saint or Virgin, from him or her to the priest; and when in the hands of the priest, he will give me absolution—if I pay for it! Will you say, dare you say that this is a caricature of your teachings upon this matter? Would to God you could with truth! Why send me to the saints, to ask them to intercede for me, if this is untrue? That I am a sinner, I know and feel; that there is pardon for me through the atonement of Jesus Christ, on my repentance and faith, is a precious doctrine of the Bible and of my creed. That pardon I receive the moment I sincerely exercise the graces of repentance and faith—yes, and not a whit the less freely if all of you, Pope, patriarch, prelates, and priests, were with Pharoh and his chariots.

And why turn me away from the door of mercy, and compel me to speak to my heavenly Father by proxy? Why call me away from the cross, and send me to a priest, or saint, or a virgin, to ask them to do for me what I can better do for myself? Where has my Savior taught me that I can only address him through a priestly attorney, that I must fee, however poor, for his services? Oh, ask me to do anything—to bail the ocean, to tame the hurricane, to arrest the sun, rather than ask me to return to your church until everything is removed which forbids the free access of my soul to my God—which suspends my salvation on anything else than repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. You must pull down your toll-gates on the way of life before you see me back.

The statement of a few additional reasons I hope to give you in my next. With respect, yours, KIRWAN.

Recently, as some workmen were engaged in taking down an old dwelling at Perth Amboy, N. J., they found an old Danish Bible covered up and protected by the mason-work. The house was built in 1684, and the Bible which was put into the wall was printed in 1644. About half of the book was found in a good state of preservation.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 30, 1850.

We acknowledge the receipt of a late number of the London Times, sent us by brother H. Heyes of England, from which we make two extracts for the present number of THE RESTITUTION.

THIS number of THE RESTITUTION completes the four issues for the current month—July. Many thanks to the kind friends who have contributed to its finances. May God bless them with manifold blessings.

THE yellow fever will probably rage again, as an epidemic, in the south this summer. Day by day the news from Memphis grows worse. Southern towns are declaring a strict quarantine against this fated city. Can it be that this wasting pestilence will pursue its devastating course till the hard frosts of next autumn? The present prospect is gloomy indeed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Love.

It is generally thought that love is the exercise of an affection of the mind. That this may be true in a measure is not denied, but that there is another signification in the word is also true. Jesus said at the great supper "if ye love me keep my commandments." The keeping of these involves something more than an exercise of affection. There is earnest faithful work here—a line of duty to be followed. Loving our enemies involves the same thought. It cannot be an exercise of affection—the emotion of love that is spoken of—but rather a faithful performance of duty. It is nothing less than good works, for we read, "if thine enemy be hungry give him bread to eat, and if he be thirsty give him water to drink, for thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head and the Lord shall reward thee." The principle is the same. Love to God and love to man is the central pivot of law and prophet and is fastened in the eternal rock of duty. We owe duties to man. These are discharged by right actions toward man. We owe duties to God. These must be met in keeping his commandments. It is true that God asks the love of the heart, but it is also true that we are required to love with the strength, the mind and the soul, which means something more than an exercise of the affections.

Therefore, to love [illegible] for him with the body entire, with the intelligence and the force of manhood. If his cause needs means, the contents of the pocket are freely given, the work of the hands are willingly offered, and the intelligence does all it can. To love an enemy is not spending the time foolishly in trying to bend the affections to twine about that which is unloving and unlovely, but performing those duties growing out of the relation of man to man, prompted and sustained by the consciousness that it is a duty, and a duty because it is right.

The Christian Life.

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest. Eccl. ix. 10.

We are all aware what the first important steps are towards salvation. A firm belief in Christ and his kingdom, and the remission of sin, and the putting on of Christ by baptism. Does our obligations as true soldiers of the cross end here? By no means; it is simply the beginning—the first important step; and we have the whole Christian warfare before us. How long shall it last? Can we get through in a day, month or year, and then set all responsibility aside? I think not, unless God so orders it; but the whole armor of God should be worn to the grave's brink; we should be unsafe a single day without it. "Why," says one, "can I not sit down and fold my hands, and feel a perfect trust that all will be well with me, since I have obeyed and placed my footsteps in the narrow way? It is tiresome to always be thinking of heavenly things and earth duties. Why need I, a weary, heavy-laden child, burthened with crushing cares of this life, give another thought or care, further, for my own salvation, or that of any other? I believe and have obeyed, and is not that enough?" I am grieved that a single soul should be venturing on these dangerous grounds. Brothers and sisters, have any of us come to this arbor of ease? God forbid! for just so sure as we have, just so sure are we lost souls. It is an arbor Satan has purposely prepared to entrap unwary ones. Should we find ourselves there, let us not tarry for one moment, but it were better not to pass that way.

"What can I do?" says one, "there don't seem to be anything within my reach, and I have no money to spare or nothing to give away." Oh, you poor child, just open your eyes and look about you; there is work on every hand; something for the poorest and most humble of us to do. "The harvest truly is plenteous and the laborers are few." I suppose you have not money to scatter with a lavish hand. Money is not the only or best thing in the world; if you have strong arms and a willing spirit, help some feeble brother or sister in whatever way will do them most good. If you are a feeble one, set before others the example of patience and meekness in your affliction: cheer some despondent one with words of kindness and hope; a word fitly spoken in season may save some perishing soul.

Fathers and mothers, speak no words before your little ones that you do not wish them to use. Set them no example you would not like to see them follow. Shame upon that father who would punish his son for using tobacco, when he has set the example before him all his life; and yet we see these things done frequently. Sacredly guard your sons and daughters; draw to yourselves their confidence; throw around them the arm of affection as in the days of their babyhood. Many of us daughters do not outgrow your paternal caresses. Oh, do not leave these sacred rights which are yours, to the base and untrue, as is often the case when you neglect your duty. And you, fair young daughter, help that aged father and mother; let your feet grow weary rather than theirs,—for rest comes to youth sooner than to age. Let your bright eyes read over the words their dim vision can no longer see. Comfort and cheer them, and make bright and peaceful their pathway to the tomb. Do all in your power, fair sister, to keep that young brother from the card table and the wine cup; let him hear from your lips only tones of kindness and sympathy. And you, young brothers, watch over the best interests of that sister; let her see that you appreciate her kindness. Respect and admire her when in plain, neat apparel; do not let her lose soul and body with inordinate love of fashion and display. Give a cup of cold water to the thirsty wayfarer, and tell him of the well of water which shall spring up to everlasting life. If he asks the way to the nearest city, tell him as well, of the city of God, and the nearest route thereto. We think, sometimes, that some of the many tramps who infest our country for the purpose of evil deeds, would flee, (if talked to of God and heaven) thinking they had fallen among angels unawares. Oh, brothers and sisters, we cannot turn our eyes in any direction but there is work to be done; there is not a moment of time to lose, for the night will come all too soon. We could find plenty to do had we a thousand hands to employ; but let us endeavor to neglect no opportunity of keeping the one pair busy, and in all that we do, however humble, do it to the honor and glory of God.

Our chief warfare is with our own natures; we have no greater enemies than ourselves, and if we attempt to belong to Christ, the evils must be rooted out. Evil speaking of one another, malice, hatred, jealousy, selfishness and passion. No child of God should harbor for a moment such guests as these; they may enter sometimes unbidden, but if we have on the whole armor of God we shall have weapons enough to expel them; the shield of faith and earnest prayer are powerful antagonists to them. And among other things to do, we have a paper to sustain. How could we do without it, scattered as we are in all parts of the world? Do we do all that we can for it? Let us at least pay our dues when due, and take it for others when possible. We have a kind, patient, overworked editor, for his sake, as well as the paper, let not our dues run behind. Cheer his thorny pathway (he has much to contend with which we know not of) with words of sympathy and brotherly love. If we cannot aid him otherwise, let us pray for him; we know not what our earnest, united prayers might do for him and the paper, too, with an occasional dollar thrown in. "Whatever we find to do, let us do it with all our might." Please let my sympathy for humanity and zeal for God, be my excuse for this letter.

Yours in the faith of the fathers,

MRS. O. F. HALL.

Thirty Years.

Thirty years is a young life time, and if well spent, more profitable than many more spent in folly and wickedness. Who can tell the heartaches? Who can count the sighs and tears? Who can number the pains, and griefs, and fears, trials, temptations and wounds of thirty years? There is no mortal can sum up the matter, but there is One above who sees and knows all the sufferings of his creatures. As I look back thirty years from to-day, it brings to mind many pleasant thoughts when my dear companion and I clasped hands to tread the journey of life together, happy in each other's love, endeavoring to do our duty to each other and all mankind. But at that time we were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers to the covenants of promise, without God or hope in the world. We had the same hope the world at large have, which is not the hope of the gospel, but the mercy of our heavenly Father has been great toward us, and has caused us to hear the good news of the kingdom, believe and obey it, bless and praise his holy name for all his goodness to the children of men. My dear husband has been an heir of the promised possession twenty years, enjoying the privileges of God's people, while I, and I say it with regret, have only been adopted into the family half of that time; but the mercy of God endureth forever, and we rejoice together in the same hope, being heirs of the same promise, walking in the same narrow path, waiting for the Master's return. Oh, procrastination, thou thief of time, steal not the precious moments from any dear reader who is almost persuaded to believe the good news of the kingdom; but let them come boldly to the throne of grace and obtain mercy. Life is short; the present alone is ours. Is there a brother or sister who has a companion out of Christ? let them fly to the Savior for refuge, seek the kingdom of God, believe his word and put on Christ by baptism, and their only regret will be too short a time in the service of God. The king will soon appear. Who of his servants will be approved? Who found with pure hearts and clean hands? Who waiting patiently for him? Who accounted worthy of an entrance into his kingdom? Oh, our Father, grant that all who read and understand thy word may walk worthy of it; and bring not a reproach upon thy holy name, but may we prove faithful unto the end, and overcome every evil through Christ our Redeemer, and have an abundant entrance into his kingdom and glory.

John Gaspard Lavater and the Poor Widow.

It was a practice of Lavater to read every morning several chapters from the Bible and select from them one passage for special meditation during the day. One morning after reading Matt. v. and vi., he exclaimed, "how difficult to make choice of any particular passage!" On his knees he prayed for divine guidance.

When he joined his wife at dinner she asked him what passage he had chosen.

"Give to him that asketh of thee and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away."

"How is this to be understood?" said his wife.

"These are the words of him to whom all things belong," said Lavater, "I am but a steward. The proprietor has given orders how I shall dispose of it."

His wife made no further reply, but said she would consider the subject. Lavater had scarcely left the dining room when an aged widow desired to speak to him. Her rent had become due, and from sickness in her family she was six dollars short of the sum required.

Lavater said, "have you no relatives to help you?"

She replied "no."

He put his hand in his pocket and said, "I have but two dollars and I shall need that."

The widow said, "God has never forsaken me, and I am sure he will not in the sixty-sixth year of my age."

At this moment his wife came in and said, "this is a good woman; help her if you can."

He felt vexed to have his wife urge him to give, and said he had but two dollars and she needed six, and asked her if she would give her gold ring.

"Certainly I will," she replied, "I do not trifle with Jesus' commands. But there is six dollars in the desk which you have forgotten."

Lavater called the poor woman back who was about leaving, thanked his wife for her admonition, and wrote a most humiliating confession in his diary.

This condensed and imperfected copy is from too lengthy a piece to fill the columns of THE RESTITUTION. It was such a good lesson I ventured to abridge it.

THE POCASSET SACRIFICE.

The Jail Life of Charles F. Freeman, Adventist, and his Wife.

Still Confident that the Killing of their Daughter Edith was in Response to Direct Command from the Almighty—Doubts About the Result of the Trial—Public Interest.

BARNSTABLE, Mass., July 19.—Charles F. Freeman and his wife are patiently awaiting, in the new jail, their trial for the murder of their daughter Edith. It is now nearly three months since Freeman, in response to what he believed to be a command from God, to show to the world that there is even now a faith as strong as Abraham's, killed his little girl as she lay sleeping in her bed. Three months of almost solitary confinement have not changed his views nor those of his wife. The prosecuting officers thought that time might develop a latent insanity, so that the State of Massachusetts would not be obliged to prosecute a man and a woman whose act seemed that of insanity, but whose appearance, conduct, and conversation are those of the most rational persons. He is to-day as calmly confident that God had some purpose, he does not know exactly what, in directing him to slay his daughter, as he was on the day of his arrest, and Mrs. Freeman, though never failing to mourn the loss of her baby, has overcome the melancholy that shadowed her after her arrest, and now says with great confidence that God had a purpose in it all, and that he does not look upon her husband and herself as murderers.

The interest that this case has excited far and wide becomes more and more evident to the officials who have these prisoners in charge. Letters have been received from San Francisco and from very many other places asking for information regarding the Freemans' mode of life during imprisonment, and particularly whether they still believe that they were justified in the act. Reports of very many sermons, taking all views of the matter, have been sent to the jailer at Barnstable for Freeman and his wife to read, and two pamphlets have been published, one containing the story of the act, with the parents' reasons for doing it, while the other, with a brief instruction that tells the story of the murder briefly, is made up of a number of sermons in full, bearing upon the tragedy. Both of these pamphlets have had extensive sales, orders having been received for them from London. Lawyers in New York, Philadelphia and Boston continue to make offers to defend Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, and the money to defray any expenses could be easily made up were a subscription list to be opened.

Freeman knows something of this interest, but not much, and his wife knows nothing of it. It is seemingly a matter of the slightest possible consequence to Freeman. What he longs for and looks forward to is the religious effect that his act will have on mankind. As he recently said: "The truth is terrible. It is too strong for most men; but if they would only accept it, they would soon reach a clear and unclouded state of the mind, when many things that are now doubtful would be made clear to them." He insists when he talks at all that one object of the revelation that was made to him, he feels certain, was to awake men out of the dead-and-alive condition in which Christians as a whole exist to-day.

It will be seen from this that Freeman has not changed at all since his arrest. There are no more signs of insanity to-day to be discovered in his speech and manner or those of his wife than there were at the time of the tragedy—less, if anything.

Their prison life since their removal to the new jail is a matter that the jailer and the chaplain—the only persons who see them—say very little about. Freeman very early discovered that people tried to see him under pretence of talking upon religious matters, but really out of curiosity alone. He therefore requested the jailer to allow no one to see him except his family friends and the chaplain, and Mrs. Freeman made a like request. It has been obeyed. Nobody can pass the iron door of the jail for the purpose of talking with them.

The writer has, however, been able to glean some facts of interest. Mrs. Freeman, whose life was at one time despaired of, has grown fleshy, and is now perfectly well. The change began the moment she was taken to the new jail. Many people wonder that she did not die in the damp, foul-smelling loft in which she was confined, for want of better accommodations, until the new jail was finished. She never complained of it, but she began to take more and more interest in daily trifles as soon as she was transferred to the airy cell she now occupies. She fixed her cell up so that it looked neat, and then she began to long for some little tidy work or light sewing to occupy her hands. Sitting in her cell, or in the corridor, she can look out upon the village streets and see the little bustle at the depot. She brightened up greatly from day to day, and when the jailer told her that she would be allowed to receive letters, subject to examination, from her husband, she became very happy. She began to think of the dead child as she would of one from whom she was temporarily separated, but she seldom or never speaks of the act, except to say that "Charlie" was justified in the sight of God in doing it, and thus living up to the faith that he had. A few weeks ago she begged the privilege of doing some housework, and the jailer allowed her to do some light chamber-work and cooking for the family. Prison restraint sits very lightly upon her.

Mrs. Freeman has seen her husband only three times since they were committed to jail. Once they merely smiled, once they nodded to each other, and once Freeman said a few words of a commonplace nature to her. These occasions were at the chapel service on Sunday. There are only sixteen prisoners in the jail, and these meet in a little open space at the end of the jail on Sunday afternoons for religious services. On the first Sunday of these services Freeman did not care to come out of his cell. But the next Sunday he did, and looking up to the corridor above the ground tier he saw his wife sitting there with the only other female prisoner, a woman confined for stealing. Freeman smiled, and his wife did the same. Then they both took an earnest part in the services, paying close attention to the sermon and singing some of the Moody and Sankey hymns.

"Mrs. Freeman is the most gentle, tender-hearted, and ladylike woman I ever saw," said Jailer Inman. "She grows even more and more gentle. Yet she is smart, and has plenty of courage. I cannot understand how she could have consented to the sacrifice of the child. I should have thought it would have killed her. But I never speak to her upon that subject. I know that she feels that she acted conscientiously, as did her husband."

"Did you ever detect any signs of insanity about her or her husband?"

"Never. They are not insane, and have never been since they came here."

Freeman spends much of his time in his cell, reading and writing. He is perfectly well, although confinement makes him a little restless at times, as he has always been used to a very active life. The Rev. Mr. Walker is the only person with whom he has talked about the death of Edith. Even in such conversation the act has not been alluded to excepting incidentally, as was necessary in speaking of his religious convictions. He argues with the same force that he did at first. He has tried to examine himself and see whether he could have mistaken the voice of God; but as time passes the conviction grows stronger and stronger that God spoke to him and commanded him as He did Abraham, and this conviction brings him perfect peace of mind. One thing has given him great sorrow. He has heard that his Adventist friends had, many of them, applied to join the Methodist church at Pocasset, and he fears that it argues a loss of that perfect faith and trust in God they had when worshipping as a separate denomination.

"Oh, if I could only see them," he said recently, "and talk with them, I could speedily set them right again."

Freeman takes more interest in his trial than he did at first, and there is little doubt now but that he looks for an acquittal. At the same time he says that he is ready, and he knows that his wife is ready for whatever is God's will.

"We are now in God's hands; he will protect us. Nothing that men can do will cause us to suffer or to be punished. If men only had the truth as we have it, they could see the difference between an act that God demanded and murder," so he is reported recently to have said to the Rev. Mr. Walker.

It is probable that Freeman will have to remain in jail with his wife until next May before he is tried. The Supreme Court, which has jurisdiction in murder cases in Massachusetts, sits in Barnstable County only once a year; therefore his trial will not take place until a year after the tragedy. There will be no chance for a special session unless it is held in the summer months, and it is understood that the judges don't like to give up any part of their vacation. There is an October term at which Freeman and his wife will be called in to plead to the indictment, but this is a law term only, and not for the trial of criminal causes.

There is no doubt now about the trial. There seems to be no option in the matter. The Coroner in his verdict says the crime was premeditated; the physicians at the inquest pronounced Freeman and his wife sane, and no jury de lunatico inquirendo could now find that they were insane.

As Freeman expects to defend himself and his wife on the ground that the killing was a conscientious act of duty, it is probable that the whole religious side of the case may be gone into at the trial. The prevailing feeling here is that no jury can ever be got together in Massachusetts who can agree upon a verdict.

NEWS ITEMS.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—The authorities here are becoming more and more alarmed in regard to the prospect of the spread of the yellow fever. The reports received this morning from Memphis and the neighborhood state that the fever has broken out in various places to which the inhabitants of Memphis have fled. Dispatches from the authorities of New Orleans say there are no cases in that city.

A dispatch from Brownsville, Texas, received by the National Board of Health last night, reports that yellow fever has broken out at Tampico, Mexico.

Dr. Mitchell, at Memphis, reports to the National Board of Health at noon to-day 19 new cases and 7 deaths since 9 A. M. yesterday.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., July 25.—Eleven cases in all were reported to the Board of Health to-day, among the number being Ben Hollander, a well-known saloon-keeper, whose daughter died yesterday. Ten deaths from yellow fever were also officially reported for twenty-four hours ending at 6 p. m. Mrs. Judge Ray's name appears among the list, although she has never been reported as having the yellow fever.

BALTIMORE, Md., July 25.—The first and only case of yellow fever here this season is reported at quarantine station, below the city. The victim is Felix Bidaeches, a Spaniard, 20 years old, and second mate of the Spanish steamer Serra, from Havana last Tuesday.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—The Mayor of St. Louis to-day telegraphed the National Board of Health that yellow fever refugees from Memphis are arriving in such large numbers that the establishment of quarantine has become necessary. He asks that tents and rations for 1,000 persons for thirty days be forwarded at once.

LONDON, July 23.—In the House of Commons this afternoon Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, the Colonial Secretary, announced the receipt of a telegram dated Cape Town July 8, confirming the news of a decisive victory gained by Lord Chelmsford's forces over the Zulus. The battle was fought on July 4. The Zulus, variously estimated at from 10,000 to 20,000 in number, surrounded the British troops, who formed into a hollow square. The Zulus charged the square on all four sides. After the Zulus were broken by the British fire, they were pursued by the cavalry and utterly routed. Lord Chelmsford burned and destroyed all the military kraals, and returned to his camp the same evening.

PARIS, July 24.—The rains in France and Flanders continue, and the prospects for the harvest are more gloomy than ever all over Europe. The Bourse refuses to believe in the late reports of better prospects in Southern Russia.

LONDON, July 26.—Advices from Valparaiso report that large reinforcements have been sent to the Chillian army on the Peruvian frontier.

DIED.

PARRY—At Sandy Hill, N. Y., June 7, 1879, Elder Joseph Parry, in the eighty-fifth year of his age.

The subject of the above notice has long been known to the readers of THE RESTITUTION as an occasional contributor to its columns. He was a man of sterling integrity of character who loved the truth for the truth's sake, constantly enquiring the way pointed out in the divine will which being discovered he joyously espoused and fearlessly advocated regardless of all worldly associations. This disposition enabled him to be among the advanced in the general reformation of creeds of these latter days, aspiring him to the persecutions of church associations and rendering him obnoxious to those who, less favored with inquiring minds, after having found one great truth, crystallize, become lifeless, and never make further advancement. His worldly connections were often found roleplaced but his confidence in God's promises and intentions as revealed through his Son and prophets of old, remained unshaken to the end. When old age and disease had rendered him feeble physically, he was blessed in his last days with a sound mind, his conception of truth being clear, and faith in God's promises through Abraham, bright even while in death's embrace. "He rests from his labors and his works do follow him."

FOREMAN—Near Tilsonburg, Ont., Sister Jane Foreman, aged seventy-five years.

Sister Foreman was born in England and came to the United States in early life, where she spent many years previous to her coming to Canada. She was a consistent member of the Baptist church for many years, but upon her becoming acquainted with the writer and hearing him preach, she embraced the Abrahamic faith and was Scripturally immersed by the writer of this, into the saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. Her life was an honor to Christ, and to her death the brethren in Norwich and its vicinity have met with a loss, also her two sons and one daughter—yes a loss to all who knew her, and THE RESTITUTION will miss her, for she has been a supporter of it for years. By her request the writer took charge of her burial and preached her funeral sermon to an attentive congregation from the words of St. Paul, "For some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame." 1 Cor. xv. 34.

In Christ she sleeps, and we have hope
That when this age shall close,
In Eden's blissful state restored,
We will meet to part no more.

POETRY.

"Wear Out."

"Wear out!" but never let the rust
Of idleness corrode the trust
Your Maker gave; your part to play
In the great drama of "To-day"
Is to deal justly; aid the weak;
Ever for right and freedom speak;
Keep burning clear truth's beacon light,
That its soft radiance, through the night,
Be to the lost on life's bleak moor
Like Bethlehem's star, that shone of yore,
Guiding the shepherds on their way
To where the child Redeemer lay.

"Wear out!" 'Tis nobler far to bear
On breast and brow the marks of care—
Scars of life's conflict, bravely fought,
Patents of peerage, fairly bought,
Titles to claim in the fair clime
Of those who worship truth sublime;
Even if your feet have never trod
The narrow road that leads to God,
Avoid or death . . . sorrow's seat,
Nor let its sandals press your feet;
With contrite heart and tearful eye
Stand still while the cleet pass by.

"Wear out!" Though stern your features grow,
Though raven locks be turned to snow,
Go to the front, nor lagged be!
With sturdy blows comes victory!
Shame on the weak, the nerveless hand,
That can not grasp Truth's shining brand;
That shrinks when from this Freedom's tower
The tocsin sounds the trial hour;
That fails, when Justice calls, to go
With battle-ax and "bended bow,"
And prove upon his native sod
His fealty to man and God!

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I am still striving to live for God and his truth and so let my light shine that others may be led to keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. I feel sorry I am so much behind in paying up for our paper. Hope the brethren and sisters will do all they can to help you in your arduous task to send out the truth; but I suppose there are many of them poor like myself, but if we are rich in faith we shall be heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him. Let us contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. That we are in the closing scenes of this dispensation, we have no doubt. Wicked men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived, and, if it were possible, would deceive the very elect. That the angels are binding the tares in bundles, there is no doubt, when we see these new secret, oath-bound societies springing up all over the world. And now, dear brethren and sisters, let us, who are looking for the coming of Jesus, shun all these delusions of the world, that we may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that are coming to pass, and stand before the Son of Man, which is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

Affectionately,

L. B. CHAMBERLIN.

Editor Restitution:—I am once more at my own quiet home, enjoying a rest for a few days by working in my vineyard and writing for the Age-to-Come Herald and Sabbath Advocate, and reading the back numbers of THE RESTITUTION.

I see by the last number that your salary is but a fraction more than my own. Not don't be discouraged for we will get our reward when Jesus our elder brother returns, and others for neglecting their duty will meet with a great loss.

On the last Sunday in June our annual grove meeting came off with good success. It was held three miles south of the village of Norwich, Ont. The congregation was large, and, all things considered, the attention was good. During the afternoon discourse the thunder was rolling, and the lightning was flashing, but the congregation which would number more than a thousand, remained until I was through with my discourse, the disciples' prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Then we eat the memmorial supper and parted in joyful anticipation of meeting in the kingdom of God. But I left an appointment for the last Sunday in June 1880, in the same grove.

On the first Sunday in July our annual grove meeting was held in Swesburg. The day was beautiful. The audience was very large and gave excellent attention to my discourses. In the morning I discoursed on the Old and New covenants, and in the afternoon on the cross, showing what it is to preach the cross. By the request of the lovers of truth I gave out an appointment to preach in the same grove on the first Sunday in July, 1880, the Lord will.

During the week I visited brother Van Buskirk, in Aylmer, and gave three discourses in the Town Hall to intelligent congregations. Good attention was given to the propositions discussed, namely, "the better country," "the kingdom of God—of David—of Christ—one," and "the cross—showing what it is to preach the cross." Shall visit this place again, the Lord will.

On the second Sunday in July, I preached at brother Davis' in Norwich, from the words of Paul, Eph. ii. 19–22. Brethren came in from a distance of fifteen miles, and the house was more than full. I immersed three (two from Sweaburg and one belonging to Norwich,) into the saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. We ate the memorial supper, and it was a joyful time—an antipast of the coming day of glory. Amen.

Fraternally,

Editor Restitution:—A piece from the Prophetic Times in THE RESTITUTION of April 23d, headed "The Dispensation of His Coming," afforded me uncommon interest. That the right understanding of all Scripture is only possess-' by any one class of avowed believers I cannot allow. We are the body of Christ, say some, (if not just in the words,) and it is vain to look for any correct teaching outside of us. Yet, prove all things, we opine may be an injunction our privilege to heed and apply, though not assenting fully to a declaration however sound such may mostly be.

Shall I say that the Prophetic Times is unworthy of regard because its editor and contributors see not the necessity of immersion? They are Bible students and it is not for me to judge them. Their minds are on things of Revelation; they search into them, and they testify to others concerning them, and if I am favored with their expositions, and these appear the most consonant with the Word, I am interested and thankful. God guide these searchers into more and more light, and unto readiness for the rapture they are anticipating. Would to God it were now!

I find nothing, Bro. C., to incline me to change my mind concerning the individuality of our standing. A treat is it truly in this sundering time for a few of the true seed to meet together, and when they do meet, the occasion is prized. On each other, however, we must none, even the weakest, lean. The call will be to the self; let the self be ready, let the self be sure. But the strong must aid the weak. The former are responsible for the much committed to them.

Quickly did the Philadelphia correspondent of the Times cable the news of the Pocasset sacrifice, so not only Britain and Ireland, but France, Germany and other parts of Europe, yea, and parts beyond Europe, heard the account in a few hours. While probably much comment has already been made, much more will be made after the trial of C. F. Freeman. The infidel press of Europe and America, which issues its millions of sheets, will vent its hatred, its ridicule, its contempt and pity, and the Catholic press will warn its readers of the dangers of Protestantism.

I think I am acquainted with the preacher Brown who is mentioned in THE RESTITUTION of May 28th. Should he ever see this communication he may be reminded of the course taken by himself and the company in Hartford who he frequently visits. I witnessed against the fanciful deductions cherished by this company, and what I then said, I here say again,—you, friend B. and those with you, a few years since in Hartford, were afraid of the Scriptures, spite of your avowed love of them; and I am of the opinion that these Adventists in Massachusetts, with whom C. F. Freeman was associated, called the believers in God's promises to Israel, Judaizers. To one of the company in Hartford I once put the plain declaration in Rev. ii. 26, 27. He turned from it, though he and they professed great light on the book of Revelation.

That Freman and his wife acted conscientiously is questioned by none. We leave them to him who is both just and merciful. Some years since a woman in England attempted to cut off her right hand, thinking it her duty from Matt. v. 30. A person now living in Connecticut plucked out his right eye a long time ago. He thought this was required of him, and I doubt if he regrets having done so. He is widely known, and is respected as an upright man. If Freeman had been sound in understanding God's promises, there would not have been the fanaticism displayed; but the distorted teachings of some Adventists lead to exhibitions of folly—the gathering at Terry Island, Conn., a few years since, for instance. Will friend Brown and preachers of his kind, look carefully over the recorded promises to Abraham in Genesis, and dare to believe the prophecies sure; for conditionality is nonsense.

There is much, Bro. C., of interest concerning Britain and Ireland which I might speak of did health permit. Pain would the great commercial organ (Manchester Guardian) of the north of England present bright reports; but it must tell the truth; so day after day is a repetition of the old story—manufacturing and agricultural depression! Thank God, dark as is the immediate future, there is a bright beyond.

Editor Restitution: Will you please state that my father, the editor of the Bible Examiner, after a long a painful illness, shows some signs of restoration to health; but the nature of the disease is such, that his recovery must be slow and it will be some time before he will be able to resume work. He is thankful for the interest manifested by his friends and will be glad to hear from them. Will other papers please copy. Your's respectfully,

Conference Report.

According to previous announcement the conference composed of Northern Illinois and Southern Michigan met at Dixon, Illinois, June 20th. Preaching in the evening by Brother J. M. Stephenson. Adjourned until 10 a. m. Saturday.

Meeting called to order and Brother John Arnold appointed chairman; after which a committee of three was appointed to make arrangements for proceeding meetings, namely: Julius Anderson, Elliot and J. W. Appleyard. The remainder of the morning was devoted to exhortation and singing.

Met again at 3 p. m.; preaching by Brother J. M. Stephenson. Preaching in the evening by Brother Ravlin, of Chicago. Discourse founded on Matt. vi. 10, "Thy kingdom come." Brother Ravlin was formerly a Baptist preacher of high standing, but he has now taken a bold stand for the truth. He is a man of great power and capable of doing much good.

Met again Sunday 9 a. m. After singing and prayer, Brother J. Arnold addressed the meeting for about thirty minutes, after which Brother Stephenson delivered a discourse on "The Prophetic Kingdom." The "Lord's Supper" was then administered; Brother Arnold presiding. Adjourned until 3 p. m., at which time Brother Ravlin delivered a discourse on the "Unity of the Body." Adjourned until early candle light. Brother Ravlin again addressed the meeting upon the "Signs of the Times." His remarks were good, and we have no doubt but all went home feeling well paid for their trouble and time. A good feeling and interest in the truth prevailed throughout the meeting.

SELECTIONS.

[London Times.]

Assyrian Explorations.

Mr. Hormuzd Rassam has just returned to England, bringing with him the results of his second expedition to explore the mounds of the Tigro-Euphrates Valley. Although not furnishing any such grand discovery as that of the bronze gates from Balawat, the expedition has been an extremely successful one. With the exception of the explorations of Syria, and especially on the site of Carchemish, Mr. Rassam has followed the programme which was detailed in the Times of October 10, 1878. His explorations on the mounds of Nineveh have this time extended to a site hitherto untouched by former explorers—namely, the mound of the Nebby-Yunus, or Tomb of Jonah. In this mound he was fortunately able to make some few explorations and to recover a number of inscribed fragments bearing inscriptions of the reigns of Esarhaddon and Sennacherib, as well as some statuettes in terra cotta, which exhibit a higher art than any before recovered. Explorations have been continued in both the palaces of Sennacherib and Assur-ban-i-pal and many hundreds of inscribed tablets have been recovered. On the mounds of Nimroud, the exploration of the temple site, discovered by Mr. Rassam in his former expedition, was continued, and a number of fragments of tiles and several inscriptions were recovered. This temple or rather temple area, is now found to have contained a number of altars as well as a systematically-arranged series of seats. It would appear rather to have been a species of forum, where religious assemblies, councils, and other gatherings were held. Warned by the violent riots which attended his former explorations in the mound of Balawat, Mr. Rassam has carefully abstained from any attempt to continue the work there. His labors on sites which did not come within the scope of his former expeditions have been most fruitful considering the short period which he was able to devote to them. His explorations at Kilah Shergat, the site of the ancient city of Asaur, the primitive capital of Assyria, have much enriched our knowledge of this site and furnished us with some valuable inscriptions of the early Assyrian Empire. Among these we may specially notice one brick written in a most archaic script. The discoveries which Mr. Rassam has been able to make on the mounds of Babylonia will be welcomed by all students of archæology, for hitherto the parent empire has been much neglected in favor of the northern offshoot, the Assyrian Empire.

Mr. Rassam was able, after a considerable amount of opposition by the brick merchants, who dreaded his presence as a menace to their vandalism, to carry out a series of explorations on most of the mounds. From the examination of the ruins buried beneath the Mugelibo Mr. Rassam has been able to ascertain the site of the edifice from which have come the series of banking and commercial tablets known as the Egibi tablets. From the relation of this edifice to the King's palace, it standing on the northeast side among a number of small buildings evidently the Royal offices, it is now clear that the theory advanced by Mr. Boscawen, that the traders were also the keepers of the King's Treasury, and the revenue officers of the Kings of Babylon, receives a strong confirmation. Hitherto, owing to the irregularity which has characterized the system of digging among the mounds of Babylon, no traces of any regular edifice have been found. Mr. Rassam, however, managed to infuse some species of order among the brick-hunters, and the result was the discovery of several halls and rooms. In a mound called Jubjuba, the Jumjuma of Mr. Rich's memoir, he discovered the remains of a large hall of most rich construction. Painted bricks, rich Indian woods, and enamelled tiles, all indicated the richness of the edifice. His excavations in the Birs Nimroud have brought to light the remains of edifices and a number of inscriptions. A most interesting discovery in connection with this ruin has resulted from the examination of the site by Mr. Rassam—namely, that its destruction was due, not to fire or the vengeance of an enemy, but to a volcanic eruption which has split the whole edifice in twain, and vitrified all the brickwork with which the lava and flame came in contact. The exploration of Babylon has too long been neglected, and it is to be hoped that the short but fruitful visit of Mr. Rassam will tend to direct attention to the site. We are glad to note that Mr. Rassam carried out the roving commission which we indicated in our notice of October 10, 1878, and exercised his authority on the itinerant explorers from Bagdad. He paid a visit to the mound of Tel Ho, and examined and copied the inscription on the black basalt statue which was there. He has also obtained a number of inscribed tablets from this site, and among them are several of those interesting examples of Babylonian cunning, the commercial deeds in duplicate, the one copy forming an envelope to the other. From this site he also obtained a number of very curious inscribed coins, with legends of early monarchs. During his visit to the city of Bagdad he obtained, by purchase, a number of inscriptions, mostly of the contract or commercial class. As Mr. Rassam has only been a few days in England, and many of his cases have still to be forwarded, we cannot as yet fully learn the results of this expedition, but we have every reason to believe that students of both the philology and art of the Assyrian and Babylonian Empires will find much of great importance to aid them in all their researches.

Assyriology.

Considering the acknowledged and growing importance of the Assyrian and Egyptian languages and archæology, it has for years past been matter of surprise and even complaint that our British Universities, by failing to make any provision for these new studies, should have fallen behind those of the continent. France and Germany have each accorded academical recognition to both of these rising branches of learning, and in the person of Professor Leiblein, of Christiania, little Norway has at last honored hieroglyphical research. Some time ago it will be remembered, a very influentially signed memorial, promoted by the Society of Biblical Archæology and the Royal Asiatic Society, was presented to the Commissions for the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, calling attention to the deeply felt need of professorial teaching on these recondite subjects, and urging the Commissioners to do their best to meet the want. Doubtless these reforming bodies will not lose sight of the matter. Meanwhile those interested in these extinct languages, as Dr. Birch terms them, and the old civilizations to which they are the keys, will be glad to learn that Christ's College, Cambridge, has been the first to encourage Assyrian by giving an exhibition for it. Among its recent examinations, according to the printed class list, was one in that extinct tongue, the examiner being that distinguished Assyriologist, Professor Sayce, of Queen's College, Oxford. Mr. Ernest A. Budge was the only candidate, and was awarded Bishop Otway's exhibition for three years. Mr. Budge has studied for some years the cuneiform inscriptions under Professor Sayce, and was lately elected a member of the Royal Asiatic Society. The proceeds of the exhibition being but slender, the young Assyriologist will be franked through his University course at the joint expense of his former employer, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and Mr. W. E. Gladstone, M. P., Professor Sayce, and Dr. Stainer, of St. Paul's Cathedral. It may here be stated that Mr. Hormuzd Rassam, F. R. G. S., having now returned from his last archæological expedition to Assyria, undertaken under the auspicies of the British Museum, will give an account of his highly successful excavations and discoveries in that country at the forthcoming meeting of the Society of Biblical Archæology on Tuesday next.

POETRY.

At Midnight.

L. M. BURGESS.

I lie and look at the stars
And wonder if it can be
That after my night of sorrow and storm
There cometh a rest for me.
If the fountains will be unsealed
And life be bright again,
And even the thought of happiness
Awakens a sense of pain.

I lie and look at the stars
And think of Him who gave
His precious life—tho' He made them all—
Such weaklings as I to save.
And I wonder if it can be
That hiding and sad and lone,
Even by Him I am forgot,
My griefs uncared for, unknown.

No sweet thoughts come to me,
My heart is silent and dumb,
And the words I seem to wait for
In the silence, will not come.
So I lie and look at the stars
With an almost breaking heart
When sudden the peace of my Father comes
And scatters the clouds apart.

I hear the beloved voice,
The beloved smile I see,
And His coming star I see in the heaven
And know that He soon shall be
Here with the waiting hearts
That have sorrowed and sighed so long;
And I turn again to look at the stars
Feeling serene and strong.

Feeling His tender care,
Hearing Thy gentle voice
Bidding me bear for a little while
That forever I may rejoice.
And comforted that I lie
While the smiling stars look down
On a soul at peace and willing
To bear the cross for the crown.

Plain Bible Statements the Basis of Faith.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

There is as much conflict amongst us, as a people, in reference to the resurrection, as there is between us and what is called the Orthodox churches, relative to the soul, spirit, nature and destiny of man, and the kingdom of God. Is it possible that the Bible, by a fair exegesis, teaches the mortal and the immortal emergence of the righteous dead—the resurrection of none but the righteous and yet the resurrection of both the righteous and the wicked,—the resurrection of only a small minority of the dead, and yet the resurrection of all the dead—the simultaneous resurrection of the just and the unjust, and yet that there shall be an interregnum of at least one thousand years between these two resurrections? Is it possible that all the plain statements in the Bible relative to the resurrection of the dead can be fairly and rationally reconciled with so many conflicting and contradictory views? If so, what confidence can be reposed in the intelligibility of the Bible?

Never will there be unity of faith on the subject of resurrection until all parties shall agree to accept no theory which will not harmonize all the plain statements of the inspired writers. If the inspired witnesses do not say what they mean, and mean what they say, who is authorized to speak for them, or tell us what they do mean? Of course I refer to the languages through which the mind of God was originally revealed, or fair translations therefrom in which God becomes his own expositor and always makes it plain.

I hold no views, I will advocate no doctrine which I cannot read in Bible language. The resurrection of none but the righteous is attempted to be proven by quoting texts which refer only to this class; thus ignoring those texts which as plainly and definitely affirm "the resurrection of the unjust" and "the bad," and ignoring these texts also which as positively affirm the resurrection of "all in the graves," and "the rest of the dead," in contradistinction to the righteous dead who will be selected from among the dead to reign with Christ a thousand years. Others only quote those passages which present the successive order of the first and necessarily implied second resurrections,—the resurrection of "the good and the bad," the just and the unjust—thus ignoring the measuring line which God has given with which to determine the duration of time between these resurrections—all of which will be corrected by simply quoting the leading passages referring to the resurrection of the dead, without comment; thus leaving the naked issue between the reader and God, without the comments, explanations, and even duties of poor fallible man whose breath is in his nostrils.

Listen to the words of him who spoke as never man spake. He says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John v, 25, 28, 29.

We will next hear what the Apostle Paul says on this thrillingly interesting subject. He says: "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets. And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Acts xxiv. 14, 15.

"Therefore, as by Adam all men die, so also by Christ all men shall be made alive. Not however together; but every one in his proper band; the first fruit Christ is raised already; afterward, they who are Christ's shall be raised immediately at his coming; consequently before the other dead are raised." 1 Cor. xv. 22, 23, Macknight.

"Therefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, in whom all have sinned. Margin. Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Rom. v. 12, 18.

The Revelator says: "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and those which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. And when the thousand years are expired Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, etc. And I saw the dead small and great stand before God .... and the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and the grave delivered up the dead which were in them."

In one more short article I will let the Bible be its own expositor in reference to plain statements which by misapplication are supposed to be in conflict with the foregoing. About a month ago, and while the discussion was going on, I requested the editor to permit me to write an article or two on the subject of resurrection. This he agreed to do, but requested a little delay, and that the articles should not be lengthy. In comparison to many other articles and questions from magazines the two, including this article, will be short. I have abstained from writing on the subject of resurrection for about three years. And if brethren cannot abstain from hard epithets they had better give in plain Bible language what God says, and leave the readers to judge for themselves.

"Ye Must be Born Again."

In THE RESTITUTION of June 25, 1879, is an article headed "Ye Must be Born Again." With a question to any one, endorsing water birth, as meaning baptism. If you can spare me space in your paper, I should like for the truth's sake, to relieve this subject from its seeming difficulties.

That the above text refers to a resurrection, is evident. But that it is a spirit birth, I cannot concede for this reason, (viz.,) Jesus says, John iii. 6: "That which is born of the spirit is spirit." Again, in Luke xiii. 28: "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out." If only those having a spirit birth can see the kingdom, these wicked will be spirit beings. This Scripture, thus applied, proves too much. I understand the expression, "born again," simply to teach, a bringing back again into the same life, as at the first birth, only through a different process. Man came from dust, and goes back to dust; and he will come back, be born again, from dust. This is simply mortal life restored. The righteous have two births differing from this, as taught in John iii. 5. They are experienced by true believers only, and are prerequisite to entering into the kingdom; not to see it only and be left out.

These two births are water and spirit births. The writer insists that the water birth cannot be immersion, because it requires a begetting in order to a birth. And then assumes the begetting by Paul, 1 Cor. iv. 15, also 1 Pet. i. 23, and James i. 18, to be spirit begetting. The assumption is unscriptural. Paul begot them through the gospel, and not of the spirit. Paul preached the gospel, and they believed it, and were thus begotten by the word. Belief is the germ, and when sufficiently developed, it will produce obedience from the heart, to that form of doctrine delivered unto us. Rom. vi. 17. The last act of this form is, being baptized into Christ, which constitutes the water birth as a result of the word begetting and development. Now they are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the spirit of God dwell in them. Rom. viii. 9. Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his (ibid). And now being born into a new life they are new creatures in Christ Jesus. Rom. vi. 11–13; 2 Cor. v. 17; Gal. vi. 15. Now they are new born babes, and can be fed with milk. 1 Pet. ii. 2; Heb. v. 12, 13; 1 Cor. iii. 2. But could not prior to birth.

Peter's illustration was drawn from a child that had been born, and not in gestation. Now they are in the same life with their father Paul, and got there in the same way that he did, viz.: By being begotten by the gospel and born of water. See Acts xxii. 6–10, for Paul's begetting and birth. Now they are sons of God in Christ Jesus. "And because they are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying, Abba, Father." In this we have the begetting of the spirit, by the spirit; not the word; for they had believed the word prior to this, and were members of the body of Christ; for this reason God sent forth the spirit of his Son. Now they are no more servants, but sons; and if sons, then heirs of God through Christ. Gal. iv. 6, 7. By being baptized into Christ, they are grafted into him. Rom. xi. 17, 24; vi. 3; Gal. iii. 27. And as the scion draws life from the tree into which it is grafted, so they draw spirit life from Christ; and by sowing to the spirit, they develop for the spirit birth, and of the spirit, shall reap life everlasting. Gal. vi. 8; Rom. viii. 11.

In 1 Cor. xv. 46, 47, Paul contrasts the two federal heads—the earthy and the heavenly. And in verse 48 the resurrected ones corresponding with their respective heads. "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly such are they also that are heavenly. The earthy will be born again earthy, like their earthy head, see the kingdom, and be cast into outer darkness. The heavenly will be born of the spirit like their heavenly head, and enter into the kingdom and possess it forever." John iii. 3, 5: So we are begotten of the flesh and born of the flesh. Begotten through the word and born of water by the word. Eph. v. 26; Titus iii. 5-7; 1 Pet. iii. 21: Begotten by the spirit, and born of the spirit at the resurrection, if worthy.

I could give several reasons why the water birth cannot consistently be applied to the fleshly birth, as I have been a practitioner for many years. I will, however, notice but one. No child, in natural birth, was ever born of water, unless it had two mothers. For they are born of a woman, which would be one mother, and if born of water, it would make another mother. For that of which a thing is born under natural law, is, of necessity, the mother to the thing born. Consequently, if a child in natural birth is born of water, it, of necessity, has two mothers from one begetting. The writer says there cannot be two births from one begetting, consequently the water birth cannot be the fleshly birth. Above all things, let us believe and obey the gospel, get the spirit and sow to it, that we may receive the spirit birth.

H. H. KENDALL.

"What Must I do to be Saved?"

How many young persons are asking in hopeless perplexity "what they shall do?" The conflicting opinions of men confuse and bewilder. They can see no light, no way is open, no foundation set for their wandering feet. No key is given whereby to unlock the blessed truths, that if obeyed, will lead to life. For these I feel the deepest sympathy and would fain use my humble pen in teaching them something of God's plan. But my dear young friends, is there really so much difficulty in arriving at the truth? However much confusion there may be in human creeds, God has given us but one faith. Eph. iv. 1–6. And that faith, we must have, if we would be saved. "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved: but he that believeth not, shall be condemned," is the divine commission.

There are really only three theories—differ widely as they may, one claiming that man cannot die, that he goes to heaven at death and receives his inheritance and his reward. Another, that there is no future life for man, while a third makes him unconscious in death, looks to the resurrection and the coming of Jesus, as the time of recompense, and gives this earth to him, under the rulership of Jesus, as his final abode. Now which is the gospel?

You go back to the garden of Eden and see fair Eve reaching up for the forbidden fruit, see it lying on her soft palm, and tremble as she carries it slowly and distrustfully to her lips. You watch her, as finding the taste to be pleasant, she turns to seek her husband, and listen, while with the same beguiling words whereby she was deceived, she presses it into his hands. You shudder as he takes the apples of death, for in the eating of them is the breaking of law, the fall of the race. The chance of living forever, through Adam is lost. He is thrust out of the garden of Eden and away from the tree of life. He has not tasted of the leaves that would have endowed him with immortality, and the angel with the flaming sword will not permit his return. Satan's will was not carried out, his promise to his deluded victims, was not fulfilled. Yet that specious falsehood is woven into the speech, the sermon, the poesy, the literature and the faith of all nations. It lost Paradise, and the dominion of earth to man, yet he sings and believes it still.

"Thou shalt surely die" was God's penalty. "Because thou hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat—dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return" Whatever the thou was, whether the soul as an entity apart from the body, or the whole man, it must die; it was taken out of the ground, it is dust and must go back to dust. The "thou" of Adam died, and you must die. There is no wisdom, nor device, nor knowledge in the grave. The dead know not anything, no ransom can be paid, that will hold you back from death. Abraham and Sarah died. Job waits in the house of the grave till his change shall come. David's hope was that he should be satisfied when he awaked in the likeness of his Lord. The prophet wanted the dwellers in dust "to awake and sing" because the earth was to cast out her dead. Paul affirmed that if Christ had not been raised, the sleepers in Jesus had perished. His hope was centered upon the resurrection of the dead. He was judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers. Unto that promise the twelve tribes hoped to come. For this hope's sake they served God day and night. "Why," Paul asked, "should it be thought an incredible thing that God should raise the dead?" intimating that only through a resurrection, could the promise of God made unto the father's be fulfilled. The time will come when death will be swallowed up in victory but that victory will be given through our Lord Jesus Christ. "The gift of God is eternal life through Christ Jesus our Lord." "Every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life and be raised up at the last day." Do you believe this? Do you believe God? or do you still cling to Satan's old lie?

The fathers hoped for a resurrection from the dead, because of the promises. What were there promises? To multiply their seed, that a unit seed should possess the gate of his enemies, that in this seed all nations of the earth should be blessed. That they should have all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, both they and their seed, and that God should be their God. Abraham's eyes noted the beauty of the promised land. He walked through it in its length and breadth. For him were its boundaries set. The title deeds that made him its heir, were put into his hands. No such deed has ever given heaven to man; God's oath has not been pledged to any such covenant, Abraham sojourned not there as a pilgrim and stranger. Isaac and Jacob dwelt not in tents on its flower-gemmed plains. The earth then is to be mans' future abode, "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." "The meek shall inherit the earth," but how? Not surely as it is now! Not with the curse upon it! Not in all its slime and pollution! No there is to be a new earth. The blessing of Abraham comes on the Gentiles through Christ. To Christ were the promises made. The Davidial covenant makes him inherit the throne of his father David, Luke i. 32, Psalm lxxxvii., Psalm lxxii., his dominion extends from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth, his kingdom endures forever, Dan. vii. 27. When he comes to reign all the earth will be filled with glory and be made like the garden of the Lord.

All who belong to Christ are Abraham's seed and heirs according to promise. Believe these things and you believe God. God's children have promise of entering into rest, but not through unbelief. The things heard must be believed. The form of doctrine has something to do with the molding. Believe that Jesus died and rose again, and that because he lives you can live also. Believe that you can have life through his name and take that name upon you by being baptized and by rising to walk in newness of life, until you have the name you are not God's child, and you can only get it by being baptized in God's authorized way, until that time you are an alien out of Christ and condemned to die. You can be justified only through faith, and God does not recognize as faith, a belief not founded upon his word. You want to be saved and yet you are not willing to come by faith. You want to be saved and yet you do not want to be baptized. You want to be saved and yet deny the Lordship of Jesus, refuse to make the good confession. The restitution of all things has approached, earth's King is coming soon. Are you ready? Are you getting ready? Are you willing to hear, believe and obey? The time is short, oh come to Jesus and be saved!

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Report of the Iowa Christian Association.

The Christian Association met at New Hartford, Butler county, Iowa, according to previous notice, the time being entirely given to religious exercises until the 26th inst., at 2 o'clock, p. m., when the Association was called to order by the president, and Bros. S. Peck, John Stevens and G. R. Chown were chosen a committee to arrange for further religious exercises of the meeting, after which we adjourned until 4 o'clock this evening.

Met as per adjournment. Minutes read and approved. The delegates not all being present, a motion was carried that each church represented, furnish the secretary with a list of the names of their delegates before the next meeting. Adjourned to the call of the chair.

Met at the call of the chair at 10 o'clock, a. m., 27th inst. Minutes read and approved, after which the roll of delegates was called, showing the churches at Traer, West Irving, Gifford, Spring Creek, and Floyd were represented. A request from the Spring Creek church, and also one from Traer, asking the Association to endorse their action in forgiving J. W. Haughawout, and calling him to preach for them. Pending a motion to endorse their action, a motion to table the request was made. After discussing the whole subject, the chair ruled the whole subject out as contravening the constitution, and a motion to appoint a committee of five to investigate this matter was carried, a motion that the chair appoint being lost. A recess was then taken until 2:30 o'clock. After recess, said committee was chosen by show of hands, resulting in the choice of brethren Fisher, John Stevenson, C. C. Ramsey, E. Siple, Silas Peck. Committee retire with instruction to investigate thoroughly the charges against J. W. Haughawout and report as soon as practicable, after which we adjourned to the call of the chair.

Met at the call of the chair at 7:30 o'clock. Committee report as follows: Mr. president and members of the Christian Association of Iowa, your committee would respectfully submit the following report in reference to Bro. J. W. Haughawout, that after having examined the testimony that came under our observation and having examined his testimony in regard to the affair, do hereby declare that they believe he is not guilty of the charge of adultery or of instigating in any manner the Gifford tragedy, but that the great mistake of his life was in allowing her to accompany him across the country, and by this act of indiscretion place himself in the hands of his enemies and the enemies of the truth, thus bringing reproach upon the cause of truth and distress upon himself and friends. He confesses his sins and prays for pardon and the confidence of his brethren. Signed: Geo. Fisher, C. C. Ramsey, J. H. Stevenson, Silas Peck, Elias Siple. A motion to adopt the report of the committee was carried, after which the meeting stood adjourned until 11:30 to-morrow.

June 28, met as per adjournment. Minutes read and approved. No response to call for enrollment of additional delegates. From report of Bro. C. C Ramsey, evangelist, we gather that he has baptized forty persons during the year, and financially that he has received from all sources $183.99; amount of salary as per agreement, $141.55; balance due, $7.56. The church at Floyd report regular services and preaching by Eld. C. C. Ramsey, and an interesting Union Sunday School. Treasurer reports collected on subscription $20.09; paid for evangelist labor, $15; balance on hand, $4.09. Eld. Myers reports from Timber Creek; hold meetings twice per month, preaching once per month; have baptized five; prospects fair. Eld. Haughawout reports church at Traer numbers twenty-three—gradual additions. Church, at Spring Creek have baptized a number; have a lively Sunday School; church numbers thirty-two. At Gifford, church numbers twenty; have organized a Sunday School which is prospering. Bro. Silas Peck was chosen to fill the vacancy in mission board occasioned by the absence of Bro. Henry Peck.

At the meeting of the board the indebtedness of the association was paid and it was decided that we will not employ an evangelist the present year or before the annual meeting, but that parties of like faith will be furnished the tent who will pay for the removal and return of the same. The unpaid subscription was turned over to Elder Myers with instruction to collect and work out the same according to his his best judgment.

The annual meeting was appointed to be held at Traer, commencing Oct. 2d, 1879.

The preaching during the meeting was by Elders Ramsey, J. M. Stevenson, Brayton and others, and was well calculated to edify and instruct, as may be known by the names of the speakers.

BREVITIES.

The daily circulation of the most popular newspapers in the City of Mexico, with a population of 200,000, does not exceed 2,000 copies. All the newspapers in the republic aggregate a consumption of only about 800 reams a month, a quantity that many single mills in the United States could supply, and yet not run a fourth of the time.

According to a careful computation, the number of daily and weekly papers and other periodicals published on the surface of our globe is 23,291. Of this number there are in Africa 50, in Australia 100, in Asia 387, in America 9,129, in Europe, 13,625. Among European countries, England publishes the largest number of journals, viz., 2,509; after which come France, 2,000; Italy, 1,226; Austria, 1,200; Russia, 500.

The animal remains found in the Rocky Mountains show the gigantic size of the monsters of pre-historic ages. The backbone of one animal is three and a half feet wide, and implies a neck fully five feet in width. The diplodvcus was fifty feet long. Dinosaurians were exhumed twenty-five feet long. The atlantosaurians, a lizard-footed animal, must have been forty feet long when alive. Another animal, embedded in a hard matrix of rock which was removed with difficulty after much blasting, was thirty feet long. Such were some of the monsters that once enjoyed themselves around the Rocky Mountains. They were reptiles, and most of their friends and foes were the same, even the birds being half reptiles. What eggs some of these reptiles must have laid, may be imagined when one female atlantosaurian is described as 100 feet long, with thigh bones measuring nine feet, and probably twenty-five feet high.

BIRTHPLACES OF ARTS.

There is a talk in England, says the London Globe, of the institution of a fund for the exploration of certain spots in Western Asia, just as a similar work has been carried on in Palestine. The interest of scholars in this part of the world has of late been immensely increased, and it will be very surprising if a scheme for a systematic and competent research in what is now generally recognized as the birthplace of all our arts and sciences, does not call forth a considerable degree of enthusiasm, not only among those learned in Oriental matters, but among all who are capable of understanding the kind of knowledge to which such exploration would pretty certainly lead. We already possess relics of the ancient Babylonian Empire which cannot but fill with astonishment any one who will take the trouble to examine them, showing, as they do, that in an age of the world which we are accustomed to regard as an age of all but universal darkness and savagery, there flourished a degree of learning and civilization which seems in many respects to have been but little behind our own. It is really startling to find a library catalogue compiled some 4,000 years ago, appended to which is a direction to the student to write down and hand to the librarian the number of the book he wishes to consult, just as he would have to do to-day at the British Museum or the Guildhall Library. There are now in the collection at Bloomsbury, Assyrian bas-reliefs testifying to an extinct, but advanced, civilization to an extent of which comparatively few persons have any idea. Fortunately, the ancient libraries of Mesopotamia were largely made up of tablets composed of clay, and the fact that many of these have survived the wreck of the empires, and the extinction of the learning and civilization to which they testify, and are now in our possession, of course affords abundant reason to believe that Western Asia still possesses hidden treasures of a similar kind, such as would certainly have the most profound interest for every department of learning. So great an addition has recently been made to our knowledge of this old world that it is a matter for wonder that men and money and state influence have not by this time been secured for the prosecution of earnest and extensive exploration.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortalized saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Science versus the Sure Foundation.

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ. 1 Cor. iii. 11.

For there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. Acts iv. 12.

For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. vi. 23.

And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. 1 Jno. v. 11-12.

Jesus said, I am the resurrection and the life. Jno. xi. 25.

I beg leave to invite attention to, and to emphasize the passages of Scripture above cited in view of the fact, that there are those at the present day who claim that science (?) has demonstrated the existence of a soul within the body, which continues to exist after it "sloughs off the material body." See The Parousia by Israel Warren (Propositions 1 to 9, inclusive, on pages 220 and 222).

"These conclusions are not," says Mr. Joseph Cook, "mere theories, but demonstrated facts of science. We are following haughty, axiomatic certainty. In clear and cool precision, science comes to the idea of a spiritual body," (existing contemporaneously with the material body). "We must not forget that this conclusion is proclaimed in the name of philosophy of the severest sort. The verdict is scientific; it happens also to be Biblical (?). Is it the worse for that?"

"The soul, as an occupant of its etherial enswathment, operates, in part, unconsciously, and, in part, consciously."

"It co-operates with the vital force."

"It is not identical with the vital force."

"It is the morphological agent that weaves all living tissues. It spins nerves. It weaves the muscles, the tendons, the eye, the brain. It arranges each part in harmony with all the other parts of the organism."

I do not, in this paper, propose to assail these views from a scientific standpoint; and yet, I cannot refrain from asking who, or what, spins the nerves and weaves the tissues for the day? It cannot be denied that, whoever or whatever it is, spins him a pretty good olfactory nerve. It may be, however, if the opinions of these savans are correct, that there is some foundation for the hope of the poor Indian,

"Who thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company."

I now submit; are not the men who advocate the views indicated in the above quotations endeavoring to lay another foundation than that is laid, on which to build a hope of eternal life? Are they not disregarding the teaching of the Holy Spirit; that there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved? Are their views in harmony with the declaration of the inspired apostle, that the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord? Are they not directly opposed to the declaration of another inspired apostle: "That he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life;" for says the apostle: "He that believeth not, God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son?" Do they not ignore; nay, do they not absolutely contradict our Savior when he gave to the grief-stricken Martha, whose brother lay fast bound in the toils of the grim monster, the blessed assurance: "I am the resurrection and the life." I am he who will unbar the tomb and bid death relax his iron grasp, at the resurrection, at the last day. I can exercise that power now if I will. "Lazarus, come forth."

Again, I submit; have not these wise ones, in the language of the 15th verse of the 28th chapter of Isaiah, said: "We have made a covenant with death, and with hell (the grave) are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us?" The meaning is, we have it all arranged with death and the grave; we are not going to be hurt by them; there is no trouble to come from this source. In fact, we do not die; we only slough off the material body and the slough is all the grave gets (they claim the resurrection occurs at death), and it is welcome to that; who cares for a slough? They do not ask, as did Job, if a man die, shall he live again? They do not say in the submissive language of that venerable patriarch: "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come," and "If I wait the grave is mine house."

Oh, Job, hadst thou been wise; hadst thou been a scientist, thou wouldst not have taken so gloomy a view of death; thou wouldst not have said to corruption: "Thou art my father; nor to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister."

Are we not justified in applying to them the language found in the remaining portion of the verse I have cited: "They have made lies their refuge, and under falsehood have they hid themselves?" God regards those who do not believe the record he has given of his Son—the purport of which is, that there is no eternal life except by virtue of a relationship to that Son—as having called in question his veracity. See 1 John v. 10-12, inclusive. And by the mouth of his holy prophet he here accuses those of falsehood who have made covenant with death and agreement with hell. It is, then, a question of veracity between God and man—"Let God be true, but every man a liar."

Is not this the work of the adversary? Is he not "fighting out, on the same line," the battle he began in Eden for the destruction of the human race? Yea, is it not the very same lie? Ye shall not surely die.

But, note how subtle he is still. It is the same lie, but he has dressed it in the attractive garb and presents it in the fair phrase of science. He has associated it with that which is lovely and enticing. He says this is knowledge, this is wisdom, this is science. Oh, science, who does not revere; who does not love science,—true science! The adversary takes even a little bolder stand now. To the woman he said, ye shall not surely die; ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil. Now he says you cannot die; you are like God, having immortality dwelling in you. You cannot die. You are not dependent on the Lord Jesus Christ for a future life. Oh, presumption great! If, sometimes "man clothed in a little brief authority cut such fantastic tricks before high heaven as makes the angels weep," in what attitude does he stand, and what emotions does he excite in the minds of the heavenly hosts, who dares to stand up and utter words contrary to the declarations of Jehovah Almighty?

Let me now, in all candor and sincerity, commend to all who teach the views we have been considering, and to all who may be influenced by their teaching, a careful consideration of the three verses immediately following the one to which I have already directed attention. "Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell (the grave) shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it."

Is it not worthy of remark that this prophecy of the Messiah should be introduced here with almost startling abruptness, between the charges made against the scornful men and the prediction of their downfall and complete overthrow? Is it not for the purpose of bringing into strong contrast the fate of those who had made lies their refuge, and that of those who put their trust in the sure foundation, who are built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone? And what assurance have those built upon this foundation that victory awaits them? Let us hear the Apostle Paul on this point, for he speaks with direct reference to it. In 1 Thess. iv. 13: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others that have no hope."

Now, what is the hope, and what the ground of consolation? Does Paul tell them that in fact they do not die, that they only slough off the material body, that they have an immortal soul that never dies? Does he tell them that, though they seem to the living to be asleep, that, in fact, they are wider awake than ever before? On the contrary, he admits they are asleep (and he uses the terms, sleep and death, interchangeably), but bases the consolation solely on an awakening; on the promise of a resurrection from the dead.

Paul seemed to think there was a chance of misapprehension in the minds of the Thessalonians. They might think that those who would be living when the Lord comes, would have some advantage over those who had died; but he tells them they shall not prevent (anticipated or go before) them which are asleep. (Note here that, according to Mr. Cook and his confrères, all will be alive before the Lord comes, will certainly not be before the dead who remain). The apostle proceeds: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." The order of events is the same as stated in 1 Cor. xv. 52, 53: "For the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible (the dead) must put on incorruption, and this mortal (the living) must put on immortality." The dead will rise first, then the living will be changed quickly, in the twinkling of an eye, and altogether we will go up to "meet the Lord in the air." "And so," adds the apostle, "shall we ever be with the Lord, wherefore comfort one another with these words," (when one dies). Only these, Paul, only these. May we not talk of the bright and happy spirits gone to Paradise, and waiting for us to come? May we not tell our grief-stricken friend, that the dear one is not dead, but that angels have borne it away to heaven?

If there is any warrant anywhere in God's sacred Book, for deriving consolation from considerations like these, is it not strange, that Paul, seemingly anxious to offer to the Thessalonian brethren all the consolation the nature of the case afforded, should have been silent as the grave regarding an existence to be enjoyed by the good prior to the resurrection? Is it not strange, I ask? But read again: "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality (when the dead shall be raised and the living changed) then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory." There is then a victory for those who are built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone. Yes, the time comes at last when they can shout defiantly: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

Yes, thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. No victory but through him. All power is given unto him in heaven and in earth. He alone can command and death will obey. He alone can speak and the portals of the grave will fly wide. He alone can wrest from the icy grasp of the grim monster those who are his at his coming. He alone can clothe this mortal upon with immortality. Will he do it? Listen to some of the assurances he has given. "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth, and believeth in me shall never die. Let not your heart be troubled. I am the way, the truth and the life. I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go to prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also. And, behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be. I am Alpha and Omega; the beginning and the end; the first and the last. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning-star." Such, brethren, is the Captain of our salvation, made perfect through suffering. He descended into the tomb; he triumphed over death; he ascended up on high; he led captivity captive and gave gifts to men.

Other foundation can no man lay, but is the foundation sure? Hear the testimony of Jehovah of hosts: "Therefore thus saith the Lord God: behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste; shall not be ashamed; shall not be confounded." Yes, thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, the foundation is sure, for he has said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Then let us take our stand on this foundation; let us beware of the wiles of the adversary; let him not beguile us by promises of future life, by virtue of any other power than that which is vested in the Lord Jesus Christ; let us be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, inasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

SELECTIONS.

[New Jersey Journal.]

Significance of Changing a River Course.

Mr. Editor:—Intelligence comes to us from the Old World that the Russian troops and engineers will soon have turned the river Oxus or Gihon, from its present channel, and instead of finding an outlet in the Aral Sea, it will pour its waters into the Caspian Sea. As an item of news, it may be an interesting event to a few persons on this side of the Atlantic, who are watching the progress of modern civilization in Asia; and as an engineering work it will have interest to others; others still will be interested in it, as it affects the commercial relations of European and Asiatic countries, and still others as it effects changes in the map of Europe and Asia. From all these different standpoints, the event is one, the importance of which cannot yet be realized, and which is paralleled only perhaps, by the opening of the Suez Canal. It opens up the highest to sealed countries of Turkestan and Afghanistan to the influences of modern civilization, and is one more grand stride of that already overmastering power among European nations (the Russian Bear) toward one of the objects of her insatiable ambition, the subjugation of Iddia. It would be interesting to note how patiently and persistently Russia has followed step by step the policy marked out by the famous will of Peter the Great. Steadily onward; never turning from her course because of obstacles, but setting herself to work patiently to remove or overcome them, the grand end and aim of all her struggles is to "hold away over Europe."

To the student of prophecy there is no more interesting subject at the present time than the workings and movements of this great political and military power of the North. Every movement is full of significance; every work accomplished is a step nearer the grand culmination of the declarations made by holy men of old, which spake as they were moved by Holy Spirit. The turning of the river Oxus then, is looked upon by such an one with more than ordinary interest, as it serves to show how some of these declarations may be accomplished, which otherwise might seem impossible. So in regard to many of the prophecies which seem when spoken, the most unlikely things to take place that could be conceived of; when the time arrives, circumstances are so changed as to make their accomplishment easy, and apparently only the natural course of events. When Jeremiah prophesied concerning the desolation of Jerusalem "Behold the days come saith the Lord—that I will make this city desolate and a hissing: every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof. And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend in the siege and straitness, wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them," it seemed to all human reasoning a most unlikely thing to happen. When the time came for its fulfillment, it was literally fulfilled in what seemed a perfectly natural manner, and only the few believers of God's word among the great mass of the people, saw any thing in the events that transpired more than could be accounted for by natural causes. So in the present case, only those who take heed to the "sure word of prophecy as to a light shining in a dark place," can see the darkness which envelopes the future history of events to which they relate, anything to excite either fear or hope. Men may reason from cause to effect and arrive at definite conclusions about some things; but concerning the destiny of nations, perhaps no two out of a hundred reasoners will arrive at the same conclusions, and none of them are likely to be right; "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." What the Lord hath said, is the only thing we can take without question, then, in regard to the destiny of empires and nations. The prophecy in Ezekiel xxxviii., xxxix., gives light upon the movements of this great power of the North, called in the prophecy "Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal." "Gog is a proper name used as the family name or regal designation, as Cæsar or Czar. Magog is the country of which Gog is the King or ruler.) The name has its origin in one of the sons of Japhet. Ros, seems identified originally with the river Araxes originally called Ros; Meshech is evidently a tribe of the same great nation and has given a name to Moscow and Muscovy beyond all doubt; Tubal may be recognized in the modern Tobolski. Gog, then, is the name of the autocrat or ruler. Magog, the land or people over which he rules; Ros we identify as Russia; Meshech, as Muscovy, and Tubal as Tobolski."

These names can be applied to no other countries or peoples except those known in modern times as "All the Russias."

This prophecy of Ezekiel then has to do with "All the Russias," which is one of the principle actors in the events covered by the "latter years." These events, it will be seen, cannot be accomplished without the co-operation of Persia and other countries spoken of. The opening up of a great highway for steamers and the largest river craft from the Black and Caspian Seas to the countries of Persia and farther East, via the Oxus, a river approaching in volume to the Mississippi, apparently makes their alliance and co-operation an easy and perfectly natural thing; and so we see one more step toward the final accomplishment of all that the Lord hath spoken, by his prophets. One prophetic event after another is taking place; the nations are falling into line, and it will not be long before the situation is made up, and Gog will come out of "the north parts," with all his mighty hosts, to contend upon the mountains of Israel for the mastery of Europe and Asia, with the only other power which he really fears at present, Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, all the young lions thereof representing England and her dependencies and allies will oppose his progress and feebly attempt to drive him back, but in vain. None but Almighty power can stay his course. "And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face—and I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God; every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people with him, an overflowing rain, great hailstones, fire and brimstone. Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord. And in that day I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel, the valley of the passengers on the east of the (Mediterranean) sea; and it shall stop the noses of the passengers. And there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude, and they shall call it the valley of Hamon-gog (the multitude of Gog).

Here we have certain propheticdeclarations concerning events, persons, lands and peoples. It is the popular and commonly received opinion of the so-called Christian world, that the prophecies are mere symbolisms, some of which have reference somehow to literal events which have long since become matters of history, and do not concern us of the present day, and others are only to be fulfilled in a spiritual sense.

If this be so, of what use is the Apostle Peter's injunction to those of like precious faith, to take heed to the sure word of prophecy. What light could such an uncertain word give, and who is to tell us where the literal leaves off, and the spiritual begins, and the time, place and manner of their fulfillment? When doctors of such faiths can come to an agreement on these questions, it will be quite soon enough for those who have respect for the word of the Lord, and love his testimonies to abandon their faith.

"Thy testimonies are wonderful; therefore doth my soul keep them. The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple." D.

[Portsmouth Times.]

Ingersoll's Sermon.

Since the day when Mark Antony stood by the bleeding body of imperial Cæsar, pointed out the gaping wounds through which his mighty soul had winged its flight, and showed the rent that "envious Casca's dagger made," no oration has been uttered by human lips more full of exquisite beauty and ineffably tender and touching pathos than that delivered by Robert Ingersoll over his dead brother. There lay the adored dead, enwreathed in flowers, while about him sat those who had been his very own and to whom he was life itself. His wife, his sons, his daughters, the brother who idolized him, and the friends who honored and esteemed him, pressed round about him who lay as calm, so still, so unmoved by all the agony of their most bitter grief. Then Colonel Ingersoll stood up, and with one hand upon the coffin, in a low tone thrilled with grief, uttered the words of the address which, viewed in a literary and intellectual light, contains all of beauty and pathos that any language is able to express. But out of their very beauty and dreamy loveliness comes the deep regret that there is absent from them that which would prove their crowning charm and render them really sublime. In them is the expression of the warmest and truest love that human hearts can utter, but they contain the very wall of a despair which is all the more despairing because it is unbleased by a single ray of hope.

No hint of the joyful resurrection, no mention of the bliss of a reunion, no thought of immortal blessedness, no word of eternal happiness, nothing but a farewell which was final and forever.

An Ancient Nation.

At the departure of the children of Israel from Egypt, China was seven hundred years old; and when Isaiah prophesied of her she had existed fifteen centuries. She has seen the rise and decline of all the great nations of antiquity. Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome have long since followed each other to the dust; but China still remains, a solitary and wonderful monument of patriarchal times. Then look at the population of the country, roughly estimated at four hundred millions—ten times the population of the United States, more than thirteen times the population of Great Britain and Ireland. Every third person that lives and breathes upon this earth and beneath these heavens is a Chinese; every third grave that is dug is for a Chinese.—Rev. Sylvester Whitehead.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 6, 1879.

WE have had a spell of poor health for two or three days since our last number went to press. Business matters of a personal nature have made demands on a portion of our time. Some matters have, consequently, been temporarily delayed.

IN the present number will be found an article from Brother Myers, on the Second Death. He proposes to write one more. Brother Stephenson's second article on the opposite side of the question appears also in this issue. As Brother Magruder has taken some part in this discussion, it will be perfectly just and fair for him to more fully express himself in one more article. We suggest the propriety of then letting this topic rest awhile.

THE work to which attention was called last week in our book notices, on "Astronomical Etiology or Star Prophecies Concerning Coming Disasters on the Earth from 1881 to 1885," is one of peculiar interest at a period like the present. The author demonstrates, from the history of the past, that the periods of the most fatal epidemics have synchronized with the perihelia of some one, or more, of the great planets. We have not space to give quotations to illustrate the positions taken by the author. We would advise all our readers to send to Brother Thomas Wilson for a copy. It is illustrated by diagrams showing the relative positions of the four greatest known planets in their respective orbits during the next five or six years. In the yellow fever in the south, the late famines in India and China, the dire epidemics in Brazil and North Africa, the Black death in Russia, "coming events are casting their shadows before."

Perihelia.

As considerable interest has been excited in regard to the coming perihelia of the four great planets within the next few years, the paper subjoined below may interest our readers; more especially when we take into consideration that "the periods of the clustering of the spots on the sun have been observed to attain their maxima at intervals corresponding, almost precisely, with that of Jupiter's revolution; and also the period of the maxima of auroras and mean diurnal variations of the magnetic needle, inferred to be the effects of the attractive force of the planets, Jupiters mass greatly ruling." The selection refers to a "condition of affairs that occurred about 2,000 years ago." By consulting an account of plagues that have afflicted the world, we find that a very little over 2,000 years ago a plague raged in Syria, Egypt, and the Greek Islands which destroyed 2,000 persons every day:

[Providence Journal]

SUN SPOTS.

A large group of sun spots has recently appeared upon the solar disc. It is described as long and very deep, with umbra and penumbra dark and well defined. These spots are probably the forerunners of a change in the solar condition to be anticipated about these days. The sun has been quiescent for years; few spots have varied the monotony of his surface, and few flaming fires have burst beyond the bounds of his photosphere. He has been passing through the minimum epoch of sun-spots, and is now approaching the maximum of the same phase. No astronomer pretends to explain the exact nature and mission of sun-spots, but the most reliable observers agree that they appear in the greatest magnitude and abundance after an interval of about eleven years, at a period coincident with the perihelion of the planet Jupiter, whose near approach to the sun stirs up an intense commotion among the solar fires. As the perihelion of our brother planet occurs in September of next year, and the three outer planets, by a very unusual combination of forces, are doing their best to help on his malignant purpose, it is natural to expect unusual commotion among celestial powers for two or three years to come. Just such a condition of affairs occurred about 2,000 years ago, but the earth safely weathered the gale, and has passed unharmed through many a terrific elemental experience since. Therefore sun-spots by the hundreds, tongues of fire darting in rosy protuberances, brilliant auroras flashing in response to solar electricity, and every form of warring elements which can agitate the terrestial atmosphere, are naturally to be expected about these times. A wise philosopher will bear up under storms, as well as rejoice in sunshine, and a firm faith will trust in the power that holds the solar system in harmonious equipoise.

The Second Death.—Upon Whom it Does not Pass.

O. M. MYERS.

When I penned my article on 1 Cor. xv. 21-26, I then did not expect to say more on the subject of the Resurrection, but Brother Magruder's questions so kindly submitted to me, and the appeals made to me by others, both personal and by letter, to write on the subject, renders it necessary for me to say more. Therefore, notwithstanding it may be unpleasant to some of the readers of THE RESTITUTION, I have concluded to ask for further indulgence and a little more space while I write a couple of articles on the above caption, first, negatively, and then affirmatively. But, in the outset, let me say that the non-resurrection of the wicked is not a hobby with me. Though I have been a firm believer in the doctrine for the last five years, yet I have never made but one regular discourse on it, and that by special request. And what I now say, I intend to say so kindly that no one will take offense, but will be glad that I have written though I may oppose.

Then, as I propose to write this article negatively, ascertaining, if possible, upon whom the second death will not pass, I will say:

1. The second death cannot pass upon the righteous dead, who are to be raised when Christ returns, for says the Savior: "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx. 35, 36. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." Rev. xx. 6.

2. The second death cannot pass upon the righteous who are living when Christ comes. For "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. ii. 11. And says Paul: "We shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv. 51-53.

3. The second death cannot pass upon the wicked dead from the following considerations:

(a). No where announced as a penalty to any law when the law was given, or mentioned as a consideration when any penalty was executed.

(b). Life from the dead, only in Christ, and therefore, no second death possible to the wicked dead.

(c). Positive statements against a resurrection from the dead for the wicked, and therefore no second death possible.

Now, that the second death is no where announced as a penalty to any law when the law was given, or mentioned as a consideration when any penalty was executed, I will submit the following points:

1. The law announced to Adam, for violation did not contemplate a two-fold death, two deaths, or a second death, but "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Gen. ii. 17.

2. The announciation of the penalty to Adam after he had violated the law does not contain in it a two-fold death, two deaths, or a second death, but, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 18.

To bring up Adam and to inflict another death upon him, as many are wont to do, which was never contemplated in the law, or announced to him before the law was violated, or when the sentence was passed upon him, would be to attribute to God a work we hardly think him capable of doing. The legislator an executor of a law may, in the bestowment of favor, or rewards for good and virtuous conduct go beyond the specifications announced in the law; he may reprieve or grant pardon to the guilty upon further considerations, but never with justice between himself and the criminal in the infliction of punishment may he go beyond the specifications of the law. He may, as a finite legislator, upon experiment and reflection find it necessary to attach more penalty than first announced for subsequent cases, but never with justice between himself and a former criminal can he make the second enactment ex post facto.

With the terms of both the law and the penalty as we find them announced to Adam, to bring him up to get to take him through a trial, and to get to kill him again, would be a perfect surprise to him, and a step for which his mind was never prepared.

3. A two-fold death, two deaths or a second death, was not pronounced upon the antediluvians for their crimes, but of them it is written: "The Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth, both man, and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them." And again: "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died." Gen. vi. 7; vii. 21, 22. Here we see that the destiny of fowl, of cattle, of every creeping thing, and of man is all alike; no more intimation of a second death upon the one than upon the other.

4. Of the people of Sodom and Gomorrah it is nowhere written that they should die twice, but of them the Savior says: "But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and (not is, not will, but) destroyed them all." Luke xvii. 29.

5. No second death was pronounced upon Pharaoh and his hosts, but of them we find it written: "And I, behold, I will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, and they shall follow them; and I will get me honor upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen. And the Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord, when I have gotten me honor upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen. And the Lord said unto Moses, stretch out thine hand over the sea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horsemen. And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea, and the sea returned to his strength when the morning appeared; and the Egyptians fled against it; and the Lord overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea. And the waters returned, and covered the chariots, and the horsemen, and all the host of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them; there remained not so much as one of them. But the children of Israel walked upon dry land in the midst of the sea; and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left. Thus the Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians; and Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea shore. And Israel saw that great work which the Lord did upon the Egyptians; and the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord, and his servant Moses." Exod. xiv. 17, 18, 26, 31. Thus we see no second death pronounced upon them, but honor for the Lord and death for Israel's enemies and oppressors.

6. Second death no where was announced or intimated to Korah and his company, but of them it is written: "And Moses said, hereby ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these works; for I have not done them of mine own mind. If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men; then the Lord hath not sent me. But if the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit; then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord. And it came to pass, as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them: And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods. They, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them; and they perished from among the congregation. And all Israel that were round about them fled at the cry of them; for they said, lest the earth swallow us up also. And there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense." Num. xvi. 28-35.

7. Of Abimelech who slew sixty-nine persons of his brethren that he might ascend to the throne of Israel, it is written: "And Abimelech came unto the tower, and fought against it, and went hard unto the door of the tower to burn it with fire. And a certain woman cast a piece of millstone upon Abimelech's head, and all to brake his skull. Then he called hastily unto the young man his armor-bearer, and said unto him, draw thy sword, and slay me, that men say not of me, a woman slew him. And his young man thrust him through, and he died. And when the men of Israel saw that Abimelech was dead, they departed every man unto his place. Thus God rendered the wickedness of Abimelech, which he did unto his father, in slaying his seventy brethren: And all the evil of the men of Shechem did God render upon their heads; and upon them came the curse of Jotham the son of Jerubbaal." Judges ix. 52-57. Thus it is to be discerned that God has already rendered, (not will hereafter render by a second death) the wickedness of Abimelech.

8. In the Mosaical code, in any or all, of its parts there is not the least intimation of a two-fold death, of two deaths, or of second death for the violation of any, or all of its commands; but to the contrary, we read that Moses said just at the end of his ministry: "See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil; in that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply; and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it. But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them; I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over Jordan to go to possess it. I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live; that thou mayest love the Lord thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him; for he is thy life, and the length of thy days; that thou mayest dwell in the land which the Lord aware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them." Deut. xxx. 15-20. And then Paul, in commenting on all the cases of the violated law, said: "If every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward." Heb. ii. 2. Mark, he does not describe the recompense as now going on as orthodoxy would have it; nor as a work of the future as would have to be if our brother's view of the second death be correct, but as a work of the past.

The Scriptures above submitted show no difference between the party under law or the party not under law, upon whom God pronounces and visits his judgments. All are regarded alike and perish alike.

That there is life from the dead only in Christ, and therefore no second death possible to the wicked dead, I submit

1. That Christ was the seed of the kingdom,—the incorruptible word, and sows it to produce an heir, who will be finally raised to the power of an endless life, with an incorruptible nature, but nowhere sows any seed for the production of Adamic nature and Adamic life from the dead. Therefore when one goes down into the death state with the last spark of Adamic life spent, and devoid of the incorruptible word—seed—by what power will he ever be awakened?

2. The Savior said to Martha: "I am the resurrection and the life." Jno. xi. 25. Here the two words, resurrection and life, are closely tied together, showing, unmistakably, that he is the life to all to whom he is the resurrection.

3. Again, it is written: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." Jno. iii. 36. But frequently at this point, we are met with the reply, that the life which the unbeliever will not see, is everlasting life. This we freely admit, and must claim that it is but the bearest assumption, and one without even inferential testimony, that any other is the Scripture is promised. Only one text do we now remember, with any degree of plausibility has ever been cited to prove this assumption—see Rom. v. 15. But when sound criticism is applied to this text with its context, the claim melts away like the winter's frosts before the summer's sun.

4. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v. 12. This is sufficiently plain and pointed without any comment.

5. The life that Jesus proposes to give to the world is in him—"And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." 1 John v. 11. But the wicked do not come into Christ where this life can be found.

6. All men rest under condemnation to death by relationship to Adam—"Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned." Rom. v. 12. Now, in order to pass from under this condemnation one must first believe on Christ—"He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not on him is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." John iii. 18. Secondly, he must love his brother—"We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." But what of the opposite? "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." 1 John iii. 14. Not will be brought out, judged, condemned and put back again, but "is condemned already," "abideth in death."

7. As Christ is the life-giver, as life is in him, as one must believe in him, in order to life, then one must come unto him. But he said to the wicked Jews: "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." John v. 40. But I have cited Scripture enough to satisfy the credulent mind upon this point. A few statements inferential and positive against a resurrection from the dead for the wicked and therefore no second death possible to them.

1. "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken—make alive—your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii. 11.

It is a well conceded point by all reasoners that every affirmative proposition, when stated by one who understands himself, has its corresponding negative. This affirms, first, a quickening—making alive—of those who possess God's spirit, but not for those who possess it not. 2. It affirms the spirit to be the power to be employed in accomplishing this work to the one who possesses it, but not to those who possess it not. Now, that there is any other power revealed by which the dead are to be raised, needs proof. It is claimed that all will be raised because included in, and by reason of the power of the atonement. But that all are included in the atonement needs more proof than the word of God furnishes. The word atonement simply means at-one-ment. It implies, 1. Variance between two.

2. Terms of reconciliation submitted by one of the parties. 3. A reception of these terms by the other and hence a reconciliation. Therefore, for one to be in the at-one-ment with God he must hear the terms of reconciliation, accept of these terms, and become reconciled—become at one with God. But the wicked never do this and therefore not in the at-one-ment.

2. Jesus said unto Martha at the grave of Lazarus: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet, shall he live again." John xi. 25. But here I have added to the King James, rendering the word "again." Have I any authority for making the addition? Is,

1. The Greek (word zesetai, from which the word life comes has in it, according to the lexicons, the idea of reliving, reviving, live again.

2. This word zesetai, in the Septuagint Greek is so rendered in Job xiv. 14: "If a man die shall he live—again?"

3. The Hebrew word חָיָה ghah-yah of Job xiv. 14, rendered life, is defined by Gesenius, 1. Breathing, (2) to live again, to revive—and then he cites, as examples, Job xiv. 14; Ezek. xxxvii. 5; 1 Kings xvii. 22.

It is true the idea of future life is in the common version of the text, but I have given these references to bring out the idea more forcibly. And, therefore, the negative is, he that does not believe in Christ, will not live again.

3. "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall not die forever," is the reading of John xi. 26, as given by the Rhelms Version, the Latin Vulgate, The Italian, John Wesley, Abbott's' Barnes' rendering of the Greek, Wakefield and the Englishman's Greek Concordance, and so with a word for word rendering of the Greek. The reverse of this language then is, he that does not believe in Christ will die forever.

4. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. Of this text there are three significant points worthy our attention: 1. There is no second death mentioned. 2. The wages of sin is not simply the act of dying, which act, when passed through, would pay the penalty and free the transgressor, as Universalits claim, but it is death—yes, death, the absence of life. 3. To raise the transgressor—the servant of sin—from under the power of death and give him life, would be to suspend the penalty for sin, and to deprive sin—the rightful master—of his well earned servant.

5. The end of sin is death; not the second death, not to die twice, but simply death—death the absence of life—see James i. 15—"When lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is punished bringeth forth death."

6. "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain ....the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more." Luke xxix. 35, 36. It is true I have not given all of the Savior's words of the text, but I have dropped out, that we may, the more forcibly discern his teaching on the resurrection. It is manifest, therefore, that some will not be accounted worthy of the resurrection from the dead.

7. "But some man will say, how are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" 1 Cor. xv. 35. But what is the answer? Is it part will be raised mortal, and part immortal? Not exactly, but it is raised incorruptible, in glory, in power, a spiritual body; puts on incorruption and immortality. 1 Cor. xv. 42, 43, 44, 53. But to this we often have the reply, that this is only a description of how the righteous will be raised. Grant it. But where is the description of how the unrighteous come forth?

8. The ungodly will not be in the judgment. "Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous." Psa. i. 5. Further of this text we offer: 1. That Bagster's Interlinear of the Psalms reads: "Therefore not shall rise the wicked in the judgment, and sinners in the congregation of the righteous." 2. That the Douay Bible, a Catholic version from the Vulgate reads: "Therefore the wicked shall not rise again in judgment, nor sinners in the council of the just." 3. The Hebrew word, here rendered stand, is koom, and is defined by Gesenius and Wigram "to arise."

9. Of the wicked again it is written: "Let not the hand of the wicked remove me. There are the workers of iniquity fallen; they are cast down, and shall not be able to rise." Psa. xxxvi. 12. The same Hebrew word—koom—as above referred to.

10. "Man being an honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish." "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling." Psa. xlix. 12, 14. But in the next verse, in contrast both as to destiny and time, David says: "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." One is righteous, arises and is redeemed, the other is wicked, sleeps and is consumed.

11. Again, of the same class it is written: "He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light. Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." Psa. xlix. 19, 20. It is observable that light is forever denied this class.

12. Of recreant servants—those who come to a knowledge of the truth and then go back into sin, it is written: "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi. 16.

13. When Israel is returned to his own land in the future and is made to say: "Lo this our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation," Isa. xxv. 9, then he is made to sing in the land of Judah and say of those to whom he has been in bondage: "O Lord our God, other lords besides thee have had dominion over us; but by thee only will we make mention of thy name. They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Isa. xxvi. 1, 13, 14.

But I will not further specify. The general teachings of the Scripture in reference to the destiny of the wicked forbid a resurrection—such as: they shall not be, to be no more, to consume in smoke, to be cut off, to perish, no ransom for them, shall be as nothing, to be as though they had not been, to sleep perpetual, to perish without law, their sepulchers shall be their houses forever, to be as the chaff which the wind driveth away. But we are sometimes told that this all applies to the wicked beyond a resurrection from the dead; to which I must say, that these texts thus apply, I believe, all to be assumption. No intimation of a resurrection whatever in any one of them, or all of them combined.

Fretting.

One fretter can destroy the peace of a family, can disturb the harmony of a neighborhood, can unsettle the councils of cities and hinder the legislation of nations. He who frets is never the one who mends, who heals, who repairs evils; more, he discourages, enfeebles, and too often disables those around him, who, but for the gloom and depression of his company would do good work and keep up brave cheer. The effect upon a sensitive person of the mere neighborhood of a fretter is indescribable. It is to the soul what a cold icy mist is to the body—more chilling than the bitterest storm, and when the fretter is one who is beloved, whose nearness of relation to us makes his fretting at the weather seem almost like a personal reproach to us, then the misery of it becomes indeed insupportable. Most men call fretting a minor fault, a foible, and not a vice. There is no vice except drunkenness which can so utterly destroy the peace, the happiness of a home, the opposite? "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." 1 John iii. 14. Not will be brought out, judged, condemned and put back again, but "is condemned already," "abideth in death."

7. As Christ is the life-giver, as life is in him, as one must believe in him, in order to life, then one must come unto him. But he said to the wicked Jews: "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." John v. 40. But I have cited Scripture enough to satisfy the credulent mind upon this point. POETRY.

Even So.

L. M. BURGESS.

Even so, Lord Jesus, quickly come!
Why so long, so long, dost Thou delay?
Waiting hearts are watching for Thy coming,
For the dawning of that promised day.
Eyes are ever gazing up intently,
Like to those of olden Galilee,
This same Jesus who likewise returning
They may be among the first to see.
Coming in the clouds of yon blue dome,—
Even so, Lord Jesus, quickly come!

Earth is groaning 'neath her tribulation;
Come, oh, blessed King of earth and heaven,
Come and let Thy smile restore creation,
Let the breath of life to us be given!
Come with lightnings and with bellowing thunders,
Rend the portcuis of the earth and sky
We can see triumphant and unfearing
Knowing our redemption draweth nigh.
Thou bring'st the awful day of doom,
Even so, Lord Jesus, quickly come!

Ed. Restitution:—Since my labors at Remington, Goodland and Wolcott, I have immersed seven into the Christ, and many more are almost persuaded, and some have expressed themselves ready the next visit that I make at Remington. I had a good grove meeting last Sunday. There was a good turnout, and good attention, and I think good done. I visit them again the fourth Sunday in August. It is a new point. I visit Burnetsville next Sunday to hold a grove meeting. There are a few there of the faith and the promise of more soon. The Lord is good. J. S. HATCH.

Editor Restitution:—Find enclosed one dollar for your paper which I desire to read for six months at least. I have been reading over several copies of THE RESTITUTION and I am pleased with the tone and spirit of its reading matter and for its earnest boldness in advocating and defending what I have got to believe to be true Bible teaching—a spiritual evidence in connection with a scriptural evidence of a possession of the truth makes men free from the law of sin and death, therefore a boldness to declare the whole counsel of God. I would just say briefly that I was raised up under Methodist influence, was converted and united with them in September, 1866, and remained with them until February, 1878, when I withdrew, being persuaded that they did not fill the description of a New Testament church, and united with the Missionary Baptist church, and while I deem it the duty of every Christian to acquaint himself as to what constitutes a church of Jesus Christ, it is also the duty of each and every one to know what the word of God teaches in every point of doctrine. This has been my study, and I have and shall discard everything that I find does not accord with its divine teaching, for Jesus says, "my word is truth," and that is the all important truth that men every where need to know. May he who is the source of all truth and light shine into our hearts and reveal to our benign understanding all truth.

The Soul of Dr. De Koven.

The church in Philadelphia, which said a mass for the repose of the soul of the late Dr. De Koven, does not believe in the existence of purgatory, and as all theologians of the Christian belief acknowledge but two other places for the departed spirits, heaven and hell. Where then can be the soul of Dr. De Koven? If in heaven, what would be the use of praying for his soul? If in hell, prayer would avail nothing. Accepting this view of the case, whatever may be said about the beauty of ceremony, on the one part, by those who admire beauty, for beauty's sake alone, or on the other side, by those who are opposed to the spirit of the age and censure every innovation, we cannot see what possible result one way or the other could ha been expected from the certainly i most useless ceremony.

How complacently the champions

Italy third, with 27, 042,000; Spain

States is credited with 8,000,000, about
2,000,000 more than is claimed by American Catholics. Brazil has 10,800-

Schem, of this country, gives the total of Catholic population at 202,000,000, some 7,000,000 less than the German statistician. He gives the total Protes-of the eastern churches at 88,000,000.

From this it appears that the Roman

Christians combined.

THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA.

An American engineer, engaged in the construction of a railway in China, who had unusually favorable opportunities of examining the famous "Great Wall" built to obstruct the incursions of the Tartars, gives the following account of this wonderful work:—The wall is 1,728 miles long, eighteen feet high, and fifteen feet thick at the top. The foundation throughout is of solid granite, the remainder of compact masonry. At intervals of between 200 and 300 yards towers rise up, twenty-five to thirty feet high and twenty-four feet in diameter. On the top of the walls and on both sides of it are masonry parapets to enable the defenders to pass unseen from one tower to another. The wall itself is carried from point to point in a perfectly straight line, across valleys and plains and over hills, without the slightest regard to the configuration of the ground, sometimes plunging down into abysses a thousand feet deep. Brooks and smaller rivers are bridged over by the wall, while on both banks of larger streams flanking towers are placed.

PROGRESS IN TURKEY.

For centuries, the mosque of St. Sophia, at Constantinople, has been jealously guarded against the intrusion of unbelievers. When Europeans began to be admitted at the close of the Crimean war, superstitious Moslems noted the fall of pieces of plaster concealing old Christian symbols in the dome. The latest intelligence from Constantinople will surprise even those who have watched the signs of a growing tolerance in that quarter. A new service is to be held in the mosque for the discussion of all the creeds, and men of every faith are invited to attend. A notice of this remarkable meeting has been issued, which reads as follows:

Notice is hereby given that in the mosque of St. Sophia, every Friday and Tuesday, just after noon prayers, at 4 o'clock, Turkish, a lesson will be Scripture Confirmation.

The Biblical Archæological Society of England has recently brought to light another confirmation of the accuracy of the Book of Daniel, which it may be well to notice as a satisfactory reply to those infidels who foolishly assert that it was written by some one who lived not long before the Christian era; as if it were possible for a Jew of that age to relate history involving Babylonian customs of the time of Nebuchadnezzar or Darius, without being liable to fallin to grievous errors:

The Book of Daniel records the punishments common at Babylon, of such extreme cruelty, such as Shadrac Meshech, and Abednego being c into a burning fiery furnace, a Daniel and his enemies into a den lions, that some have been ready deny the authenticity of Daniel this ground alone, forgetful, or ign ant, of the well-known fact that Rom whether Pagan or Papal, has be guilty of the very same crimes towar faithful Christians who "loved n their lives unto the death," and which she will one day be deservec and finally punished. In the days Assurbanipal, son of Esarhaddon, K of Assyria, we have the contempor evidence that both these punishme were in use at Babylon a few years fore the reign of Nebuchadnezz Saulmugina, brother of Assurbani King of Assyria, was made by his native King of Babylon, where reigned prosperously for several yea Afterwards, for some unknown reaso he ungratefully rebelled against elder brother, but after a severe c teat was defeated and taken prison The Assyrian monarchs appear to h been always animated with an impl able spirit of revenge. Hence we not surprised at finding among the scriptions containing the annals Assurbanipal one of this ominous ture, which reminds us of a somewha similar event in British history in the closing scenes of the great Plantagenet dynasty: "I ordered Saulmugina, my rebellious brother, who made war with me, to be cast into a fiery burning furnace." Of Saulmugina's followers it is related that many perished with him in the flames, and those who escaped, but were subsequently caught, it is said of them: "The rest of the people I threw alive among the bulls and lions, as Sennacherib, my grandfather, used to throw men among them."

If we turn to another subject we have equally sure evidence of the Sabbath rest, as practiced among the early Babylonians. The cuneiform text of the 1st and 5th of the Creation Tablets published by the late George Smith, which belong to the reign of Assurbanipal, but which were copies of earlier inscriptions supposed to be as old as B. C. 2,000, after speaking of the upper region before it was called Heaven, and the lower region before it was called Earth, and the abyss of Hades, and the chaos of waters, proceeds as follows:—"God appointed the moon to rule the night, and to wander through the night, until the dawn of day. Every month without fail God made holy assembly-days. In the beginning of each month, at the rising of the night, the moon shot forth its horns to illuminate the heavens. On the 7th day God appointed a holy day, and commanded to cease from all business. Then arose the sun in the horizon of heaven."

The reign of this same King of Assyria is proved by some of the recently discovered inscriptions in the Isle of Cyprus, which are of peculiar interest to us at the present time. These inscriptions being in characters entirely different from the cuneiform, presented at first a great difficulty in their decipherment, but they have now been solved by the skill of Oriental scholars, on this occasion chiefly Englishmen. An inscription on the gold armlets found at Kurion, in Cyprus, reveals the name of Ithyander, King of the Island, who rendered homage to Assurbanipal B. C. 620, during his march against Egypt, and only a few years before the termination of the war in which the pious Josiah, King of Judah, lost his life, as the Book of Kings relates it. "In his days Pharaoh-nechoh, King of Egypt, went up against the King of Assyria to the river Euphrates, and King Josiah went against him, and he slew him at Megiddo when he had seen him." We have also some Babylonian cylinders discovered by General di Cesnola at the same place in Cyprus, and inscribed with cuneiform characters in the Accadian tongue, though the proper names are all Semitic; some of these are supposed to be of the time of Esarhaddon's reign, the eighth century B. C., while others belong to the reign of Naram Sin, King of Babylon, son and successor of Sargon I., who flourished before the sixteenth century B. C. The following inscription belongs to the former period, and seems to display evidence of Egyptian influence, as a priest is represented holding up his hands with two sphinxes above him. The inscription reads thus—"The moon god, the good——the Judge of the world, the fortune completer of heaven and earth, the giver of life to the gods. O, Master, who givest thy precious head, thou Prince of the dead." These are remarkable sentences for a heathen seven centuries before the Savior of the world rose from the grave which could not contain Him, thus proving himself alike Lord of the living and Prince of the dead. It is interesting to remember that 1,000 years before this inscription was engraven, when we are brought back to the time of Moses, the inhabitants of the Isle of [illegible] are represented on the famous immense excavations have been consequently made in obtaining it. They were already vast in the days of Nero. Hither, therefore, Christians resorted to escape his persecutions, and here the remains of many who fell martyrs to the Christian name were buried. Mr. Delassney thinks these subterranean passages, if extended in one line, would reach nine hundred miles; that interments continued during at least ten generations, and numbered not less than six millions. The inscriptions on their tombs are brief and simple, bearing a most impressive testimony to the great points of their faith in Jesus. The word death is not there. They all 'sleep' in Jesus—in hope of the resurrection when God wills. One verb for sleeping, and one other for rising again, complete the vocabulary of verbs in the literature of the catacombs. Their creed is in five words, 'Jesus Christ, God's Son, Savior.' The epitaph over one of the youthful ones of those times is expressive: 'Here sleeps—ten years old—God's little lamb.' The pictorial delineations represent the saints with uplifted hands and eyes, imploring, yet hopeful, trusting, and waiting.

"So those mute pictures and dumb inscriptions testify to the simple faith of men who faced death without fear, in the love of Jesus and in the confidence of a better life beyond. Being dead their graves are made to speak. As the monuments and recovered alphabet of Egypt caused her ancient life to reappear before the men of these generations, so do the inscriptions and memorials of the catacombs bring up before us the identical saints of Nero's life, and show us how they lived, suffered, and triumphed, through the grace given to his people by their faithful Friend above. No one, it seems to us, can examine this testimony without a deep and pleasing impression of the reality of the great facts of Scripture and early church history; and of the preciousness and power of that simple faith which so raised them above the fear of tortures, losses of all, and even death itself. The Christian world is deeply indebted to such antiquarians as Prof. Delaussney, for their labors in bringing out from underneath the rubbish of the ages such a mass of testimony to the Christian Rest, and also for making it accessible to the people. We hope he will by and by give it to the world in a volume."

Prof. Beneke of Marburg, Germany, after measuring 970 human hearts, says that the growth of that organ is greatest in the first and second years of life. At the end of the second year it is doubled in size, and during the next five years is again doubled. Then its growth is much slower, though from the fifteenth to the twentieth year its size increases by two-thirds. A very slight growth is then observed up to fifty, when it gradually diminishes. Except in childhood, men's hearts are decidedly larger than those of women.

You may not have much to give, but the little you give will be blessed. The paper must receive a support. The Banner of Truth must be kept afloat. Deny yourselves luxuries, but don't deny yourself the paper. Deny yourself pleasures, but don't keep the light from the perishing. Work for the means to send out the truth, and give all that you can to this end. God will bless you.

S. ROXANA WINCH.

To Mrs. M. Rock.

I will try to answer your question in as few words as I can. The begetting is to hear the gospel of the kingdom of God as taught by Moses, the prophets, Jesus Christ, and his apostles. When a man hears the gospel of the kingdom and believes it, then he is begotten by the word of truth. And this word of truth was given to the prophets and apostles by the Holy Spirit, which is an influence that emanates from God, and indited the writing of the holy Scriptures. And they teach that it is through a belief of the gospel of the kingdom of God that prepares a man for an immersion in water. And when he comes out, it is a birth of, or out of, water, into the womb of time for a development of character, for the birth out of death and the grave by the power of the Holy Spirit of God. See Rom. viii. 11; "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also make alive your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwells in you." That is, if this man develops character in harmony with God's purpose, he will be raised from the dead by the power of the Holy Spirit of God.

Kind sister, please read the last part of my tract, which is "born of the spirit." I may never meet you this side of the kingdom of God, but I hope to meet you with all the saints in his kingdom. Respectfully yours,

JONAH PIERCE.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Science versus the Sure Foundation.

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ. I Cor. iii, 11.

For there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. Acts iv, 12.

For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. vi, 23.

And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. I John, v, 11-12.

Jesus said, I am the resurrection and the life. Jno. xi, 25.

I beg leave to invite attention to, and to emphasize the passages of Scripture above cited in view of the fact, that there are those at the present day who claim that science (?) has demonstrated the existence of a soul within the body, which continues to exist after it "sloughs off the materiel body." See The Parousia by Israel Warren (Propositions I to 0, inclusive, on pages 220 and 222).

"These conclusions are not," says Mr. Joseph Cook, "mere theories, but demonstrated facts of science. We are following haughty, axiomatic certainty. In clear and cool precision, science comes to the idea of a spiritual body," (existing contemporaneously with the material body). "We must not forget that this conclusion is proclaimed in the name of philosophy of the severest sort. The verdict is scientific; it happens also to be Biblical (?). Is it the worse for that?"

"The soul, as an occupant of its etherial enswathment, operates, in part, unconsciously, and, in part, consciously."

"It co-operates with the vital force."

"It is not identical with the vital force."

"It is the morphological agent that weaves all living tissues. It spins nerves. It weaves the muscles, the tendons, the eye, the brain. It arranges each part in harmony with all the other parts of the organism."

I do not, in this paper, propose to assail these views from a scientific standpoint; and yet, I cannot refrain from asking who, or what, spins the nerves and weaves the tissues for the day? It cannot be denied that, whoever or whatever it is, spins him a pretty good olfactory nerve. It may be, however, if the opinions of these savans are correct, that there is some foundation for the hope of the poor Indian,

"Who thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company."

I now submit; are not the men who advocate the views indicated in the above quotations endeavoring to lay another foundation than that is laid, on which to build a hope of eternal life? Are they not disregarding the teaching of the Holy Spirit; that there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved? Are their views in harmony with the declaration of the inspired apostle, that the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord? Are they not directly opposed to the declaration of another inspired apostle: "That he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life;" for says the apostle: "He that believeth not, God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son?" Do they not ignore; nay, do they not absolutely contradict our Savior when he gave to the grief-stricken Martha, whose brother lay fast bound in the toils of the grim monster, the blessed assurance: "I am the resurrection and the life." I am he who will unbar the tomb and bid death relax his iron grasp, at the resurrection, at the last day. I can exercise that power now if I will. "Lazarus, come forth."

Again, I submit; have not these wise ones, in the language of the 14th verse of the 28th chapter of Isaiah, said: "We have made a covenant with death, and with hell (the grave) are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us?" The meaning is, we have it all arranged with death and the grave; we are not going to be hurt by them; there is no trouble to come from this source. In fact, we do not die; we only slough off the material body and the slough is all the grave gets (they claim the resurrection occurs at death), and it is welcome to that; who cares for a slough? They do not ask, as did Job, if a man die, shall he live again? They do not say in the submissive language of that venerable patriarch: "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come," and "If I wait the grave is mine house."

Oh, Job, hadst thou been wise; hadst thou been a scientist, thou wouldst not have taken so gloomy a view of death; thou wouldst not have said to corruption: "Thou art my father; nor to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister."

Are we not justified in applying to them the language found in the remaining portion of the verse I have cited: "They have made lies their refuge, and under falsehood have they hid themselves?" God regards those who do not believe the record he has given of his Son—the purport of which is, that there is no eternal life except by virtue of a relationship to that Son—as having called in question his veracity, See 1 John v. 10-12, inclusive. And by the mouth of his holy prophet he here accuses those of falsehood who have made covenant with death and agreement with hell. It is, then, a question of veracity between God and man—"Let God be true, but every man a liar."

Is not this the work of the adversary? Is he not "fighting out, on the same line," the battle he began in Eden for the destruction of the human race? Yea, is it not the very same lie? Ye shall not surely die.

But, note how subtle he is still. It is the same lie, but he has dressed it in the attractive garb and presents it in the fair phrase of science. He has associated it with that which is lovely and enticing. He says this is knowledge, this is wisdom, this is science. Oh, science, who does not revere; who does not love science,—true science! The adversary takes even a little bolder stand now. To the woman he said, ye shall not surely die; ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil. Now he says you cannot die; you are like God, having immortality dwelling in you. You cannot die. You are not dependent on the Lord Jesus Christ for a future life. Oh, presumption great! If, sometimes "man clothed in a little brief authority cut such fantastic tricks before high heaven as makes the angels weep," in what attitude does he stand, and what emotions does he excite in the minds of the heavenly hosts, who dares to stand up and utter words contrary to the declarations of Jehovah Almighty?

Let me now, in all candor and sincerity, commend to all who teach the views we have been considering, and to all who may be influenced by their teaching, a careful consideration of the three verses immediately following the one to which I have already directed attention. "Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line and righteousness to the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell (the grave) shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the second advent of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a loyalty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion, or prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Chimney Corner Preaching.

Subject.—The kingdom of God coming in power. Mark ix. 1. The Son of Man coming into his kingdom. Matt. xvi. 28.

If, as you assert, the kingdom of God did then and there come in power, it follows that the Son of Man did then and there come into his kingdom, for whilst the one record says that they "should see the kingdom of God come in power," the other says that they should "see the Son of Man coming into his kingdom."

But the Son of Man had come into the world before this, and he was not then seen to go or to come out of the world into the church, into men's hearts, nor into heaven. If the kingdom did then and there come, then this mountain must have constituted the territory of the kingdom, for this scene was not beheld elsewhere. If the kingdom was then set up, what was seen must have been the kingdom, for they were to see the kingdom of God. They saw Jesus, the brightness of his face, his bright raiment, the cloud, and Moses and Elias. If these constituted the kingdom then, what constitutes the kingdom now? If these were the kingdom then, where is it now? You say in heaven. Well, if this be so, is it not absurd to say that the church on earth is the kingdom? If the kingdom was then and there set up why is it not standing there to-day, for it was to stand forever. Dan. ii. 44. If it was then and there set up, and Jesus, Moses and Elias were the kingdom, how came you to get into or get possession of it, for it was not to be left to other people. Dan. ii. 44. If the kingdom is in the hearts of men, then the seeing was wrong, for no hearts of men were seen. If the kingdom was then and there set up on the earth, why is it now in heaven? Is it a portable kingdom.

But I will hear your question; please to state it distinctly. Did not the kingdom of God come in power then and there? My answer is, no. It will come in power when the Son of Man comes into his kingdom.

1. When the kingdom comes it comes to stay—"it shall stand forever." Dan. ii. 44; Dan. vii. 18.

2. The kingdom is not due till the time of rewards, for it is one of the things to be given. Dan. ix. 29. The time of rewards is after the sound of the last trumpet. Rev. xi. 15-19. Men are to be rewarded at the resurrection of the just.

3. It is of this very time that Jesus is speaking when he says that some then present would not see death till they should see the kingdom of God come in power. Hear him. "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his father and all the holy angels with him, and then he shall reward every man according to his work. Verily I say unto you, that there be some standing here that shall not see death till they see the Son of Man coming into his kingdom." Matt. xvi. 17, 15; xix. 1-10; Mark viii. 38; ix. 1-10; Luke ix. 26 39

This scene they were to behold, that is, "the Son of Man coming with his angels to reward every man;" "the Son of Man coming into his kingdom;" "the kingdom of God coming in power." To see him coming into his kingdom, is to see him coming to reward every man and to see the kingdom of God come in power. When he comes in his father's glory he will come into his kingdom. The kingdom of God comes when he comes to reward everyone. When he comes into his kingdom, his messengers, such as Moses and Elias, come with him. When the kingdom of God comes all of his messengers, such as Moses and Elias, come, for they belong to, and will constitute an element in God's kingdom. Just allow Moses to represent the sleeping messengers, and Elias those who will not be asleep, and all is plain. When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy messengers with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. See Matt. xxv.

If there were no such thing as men having witnessed a future event through vision, or sight, you might continue this fruitless effort to find the kingdom in the church, in the heart, or in heaven itself. But Abraham did desire to see Christ's day, and saw it. Daniel saw the judgment scenes, and John saw the holy city coming down from God out of heaven. Through the medium of visions much of the future was seen by God's servants. Daniel saw a succession of empires arise, and this vision, or seeing reached down to God's kingdom; and if Daniel beheld all these future events, why could not Peter, James and John see God's kingdom come? But also a few more questions. If the kingdom did then come, why did Jesus afterward speak of going into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom? Luke xix. 11-16. If the then witnesses that saw the transfiguration, understood that the kingdom of God did then come, why did they afterward think that the kingdom of God would immediately appear? Luke xix. 11. If they did believe that the kingdom did come in the scene on the Mount, why did they forty days after his resurrection ask him to restore the kingdom at that time. Acts i. 6. If the kingdom did come in the scene on the high mountain, why did Jesus long afterward say to them, it is not for you to know the times and seasons (for the kingdom to come) that the father has placed in his own power. Acts i. 6.

But I now have your answers. You say that they did not understand. Well, who was their teacher? You answer, Jesus. Well, who was your teacher? You say the Rev. Mr. Snodgrass. Now let me give you a word of advice. Dismiss your teacher, let him go, and do you attend the school of Christ and learn something about the kingdom of God. But you think that this is rough, and wish to go with your fellows. The straight path of Bible truth is rough as the corduroy road. Good day. Call again when you can digest a little gospel milk.

After reflection.—What is the matter that in trade man is as sharp as a tack; in religious matters he is as dull as a beetle? Answer: She, the harlot, hath made all nations drunken with the wine of her fornication. Rev. xiv. 8. That man is religiously drunken on this subject, the mind is stupified, and the hope of getting him out of the bottomless pit is not very bright, yet we must do what we can for the Master and for the people, and the time is short. Oh, for patience and courage to toil on till the Son of Man comes into his kingdom; till the kingdom of God comes in power.

The Church of God.

Scripture may be considered as an universal history of the world and the church, but especially of the latter, in which the doctrines, precepts and ordinances of God, and the practice of men are faithfully recited. The Old Testament is the best history of the world from the creation, including the fall of man, the council of God relating to the recovery of his chosen by the seed of the woman; also the methods of divine providence in raising and preserving a godly seed amidst the corruptions and desolations of mankind. It is, therefore, likewise a history of the church (the heavenly calling runs in faith). As Abraham desired a heavenly country, Enoch was translated. Moses lost the land of promise, but got the Pisgah of God. David confessed that he and all his fathers had been strangers with God in the earth. Elijah among the prophets in the latter days of the Old Testament, as Enoch among the patriarchs in its earlier days, was taken up. And thus the heavenly calling was held in constant remembrance, and kept in view, till the Messiah came. This history is carried on in the New Testament, beginning in the four evangelists with the incarnation of the Son of God, whose life, ministry, sufferings, death, and resurrection from the dead, are concisely, but fully, set forth, and with this view, "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." John xx. 31. The same design is pursued in the remaining part of the Scripture to the end.

Of this divine narration no part is of greater importance than the Acts of the Apostles. The Holy Ghost is then on earth, upon the glorification of the Son of Man in heaven; and we find him doing a work of exceeding riches of grace, and which is to be to the praise of the glory of God in the ages to come. He is baptizing the election now gathering, into one body; a body of which Christ is the head; a body which is also called the fulness of him that filleth all in all. And the whole head and body together is called by that wonderful name "Christ." 1 Cor. xii. 12. The Acts of the Apostles contain an authentic account of the rise and progress of the church of God in the world; so that these writings, with the addition of the Epistles and the book of Revelation, which closes the sacred canon, alone afford a genuine and complete history of the purity in doctrine, worship and discipline, which prevailed among the first Christians who are the fairest examples of social religion. We have then a true history to which all others written after the days of the apostles must be subordinate, and an acquaintance with which is to be esteemed one branch of Christian attainment, as a conformity unto it is a part of his character. And it were heartily to be wished that every one who professeth himself a follower of the Lamb, made it his diligent study. We should then be united in faith and worship, and animated to a more holy, spiritual and orderly temper and conduct, and also love one another more than at present, being of one Lord, one faith, one baptism.

In the second chapter of Acts, the last six verses, we have a concise history of the church of God in her infant state (before her members were scattered by persecution, or those errors, divisions and apostacies took place, which hath since disgraced and defiled her), as follows: "And they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers. And fear came upon every soul, and many wonders and signs were done by the Apostles. And all that believed were together and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." All of like faith whether patriarchal, Mosaic or prophetic, have a part in the heavenly places. The Lord calls them all children of the resurrection, and by that teaches us that they will be called to their inheritance by resurrection from the dead. "These all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. xi. 39, 40. "So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." Rom. xii. 5. "This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the Church." Eph. v. 32. "We shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." 1 Cor. xv. 51. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. "We are members of his body, of his flesh, of his bones." Eph. v. 30. Even so, come Lord Jesus. Amen. The Kirwan Letters To the Right Rev. John Hughes, Bishop of New York.

LETTER VIII.

Further Reasons for not returning to the Papal Church.—Celibacy of the Clergy.—Auricular Confessions.—A call on Irish Papists to assert their Rights.

My Dear Sir,—In my last last letter I entered on the statement of the reasons which yet prevent me from returning to the pale of your church. I adverted only to four: your virtual prohibition of the Bible; the way and manner of your public worship of God; your ceremonial law, which burdens and crushes without instructing or correcting the conscience, and the obstructions which you erect between my soul and my God. These, or either of them, would be reason sufficient, not merely to excuse, but to forbid my ever returning to your communion. For me to give farther reasons would seem to be a little like your doctrine of supererogation, which is not among the least of the absurd errors of your infallible church; but as the argument is conclusive, you will bear with me while I proceed to the statement of a few others.

I cannot return to your church until you cease teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Permit me here to say, dear sir, that, without a solitary exception, the things which are peculiar to your church—the things which make it distinctively what it is, are the commandments of men, either in direct opposition to the teachings of the Bible, or based upon the most gross perversion of its meaning. In as brief a manner as possible, permit me to illustrate this position.

Your church teaches and enjoins the celibacy of its clergy in language the most pointed and positive; and the Council of Trent hurls its anathemas against all who would assert the contrary doctrine, or who would admit the lawfulness of the marriage of a priest. Thus you forbid the priest to marry; you damn him if he does marry, and you anathematize all who think or say that in marrying he sinned not against God or man. All this, you admit, is so. Now, then, I ask your authority for so teaching. I ask, not your ecclesiastical, but your scriptural authority. Did not the Jewish priests marry? Was not Peter your first Pope? This you assert. And was not Peter's wife's mother sick of a fever?—Matt. viii. 14. Pope Peter, then, had a wife. Why would it be a mortal sin in Pope Pius IX, to have one also? Would he be the less pious or moral on that account? You, sir, are a bishop. How far you are a scriptural bishop is not now the inquiry. But Paul in writing to Timothy, says, "A bishop must be the husband of one wife.....having his children in subjection with all gravity." And even poor "deacons," the lowest order of your ministry, are thus instructed by Paul: "Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well."—1 Tim. iii. 12.

Now, dear sir, put these things together, and see in what a position they place you! Peter, your first Pope, had a wife, and you damn to the depths of perdition any pope that would, in this respect, follow Pope Peter! Challoner says that he had no commerce with his wife after he was made an Apostle! Will you tell me how Challoner found that out? Deacons and bishops are commanded, or, at least, permitted to have wives, and you would empty the seven vials of your wrath, and pour all the anathemas of Trent upon the head of the priest or bishop that, in obeying God, would disobey your church! Is it possible for you and the Bible to be in more direct opposition? Is it wrong to conclude that, in thus forbidding to marry, your church gives at least one evidence that it is Antichrist? Will you favor me, dear sir, with a common-sense exposition of the meaning of Paul, 1 Tim. iv. 3, where he brands "forbidding to marry" as a doctrine of "devils?" If half as literal in the exposition of Paul as in your exposition of "this is my body," "this is my blood," how will you avoid the inference that you are a devil? Pray remember I do not say you are a devil; if you were, you would not believe half you say you do. I am only holding you to your own principles.

Again: your church enjoins confession under the most stringent rules. To this I have already adverted in former letters. I advert to it again, to illustrate how you teach for doctrines the commandments of men. The Council of Trent teaches that "it is the duty of every man who hath fallen after baptism to confess his sins at least once a year to a priest." It teaches that "this confession of sin is to be secret, for public confession is neither commanded nor expedient." It teaches that "this confession of sin must be very exact and particular, together with all circumstances, and that it extend to the most secret sins, even of thought, or against the ninth or tenth commandment." You know you omit the second commandment, which forbids you bowing to pictures and images, and divide the tenth into two, so as to make up the ninth and tenth, and thus complete the number. On receiving confession as thus ordained, the priest pronounces absolution upon the penitent, "not conditional or declaritive only, but absolute and judicial." When I remember the use which your church has made of this doctrine, and the fearful power which it gives the priest over the people, my heart swells with emotion as I pen these lines; and, like the angel of Manoah's sacrifice, my thanksgivings ascend to heaven that I have escaped the snare of the fowler.

Now, sir, let me again turn querist, and ask you, where in the Bible do you find your doctrine of auricular confession taught? With me, the teachings of all your councils weigh not a feather. Give me, if you can, Bible authority. Is there one text from Genesis to Revelation, which you, as a scholar, will say teaches it? I put this question to you, not as a bishop, but as a scholar. A priest from Maynooth, taught there only to mumble the Missal, or a poor unlettered peasant from Mayo or Galway, into whose lips words are put, as into the mouth of a parrot, might quote to me James v. 16, which says, "Confess your faults one to another"—but will you do it? They might tell me that the Pharisees were baptized of John Baptist, "confessing their sins;" that at Ephesus, "many that believed came and confessed, and showed their deeds"—but will you do it? If James is your authority, are not you bound to confess to me, if I am to you? "Confess your faults one to another:" if this text teaches auricular confession, I hold you to it. When did you put the poor Irishman, who whispered his sins into your ears, in your seat in the confessional, and kneeling down outside whisper through the little square hole cut in its side your sins into his ear? This would be confessing your sins one to another. This would be reciprocal confession; but yours is a true Irish reciprocity—all on one side. Did you ever do this, sir? Never, never. I ask you again, not as a bishop, but as a scholar, whether a single text quoted by Challoner, or Butler, or Hay, gives a shadow of countenance to your doctrine of confession? Lay aside your mitre, your crosier, your crook, and your canonicals, and look at those texts as simple John Hughes, and then answer my question. How can you account to man or to God for the erection of such an awful institution as Auricular Confession, upon the merest perversion of Scripture—a perversion which has neither sense nor wit to excuse it, and without a solitary text or example in the Bible to sustain it? Oh, why will you do as a priest what you would not do as a scholar or as a man?

And, then, what aggravates the whole matter is, that every man who is made a priest, no matter how ignorant or wicked, feels himself divinely appointed of Heaven to confess sinners, and to absolve them from their sins! No matter if he is a Judas, he has the same authority to confess and absolve as Peter! A priest, sir, under your own jurisdiction, and I am sorry to say, an Irishman also, was heard thus to address the hostler of the hotel at which he boarded on returning from Mass on Sabbath afternoon: "Pat, get up my horse; I have to go and confess a poor devil who is dying five or six miles out in the country." I would not say this wretch is a fair sample of all your priests: I hope otherwise. But there are too many like him! And he has the same power to confess and absolve that you have, against whose character I know nothing, save that you sustain a system which you must know to be as false as the Koran.

I would implore you, my dear sir, to review this doctrine of your church. As to the word of God, it is baseless as the fabric of a vision. It was unknown in the Jewish Church; it is untaught in the Christian Scriptures. It crept into your church during the Dark Ages. It was nailed upon it at Trent. It is clearly a device of man, and in terrible opposition to some of the plainest precepts of God's word. It gives power to the priest and enslaves the people. It has been to your church, in every land, a fearful source of corruption. Everything is beneath you but the truth. Reject the lie, however long it may have been told, and however it may increase your income and influence. No longer prostitute your talents and education in maintaining this religious juggle, but send the sinner to the cross, telling him that whosoever shall there confess and forsake his sin shall find mercy. In this thing show yourself a man, and the blessings of unborn generations will be upon you.

And could I address myself to every papist upon whom the sun shines, I would say to them all, and especially to those of your country and mine, the doctrine of confession is a priestly device to gain an absolute authority over your consciences. You are no more bound to confess to a priest than he is to confess to you. And as the doctrine of absolution connected with confession, it is simply blasphemy. God only can forgive sin. And were it not for the fees connected with your confession and absolution, there is not a priest upon the face of the earth that would care a straw about your confession, or that would commit the blasphemy of forgiving your sins. If bishops or priests will not, in this day of light, cut in pieces the net wove in the Dark Ages to confine and trammel you, it is in your power to rise and tear it in pieces. Irish Roman Catholics! our fathers fought, and bled, and died, to obtain for themselves and for us civil liberty. Their blood, shed by British bayonets in these struggles for their civil rights, has crimsoned every stream and fattened every field of Ireland. And will you, their sons, bow your necks to a priestly tyranny, which debases you mentally and morally? Will you give yourselves to be led, and rode and robbed by priests who come to you pretending that the keys of heaven hung by their girdle, and that it is with them to let you in or shut you out at pleasure? No man can be a slave while his soul is free, nor can any man be free while his soul is in bondage.

There is, reverend sir, one confession which I freely make to you; my spirit waxes warm when I think or write upon the absurdities of your church—upon its flagrant perversions of the Scriptures—upon its shameful impositions upon the ignorant and credulous—upon the unblushing effrontery with which it teaches for divine doctrines the commandments of men. And I assure you that my warmth of feeling is not diminished when I consider that a man of your character and country could consent to be a chief workman in this bad business. I am ashamed for you. Irishmen have their faults, but they are not usually those of duplicity, or perversion of the truth; and hence, while they make good papists, they make bad Jesuits. Do anything rather than thus traffic in souls.

I regret to find that I must end this letter without ending my illustrations of the way and manner in which you teach for doctrines the commandments of men. This I hope to do in my next.

With respect, yours,

KIRWAN.

A RARE PEARL STOLEN FROM THE BRITISH CROWN

One hundred and fifty years ago has been recovered in a pawnbroker's store in Vienna. A poor Hungarian being pressed for money took an old scarf-pin to pawn. To his surprise the jeweller told him it was of great value, and he should take it to Vienna in order to obtain fair deposit on it. He did so, and there it was discovered that it contained one of three black pearls which formerly belonged to the monarchs of England. It had been stolen and eventually came into the possession of a valet, who gave it to the Hungarian peasant. The Queen of England purchased the gem for £8,000.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 13, 1879.

WE will not occupy much space editorially this week, as a state of comparatively poor health indisposes us for writing. Will attend to correspondence and some other matters as soon as we can.

AN abundant harvest will, we hope, put it in the power of all our friends to aid our paper financially. Journals advocating unpopular truths are only sustained by more or less sacrifice on the part of the lovers of God. The coming and kingdom of Messiah, and eternal life through Christ alone, are doctrines that the majority despise; and their promulgation depends upon the efforts of the little flock to whom it will be the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom, if faithful and loyal to his son.

God's Purpose in Creating the World.

Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient time the things that are not yet done, saying, my council shall stand and I will do all my pleasure. Isa. xlvi. 10.

We use this text for a heading or a starting point for a few more thoughts upon God's purpose in creating the world and arranging the ages. In what we have written we have tried to bring out from the scriptures things new and old. We do not write for those that are wise above what is written, but for the honest hearted seekers after truth. God requires of us just what we can do, and no more; that we must do or incur his displeasure. No man putting his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the kingdom of heaven. This is one of the laconic sayings of the great teacher who taught as never man taught; its meaning and import is as applicable to the believers of the one faith in 1879 as they were when they fell from the lips of the Son of God. How happy, how inspiring the thought if we could be assured that all that have heard, believed, and obeyed the good news of the kingdom, were looking and going straight forward, determined to know nothing among men save Jesus the Christ and him crucified. Alas! we have good reason to fear that the seed sown has not all fallen into good ground; they do not bring forth the fruits of righteousness or of right doing. We can only judge the tree by its fruits. If we were assured beyond a doubt that the Master would come to take away his watching, waiting ones within twenty-four hours, how many would continue in the practice and habits they are now engaged in? Allow us to itemize a few of the things forbidden in the word of God.

The first we name is the greed of worldly gain and the unlawful means used to become wealthy, and that secondly, this is a crying sin of our day and, a prominent sign of the end of the age—lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, yes, all the things named in Paul's solemn charge to his son Timothy. For whom did Paul write this solemn charge? Not for Timothy. It was not applicable at the time when he wrote it, nor at any other time during his natural life: he had known the Scriptures from his youth, had been taught by Paul himself. Paul spoke by the spirit which sees the end from the beginning. It was written for us on whom the ends of the age have come. If Paul had lived in this last half of the nineteenth century and seen with his natural eyes what is being filled out to the letter, he could not have given a more minute description of things in the world and the church. For some reason, we cannot tell why, we linger around the closing scenes of Gentile times. We have no wish to exaggerate or to give a false coloring. The truth and a simple statement of facts are enough to make the heart of an honest Christain to quail and bleed with anguish. Truly the Savior is being wounded in the house of his friends, yea, crucified afresh and put to an open shame. How untrue and faithless has the church been to her dear Lord; what a fearful account must she render, and that right soon. Surely these things are not applicable to us, the church of God, a little flock. We hope not, yet we dare not say that some are not doing the very things Paul charged Timothy not to do; these things give the strongest evidence that the end of the gospel age is upon us; a very little while and it will be said it is done! Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone! He that is filthy, let him be filthy still.

Will the millennium or the age to come be an exception to the ages that have preceded it? Not in every particular; the light of that age will increase in a wonderful ratio. See Isa. xxx. 26. "Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be seven fold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people and healeth the stroke of their wound." It is hard to undeceive men who have been educated in false theories, especially Wm. Miller and his followers. We need not go into detail—one statement is sufficient. The saints will be (at the coming of Christ) taken away to some other planet, while the world will be burned up, as Mr. and Mrs. Manfield often said, be melted like an old cook stove and cast over again, and a new heaven and a new earth created instanter by an act of physical Omnipotence, upon which the saints would come down and take possession of it as their home and abode, thus discarding or spiritualizing the promises made to Abraham and his seed, the Christ, in reigning over or ruling the nations for 1000 years, in which God's purposes will be perfected and accomplished. At the close of the millennium age, as at the close of previous ages the apostasy, or the devil, will make the last great and final effort for earth's supremacy, but his discomfiture will be signal, final and complete; the element of fire will be employed for his final destruction, as also for the destruction of all his works and the complete purification of the planet from the curse which was pronounced upon it in consequence of the great transgression.

How plain, how consistent and how easy to understand, is God's plan and purpose in creating the world and arranging the ages when we will carefully read, mark well, and inwardly digest his holy word of truth. How high, holy, and exalted are the character and attributes of God in creating for man a beautiful Eden home, a paradise, a garden of delight; how blessed the employment to cultivate and replenish it, to multiply and bring forth a people made in the image of the Elohim! But O, how sudden and how fearful the change. Evil entered, and in one dread moment all was lost! The unhappy pair were driven from their beautiful home with the displeasure of their creator, to till the ground and to eat their bread in the sweat of their brow all the days of their lives, and but for the promise made upon the heel of this dreadful tragedy, "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head," all would have been irrecoverably and eternally lost. But the scene will again be changed; the attributes of the Deity will shine with redoubled splendor and glory in the great scheme of redemption, salvation, and the restitution of all things by and through our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with the holy Father and blessed spirit, we give all the glory, all the honor and all the praise, now and ever more, world without end, amen.

NEWEL BOND.

"Salvation is of the Jews"—Jesus Christ.

Daniel, a Jew, by the fortune of war a captive, but by his own peculiar abilities, and the especial providence of God, was made "ruler of the whole province of Babylon," the then most powerful kingdom in the world.

Joseph, a Jew, by the treachery of his brothers sold into bondage, and by the infamy of a woman, cast into prison; but, by his own peculiar abilities and the especial providence of God, "Pharaoh said unto Joseph, forasmuch as God hath shewed thee all this..... Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people be ruled; only in my throne will I be greater than thou..... See I have set thee over all the land of Egypt." Then the most powerful kingdom in the world.

Benjamin Disraeli, a Jew, rose from the ranks of a common Englishman, by his own peculiar abilities—and who can doubt?—by the especial providence of God, to be ruler over the many kingdoms and principalities of the British Empire, raised by Her Majesty, Queen of England, Empress of India, to rule over all her dominions, on which "the sun never sets." Greater than Babylon, for by recent treaty—which cost England neither treasures of money, nor treasures of blood—she has dominion over the whole territory of ancient Babylonia; greater than the Pharaoh's of Egypt, for the Queen of England extends her protecting skirts over Egypt. In the language of Prof. Wilson, "Blind must he be who sees not the finger of God in all this." For Benjamin Disraeli is at the head of not only the most powerful nation now in existence, but it embraces more elements of strength than any other nation that ever did exist.

It is the duty of every servant of God to watch the footprints of God in his providences, and compare them diligently with his written, revealed word. A glorious task, for here we see how providence and revelation join hand in hand. According to this test, why is it thus with England to-day? We answer, with solemn reverence to God, that England has taken the warning of God in his revealed word, as recorded, for our benefit, in Psalm ii. 10: "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings." For in all her government the Queen of England has endeavored to "serve the Lord with fear," verse 11, and "rejoiced with trembling." She has not only as Queen, but in personal devotion in obedience to God, "kissed the Son."

It is worthy of note the "judges" of England quote the Bible and rely on it more than any other magistrates in the civilized world. England's senators are "not ashamed" in their stations to refer to the word of God. England was the first, and for many years, the only nation in Europe that granted civil and religious liberty to God's own favored nation. While other nations "rage" England's Bible students are doing more than all other nations to bring out the glorious revelation that, in prophesy, is soon to be realized: "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." Of all classes of religious teachers, probably the established church of England furnishes more who advocate Christ's kingdom soon to be established on the earth, than any other to-day. "Blessed are all they who put their trust in him."

WM. DRESSER.

George Wilson—From the Hartford Poor House to the Courts of Europe.

He raiseth the poor out of the dust that he may set him with princes. Psa. cxiii.

A few years since, as Mr. Gallaudet was walking the streets of Hartford, there came running to him a poor boy of very ordinary appearance, but whose intelligent eye fixed the attention of the gentleman as the boy enquired:

"Sir, can you tell me of a man who would like a boy to work for him and learn him to read?"

"Whose boy are you, and where do you live?"

"I have no parents," was the reply, "and have just run away from the poor house because they would not teach me to read."

The gentleman made arrangements with the select men and took the boy into his own family. There he learned to read. Nor was this all, for he soon acquired the confidence of Mr. Gallaudet by his faithfulness and honesty; he was allowed the use of his friend's library, and made rapid progress in knowledge. He was apprenticed finally to a cabinet-maker in the neighborhood. He won the friendship of his employer. His master had a little room fitted up for his use in the upper part of his shop. Here he made large attainments in mathematics, in the French language, and other branches. After being in this situation a few years, as he sat at tea with the family one evening, he all at once remarked that he wanted to go to France. "Go to France!" said his master. "For what?" "Ask Mr. Gallaudet to tea to-morrow evening and I will explain."

His kind friend was invited accordingly. At tea time the apprentice presented himself with his manuscripts in English and French, and explained his singular intention to go to France.

"In the time of Napoleon," said he, "a prize was offered by the French government for the simplest rule of measuring plain surface of whatever outline; the prize has never been awarded, and that method I have discovered."

He then demonstrated his problem to the surprise and gratification of his friends, who immediately furnished him with means and with letters of introduction to Hon. Lewis Cass, then our minister to the Court of France. He was introduced to Louis Phillippe, and in the presence of the King, Nobles and plenipotentiaries, this American youth demonstrated his problem and received the plaudits of the court. He received the prize, which he had clearly won, besides valuable presents from the King. He then took letters of introduction and proceeded to the Court of St James, and took up a similar prize offered by the Royal Society and returned to the United States. He was preparing to secure the benefits of his discovery by patent, when he received a letter from the Emperor Nicholas himself, one of whose ministers had witnessed his demonstrations at London, inviting him to make his residence at the Russian Court, and furnished him with ample means for his outfit.

He complied with the invitation, repaired to St. Petersburg, and is now professor of mathematics in the Royal College, under the special protection of the Autocrat of all the Russias!

NEWS ITEMS.

CALCUTTA, August 11.—Up to the 6th of August there had been seventy-five cases of cholera among Europeans at Candahar, sixty being fatal.

BULGARIA.

CONSTANTINOPLE, August 11.—English officers surveying the frontier between Macedonia and Bulgaria were fired upon by a band of Bulgarians, but none were hurt. The Governor of Salonica ordered the escort of the officers to be strengthened.

LONDON, August 10.—A dispatch to the Times from Calcutta reports that cholera is still raging among the troops and natives in Candahar, and is spreading towards Herat.

LONDON, August 9.—A dispatch from Cabul received at the Foreign Office announces that the Afghanistan treaty has been completed and signed by Major Cavagnari, Yakoob Khan, and other representatives of the two governments. The provisions of the treaty stipulate for the construction of a telegraph line to Cabul through the Kooram Valley. The Ameer's foreign relations are to be entirely under British control, and the British, on their part, guarantee him against foreign aggressions. The British Mission was well received and courteously entertained in Cabul.

SERAJEVO, Aug. 8.—A fire has broken out in the Latin quarter of this city, the whole of which is now burning. The fire threatens to assume terrible proportions. The fire was caused by an explosion. The Catholic, Servian and Jewish districts and the commercial quarters have been destroyed. A thousand buildings have been destroyed, including the Catholic and Servian churches. Ten thousand persons have been rendered homeless. The damage is enormous. The fire (at 10 o'clock Friday night) is still raging.

One thousand houses and eight hundred shops were consumed by the great conflagration which raged in the city of Serajevo, the capital of Bosnia, Eastern Europe, last Friday and Saturday. Twenty thousand people are reported homeless and destitute.

A Memphis (Tenn.) dispatch of Sunday says: "On every side—to the north, south, east and west—the fever continues to spread. Aye, even from the country comes the cry of distress. Physicians in the employ of the Howard Association report a rapid increase in the number of new cases, especially beyond the city limits, where the fever has taken a fresh start, with the indications of following up the line of railroads running out of the city until in embraces every village that was ravaged last year."

Memphis dispatches also report the following new cases and deaths: Saturday—In the city, eleven whites, eleven colored. Sunday—twelve whites, seventeen colored. Outside the city—five; deaths, five.

LONDON, August 8.—Some correspondents in South Africa appear to think it possible that Cetywayo may defeat the natives sent against him, in which event all prestige gained by the success of British forces at Ulundi would be lost.

A Remarkable Tradition.

I had the privilege of listening to a very interesting discourse from M. Coon, a missionary to Persia. This man has spent the better part of his life laboring among the Nestorians and Mussulmans till gray-headed. He has now come ten thousand miles to arouse the cooling ardor of American Christians to the importance of missions to the heathen.

The speaker mentioned a tradition which he declares prevails through all those countries where Mohammedanism is in the ascendancy, and which is universally believed by them. They say there are to be in the history of the world twelve Imaums, i. e., great teachers, before the great day of judgment. Of these great personages eleven have already passed off the stage of action. To the memory of some of these, shrines have been erected, and multitudes of pilgrims throng thither with rapt devotion. Among these, Abraham, Moses, Jesus and Mohammed figure conspicuously. Mohammedans believe Jesus was a true prophet and teacher, and that his religion, as first taught, was good and true; but they claim that it became corrupted, and Mohammed followed and taught the only true religion. But the lecturer stated that the twelfth Imaum, for whom all Mohammedans are looking, is Jesus Christ; and there is a general expectation among them that his coming is to be very soon.

He stated that this expectation has had so much effect upon them that many look upon Christianity with far more favor than formerly, and that many small seeds are springing up among them whose existence is more or less directly traceable to a belief in this tradition.

Have Patience.

Learn to put a right construction on all God's dealings with his church and with thy soul. With regard to his church, there may be a time wherein thou shalt see it not only tossed, but, to thy thinking, covered and swallowed up with tears; but wait a little, it shall arrive safe. This is a common stumbling-stone, but walk by the light of the Word, and the eye of faith looking on it, and thou shalt pass by and not stumble at it.

The Church mourns, and Babylon sings—sits as a queen; but for how long? She shall come down and sit in the dust; and Zion shall be glorious, and put on her beautiful garments, while Babylon shall not look for another revolution to raise her again; no, she shall never rise. "And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence, shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." Rev. xviii. 21.

Be not hasty; take God's work together and do not judge of it by parcels. It is indeed all wisdom and righteousness, but we shall best discern the beauty of it, when we look on it in frame, when it shall be fully completed and finished, and our eyes enlightened to take a fuller and clearer view of it, than we can have here. Oh, what wonder, what endless wondering will it then command.—Leighton.

Spurgeon on the Sins of England.

Mr. Spurgeon, talking lately in the pulpit of the proposed prayers of the Established Church for the cessation of rain, said that it might be that the sins of England were such as to cause God to say: "No; this judgment shall not be withdrawn from you. I will not hear your prayer." But if that land was to continue to be the cradle of liberty, and of the holy gospel, then, undoubtedly, must it pass through its season of adversity. He could not wish ill to his country, but if his fellow-countrymen would not remember God except in adversity, then ought adversity to be desired. If crime was still to flourish, if drunkenness was to be as universal as at present, if oaths and blasphemies were to be heard on all sides, if their nation was to go on shedding the blood of foreign countries—invading those lands where she had no right to place her foot—and if God then said, "I will famish them," it was not for the righteous man then to interpose and try to stay His hand.

Who Is the True Gentleman?

"I beg your pardon," and with a smile and a touch of his hat, Harry Edmond handed to an old man against whom he accidently stumbled, the cane which he had knocked from his hand. "I hope I did not hurt you. We were playing too roughly."

"Not a bit!" said the old man, cheerily. "Boys will be boys, and it's best they should be. You didn't harm me."

"I'm glad to hear it;" and lifting his hat again, Harry turned to join his playmates, with whom he had been frolicking at the time of the accident.

"What do you raise your hat to that old fellow for?" asked his companion, Charles Gray. "He's only Giles, the huckster."

"That makes no difference," said Harry. "The question is not whether he is a gentleman, but whether I am one."

BREVITIES.

Prof. McGarvey says of Solomon's Pools near Jerusalem, "For immersing, they are just the thing. They all have stone steps reaching down to the bottom, on which you could immerse nicely when the water is at any stage, by placing your candidate on the step below you; and when the water is low, the benches made by the natural ledges of rock on the sloping bottom would be the chosen place." One of these pools covers six acres.

THE WISCONSIN PAPER PLANT.

Appleton Post: A curious plant has been discovered in Wisconsin which produces a kind of cotton and flax from the same stalk. It has already been woven into fabrics, and as any article that will make as good cloth as can be made from this plant will make good paper, it has been called the paper plant. It can be planted in the Spring, and cut in the Fall and Winter, it bleaches itself white as it stands, and will yield at least three or four tons to the acre. From a single root that was transplanted last Spring grew twenty large stalks, with 365 pods (containing the cotton), with at least sixty seeds in each. From this root were obtained seven ounces of pure cotton and over half a pound of flax. It is a very heavy plant, and grows from six to seven feet high.

FIRST USE OF FIREARMS.

The use of firearms in battle, must, necessarily, date from that of gunpowder. Although there is but little doubt that a compound of nitre, charcoal, and sulphur was well known to the Chinese as early as the ninth century as an explosive agent, and had been heard of in Europe about the time of the first crusade, it does not appear from history that it was well known in Europe until introduced by Roger Bacon in the twelfth century. It is alleged that firearms, in the shape of cannon, were first employed by Edward III., King of England, in 1327, in his campaign against the Scots. The first well-authenticated use of cannon in battle was by Edward III., in the battle of Cressy, A. D. 1346.

Four thousand nine hundred and fifty-three persons were killed during the past year in the Northwest Provinces of India and Oude by wild beasts and snakes, and of these, 2,871 owed their death to snake bites. No less than 10,513 head of cattle were also destroyed, mostly by leopards, in the vast grazing plains of the Terai. Rewards to the extent of 10,000 rupees were paid by Government for the destruction of 3,919 wild animals. The reward which used to be paid by Government for the destruction of snakes has been discontinued for some years now, but the mortality from this source is so alarming that the Government of the Northwest Provinces has addressed all district officers, urging upon them the necessity of inducing the landowners to act for themselves in the matter of protection against this danger, the remedy for which is entirely in their own hands.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Though charity may make your purse lighter one day, yet it will make it heavier another.

Matthew Henry: I reckon him a Christian indeed who is neither ashamed of the gospel nor a shame to it.

Unselfish and noble acts are the most radiant epochs in the biography of souls. When wrought in earliest youth they lie in the memory of age like the coral islands, green and sunny amidst the melancholy waste of ocean.

Only one day; To-morrow's care,
To-morrow, if it come, itself shall bear.

It is a sin of dark and terrible hue when men can spend lavishly on a feast, and turn their Savior as a beggar away from their door.

Robert Hall: A Christian should look upon himself as sacred and devoted. For that which involves but an ordinary degree of criminality in others, in him partakes of the nature of sacrilege, what is a breach of trust in others, is in him the profanation of the temple.

When the whirlwind rocks the land,
When the gathering clouds alarm,
Lord, within thy sheltering hand,
Hide, oh, hide us from the storm!
So with trembling souls we cry
Till the cloud and noise pass by.

If love and affection could be won with gifts and jewels, then indeed love would have its price; but it is not so. Affection springs from the heart only; no gifts can produce it. A child's love is won more truly by a parent's fond embrace and kiss than with glittering toys.

The loftiest theme, the conceived by mind,
The sweetest dreams by night,
The deepest longings of the soul,
The loftiest visions bright,
Are only far-off glimmering gleams
Of glory yet to dawn,
When life springs up from "mother earth"
In resurrection morn.

The earnest men are so few in the world that their very earnestness becomes at once the badge of their nobility; and as men in a crowd instinctively make room for one who seems eager to force his way through it, so mankind everywhere open their ranks to one who rushes zealously toward some object lying beyond them.

CALM.

I stand upon the mount of God,
With sunlight in my soul;
I hear the storms in wales beneath,
I hear the thunders roll,
But I am calm with thee, my God,
Beneath these glorious skies;
And to the height on which I stand
No storm clouds can arise.
O this is life! O this is joy!
My God, to find thee so;
Thy face to see, thy voice to hear,
And all thy love to know.

—Homer.

HUMAN TOIL.

Dr. Crabb: The sentence of toil and the promise of glory have issued from the same throne. Even our trouble here may make the material of enjoyments above the circumscription of the earth. All are agents in the restorative mercy of the great Disposer, all turn into discipline. The obstacles to knowledge, the struggles of the heart, the incidents of the common path of man, are converted into the muscular force of mind. We are but sowing in the winter of our nature the seed which shall flourish in immortality.

The Lost, Lost Days.

BY JOHN ANTHONUS.

Aye, happy are the nodding flowers
That tarcelled hang from yonder tree;
Their lives, all beauty, wear their gold
In summer crowns of purity.
But man, O man, what costly tears
Bedew thy cradle, as thy grave;
What griefs cocsam thy course of years
And break the rest we vainly crave.
I fain would be the nodding flower
Which one bright summer morn arrays,
Than in a wintry noon of life
sit down to count the lost, lost days!

Pause, listen to that singing bird.
He frills not for a vague applause;
He but obeys his Master, God.
And sings in cadence with His laws.
I hate the bitter lies of art,
Melodious fraud that fills our ears;
The servile school where men are taught
To rhyme in song pretended tears.
I fain would be the bird who sings
With fearless throat his honest lays,
Nor heeds nor knows to-morrow's dawn,
Nor yet regrets the lost, lost days.

Aye, happy are the nursing bud.
Aye, happy are the birds of song;
'Tis only man whose discontent
Disturbs the earth with railing tongue.
He mourns for childhood's artless joys,
And youth's and manhood's visions fled;
While by the embers of old age
He mumbles only of the dead.
Whence is it that frail man alone
Should fill the earth with grievous lays,
Always a story of regret.
And wasted Life—the lost, lost days!

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I like the paper; think it improves, and am glad to see it taking more of a practical turn, for we know that any belief is a dead letter unless it becomes the moving principle of life. Such pieces as Mrs. Hall's and Roxana Wince, in the last paper, apply the truth to each heart and leads one to ask, "What is my duty?" and encourages the poor and feeble to realize that, even they have a work to do for the Master, which may after all, be the best work if it shows the world patience, meekness and love through faith in Jesus Christ. I have often wondered what was truth? when I have read so many different opinions on the same subject by those who profess the same liberty of conscience and who take the same translation of the word as their guide. Still I prefer the difference of opinions, to the bigotry and shackles of what is called Orthodoxy. I am very ignorant in regard to many things your paper treats of, but am praying I may be guided into all truth.

Wishing you increased success in all your work for Christ, I am respectfully yours, MRS. D. STONE.
Lawrence, Kan.

Editor Restitution:—My subscription to THE RESTITUTION has nearly expired, and, desiring the paper to be addressed to Walcott, Scott county, Iowa, instead of Davenport, Iowa, I, at the same time, inclose $2.00 for the coming year. My hops and earnest desire is, that THE RESTITUTION may be spared to call the attention to those things that pertain to our salvation, and that it may not fail, but may be enabled to continue its warning notes until the end, and that its editor may, by God's grace, live to lead its course until that day, if the day be sufficiently near.

Your brother, in expectation of our Lord's coming, J. C. HAUPT.

Editor Restitution:—Please send me the within named works: "The Infidel Silenced," by W. H. Wilson, and "The Hope of the World," by Joel A. Simonds. Inclosed find thirty cents. If these works are anything like your paper, they will be well worth the price you ask for them, for your paper is very dear to me. About two years ago I was at a neighbor's house and happened to pick up a copy of THE RESTITUTION, and about the first thing that caught my attention was an article written by Joel A. Simonds, and the more I read the more I became attached to the paper. I borrowed some and took them home. I found something in them that I had long wanted, and that was what I believed to be Bible truth, the something to give me what I thought to be the right understanding of God's word, for before it had been to me almost a sealed book, and I am thankful that I ever come across the first copy, for since that time I have made the Bible and RESTITUTION a study; for while reading articles in THE RESTITUTION, like one of old I have searched the Scriptures to see if these things were so. The paper has become very dear to me, as I am away up at a little village on the Wisconsin river, with no religious privileges. The most of the inhabitants are French Catholics, and a few Episcopals. The Catholics hold service once a month, and the Episcopals every Sunday evening—the form of godliness without the power thereof. There is a young man conducts the service; he sent off and got permission to read the service and a book of sermons. I spend my Sundays in my room with THE RESTITUTION and my Bible, comparing the arguments of THE RESTITUTION with the word of God, and looking forward to the next week when I shall get another one. If anything happens that it does not come the day I expect it, I go away from the office feeling really disappointed. I wish that some of the brethren would come up in this part of the country and preach a few discourses. I think there might be some good done here in the name of him that has said that whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do; if ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it.

With respect, your brother,
WM. H. LOCKE.
Mosford, Wis.

P. S. Will you give some brief explanations of Rev. xiii., or more particularly the 2, 4, 5, 6, and 18 verses.

Encouraging.

The following letter speaks for itself. It is a private letter from a faithful brother and sister in the Lord who patiently continue in well-doing, cherishing the "blessed hope"—and not intended for publication, but I have received so much satisfaction and encouragement from reading it that I readily believe others of like precious faith will also be refreshed and encouraged by the truly Christian spirit and the holy zeal and confidence of brother and sister Steele. About twenty years ago in Washington City, they formed with the writer and some twenty-five or thirty others a fearless "little flock," who boldly stood up for the truth and in earnest contention for the faith once delivered to the saints, in the Rome of our day, the great National Metropolis. The war of 1861, broke us up, our meeting place was seized and converted into soldiers barracks. The whole city became a military encampment. The trumpets clangor and the cannons roar, silenced all proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom there. Like the brethern of old, we "were all scattered abroad and went everywhere preaching the word" as we could find audiences which were, however, few and scant. I returned to my former home in Virginia. Brother and Sister Steele found their way to Ohio, others fled from Washington to escape being forced into the military service, for they remembered the prophetic words of Jesus, "They who take the sword shall perish by the sword" and "when they persecute you in one city flee into another." Of this devoted little band of believers only two yet remain there, then as now, boldly adhering to the blessed word. These are Brother John W. Bogga and his sister wife. Brother Bogga was an employe in the government navy yard, but positively refused to take up arms or to drill, though commanded to do so and sternly threatened with severe punishment if he disobeyed. He resigned his contract and moved his family to Canada, but afterwards returned and still lives in Washington, in association with a small but firm and faithful body of believers of the gospel of the kingdom and in the name of Jesus as the coming King of Israel and ruler and monarch of the whole world, both Jew and Gentile.

Having well known Brother Steele and wife under these trying circumstances and having resumed correspondence with them for several years past, I have given them the local information they seek in regard to this healthy and highly favored valley of Virginia in which I reside and shall be very happy, if they should find it to their interest to come, to welcome them and all other true and faithful brethren, (who are such in deed and in truth, being not hearers only but doers of the word), to join myself and wife, the only representative known to me in this valley from Harper's Ferry to Wytheville, Va., (where our young Brother Crockett and two others with him reside), who are preaching and practicing the pure, uncorrupted gospel with its ordinances. With all such I am and have been gladly ready to labor and suffer for the Truth's sake. All others, however zealous and ardent, are only sowing to the flesh or to the wind and can only reap the dust and the chaff which they sow. Faithfully and affectionately your brother in the Lord,
ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.
Newtown, Va.

Dear Brother Magruder:—Not having heard from you for sometime, we feel a desire to hear and know how you are prospering; having seen each other face to face and being of the one faith, there is a stronger cord that binds us together than the ties of the flesh, though the latter be ever so dear unto us, yet they know not God and put not their trust in him. Dear brother, we rejoice that the truth is listened to by many in this part of the country now, who a few years ago put their fingers in their ears to keep from hearing the word, and while they have been saying all manner of evil against us, we rejoice that we have been instructed in the way of life and have hope of the same, by the knowledge of that word that makes wise the simple. The brethren and sisters here meet from house to house every first day of the week to break bread. They met at our house yesterday. There were thirteen outsiders present to hear beside our own family. We number nine at present, and believe will have an addition of five or six before long. To God be all the glory for his abundant mercy. When we came to this part of the country sixteen years ago, there were none of the one faith; but many of all kinds of faiths. They trust to their own hearts, therefore they are deceived.

Now, dear brother, how is it with you in your new home? Are there any of like precious faith in the place? There are two or three of the brethren who wish to change their place of residence for a better one, and we wish to know if there is land for sale in your county and on what terms, and what the chance for farmers, a blacksmith and a carpenter. The most of the land here is rough and thin; the labor great but the yield small. You will confer a great favor if you can give us the information we ask as early as convenient. Dear brother, while it is necessary to provide things for this life, we endeavor day by day to keep before us the things of the kingdom, striving to walk in the strait and narrow way, looking forward to the dawning of the day that will bring joy and gladness, when we shall be redeemed from this body of sin and death. We have so much to be thankful for; so much to rejoice in; having believed and obeyed that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints, we are heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. What an honor to become children of God. May we, and all who have believed and obeyed, walk worthy of the name of Jesus Christ, and have an abundant entrance into that kingdom promised to the faithful.

Dear brother, I have written quite a long letter and could write much more. We and all of the brethren send love to you and sister Magruder, and all of like precious faith. Remember us to them all, and in your prayers, as your brother and sister in hope of life. Please write soon.

SELECTIONS.

[Oregon Daily Statesman.]

The Law and the Gospel.

We very much regret, that many in our city who would have been largely benefited by the lecture of Elder S. G. Adams, at the Opera House Sunday afternoon, were not out to hear it. It was replete with historic facts, solid arguments, and valuable information. As a speaker he is bold, rapid forcible and interesting. As a reasoner, he is clear and logical, and his discourse showed a perfect comprehension and familiarity with the subject.

Many of his ideas were new, original and startling; but who can say that they are therefore not true? We hope that the lecture will be published in pamphlet form, as it is worthy of a careful and candid perusal.

In contrasting Moses with Christ, or the Law with the Gospel, we are only able to jot down a few positions of the speaker, as follows:

That all through the New Testament you will find such expressions as "the first covenant," and the "second," the "new," and the "old," a "ministration of death" and one of "life," the "letter which killeth," and "the spirit which giveth life," "the yoke of bondage," and "the liberty of the gospel," and that the one refers to the Ten Commandments and the other to the gospel. The one by Moses, the other by Christ.

That God made two promises to Abraham, one of which pertained to his fleshly descendants, and the other, in blessing all nations; Jews and Gentiles through Christ. That the promise to his posterity that he would make them a great nation, and give them the land of Canaan was confirmed by the seal of circumcision, and in that covenant only two classes were included; 1st, "He that is born in thy house" and "He that is bought with thy money," and into that covenant no Gentile could ever hope to come. That there is no sacred history that antedates Moses, and that he wrote the book of Genesis 2513 years after the "creation" and that during that long period, from Adam to Moses, there is no intimation in the Bible that any human being ever heard of the Ten Commandments or of the Sabbath-day.

That God "declared his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even Ten Commandments, and wrote them upon two tables of stone," Deut. iv, 13, "not with the fathers but with us who are all here alive this day;" (Deut. v. 3.)

That the Sabbath was given to the children of Israel "as a sign between me and you." Ex. xxxi, 13.

That God "Made Known to them the holy Sabbath." Neh. ix, 14. That the Ten Commands was the criminal law of the Jewish commonwealth, to prohibit the crimes therein designated—and all punished with death. And that the commands to "love thy neighbor as thyself," and to "love God with all thy heart, soul and might," were not in the Ten Commands, but in the other law, which contained higher and nobler principles of action than those on stones. That this law was "added on account of transgressions" and was to last till the seed should come." Gal. iii, 19. "That Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth." Ro. x, 4. That Christ "blotted out the hand writing of ordinances and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross." Col. ii, 14. That though "the ministration of the spirit was attended with greater glory." 2d Cor. iii, 7. That the first "was done away;" the latter "remaineth." That their "minds are blinded, and vail untaken away to this day, in the reading of Moses and the Old Testament." 2d Cor. iii, 14. That "the law was not made for righteous men," 1 Tim. i, 9., but for persons who do such things as are prohibited in the criminal law, written on stones. That the house of God in Christ is not composed of such characters and are not under such laws.

Space will only permit us to add, that, while very much has been said, in order to convince the people that Christians are under the law of Moses, this is the first discourse we have heard setting forth the above view of the subject; and in which the New Testament teaching of observing the first day of the week in worship and Christian work, in honor of Christ has been clearly set forth.

New Assyrian Discoveries.

The London Athenæum has an account of the discoveries made by Mr. Rassam in his second Assyrian expedition undertaken for the trustees of the British Museum, now terminated by the return of Mr. Rassam to England. He explored more or less completely the sites of the Assyrian cities of Nineveh, Calah, Assur, and the Babylonian cities of Babylon, Borsippa (Birs Nimrud), and Zergul (Tel Ho). He was able in this expedition to penetrate into a mound which had long been closed to all explorers, the Nebby Yunus, or tomb of Jonah. This mound is crowned by a mosque, and the land is the property of a religious corporation, but owing to his intimate acquaintance with the people of the village, Mr. Rassam obtained leave to excavate in the mound. Here he found remains of a palace erected by Sennacherib, and possibly extended by Essarhaddon, his son. The inscription of the latter king from this site gives him the title of King of the kings of Cush (Ethiopia) and Muzri (Egypt), which proves that the edifice was erected late in his reign, after his conquest of Egypt in 668 B. C. The exploration of the two palaces on the Koyunjik mound—that is, those of Sennacherib and Assurbanipal—has been continued, and a large number of inscriptions obtained. A short visit was paid to mounds of Kileh Shergat, which mark the site of the ancient city of Assur, the metropolis of Assyria. These vast ruins have never yet received the thorough exploration they deserve, yet here we might find, as Mr. Rassam has proved by the recovery of an extremely early brick legend, the earliest records of the Assyrian empire. The explorations in Assyria have not this year furnished any such piece de resistance as the Balawat gates, but they have produced much that is valuable for the study of Assyrian history and topography, and among the thousands of inscriptions obtained we may expect much new matter. In this expedition Mr. Rassam extended his operations into the fields of Babylonia, and his explorations of the ruins of Babylon have clearly proved the rich nature of the treasures which lie buried beneath its ruins.

His explorations on the Mujelibi have proved that it was from this mound that the famous collection of the Egibi tablets came, and the close relationship of the edifice where they were found to the Royal palaces proves beyond doubt that they were the imperial chancellors of the exchequer of the kings of Babylon. Mr. Rassam's excavations on the Mujelibi mound have proved that this was the site of the famous hanging gardens, for in its ruins he found wells, aqueducts, and ponderous masses of stone, all proving that the building had been erected, as the Greek writers say, to imitate mountain scenery.

The stone used was a black basalt, which is found only in the Armenian hills, and the immense masses must have been floated down the river. In a mound to the south of the mass of city ruins, called Jumjuma, Mr. Rassam discovered the remains of a rich hall or palace, with columns composed of enamelled bricks and mosaic; the cornices were of painted brick, and the roof of rich Indian black wood. From the position of this palace or banqueting hall, it would appear to have been situated on the bank of the river, and was probably the site of the state festivals and banquets. The inscriptions found there prove the edifice to have been erected by Nebuchadnezzar, and probably beautified by his successors. The able explorer also commenced a series of excavations in the mound of the Birs Nimrud, the site of the great Temple of Merodach—a building which has been considered by many to represent the Tower of Babel. In this mound Mr. Rassam found the remains of several richly-decorated chambers. In these edifices, both at Babylon and the Birs Nimrud, Mr. Rassam found that the mode of decoration was by painting on enamelled bricks and plaster walls covered with painted designs; no trace was found of the sculptured slabs, such as adorn the Assyrian palaces.

Some two years ago an interesting quantity of relics were found on the site of an ancient Chaldean city near the Shal-el-Hie. Mr. Rassam therefore extended his operations so far south as to visit this site. This mound is called Tel Ho. Here Mr. Rassam carried on a short series of explorations, and he discovered a number of interesting relics of the ancient city of which this mound marks the site. The cones and bricks from this site were found to bear inscriptions of Gudea, an early Chaldean king. He also found here a statue in black basalt, bearing an inscription of considerable length, of this king, but Arab dealers and former vandal explorers had so mutilated it that is was little use to bring it to England. The short time which Mr. Rassam had been in England has not permitted a full examination of the treasure which he has recovered, but there is every reason to expect discoveries of great interest will result from an examination.

POETRY.

Unkind Words.

It is not fear that life may end,
Nor kind rebuke of faithful friend,
That anguish through my feelings send,
But unkind words.

Earth's brightest flowers may fade at noon,
Each worldly prop and hope be gone,
But none of these I feel so soon
As unkind words.

Though toil and pain may be my lot,
By sickness prostrate on my cot,
Whate'er befide, I need it not
Like unkind words.

Yes, I can brook earth's wintry blasts,
Its frosts and snows—they soon are past,
At none of these I stand aghast,
But unkind words.

My cheek was hot, with fever flushed,
Dread sorrow's tide upon me rushed,
My soul was grieved, my heart was crushed
By unkind words.

From unkind words then let us spare
Each kindred heart with kindly care,
And thus each others burdens bear
With kindest words.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE FAITH OF THE GOSPEL.

A Lecture Delivered in Wythe County, Virginia, July 13, 1879.

"The just shall live by faith." Gal. iii.

Amid the wildest storm, while the lightning illumines the sky, and the thunder utters its awful voice; while the waves rise to the height of mountains, or fall to the depths of gloomy chasms; behold a ship, and at its helm a calm and sturdy form. His eye shrinks not from the sublimity around him, and his hand trembles not as the waves beat across the deck of the vessel. His faith is strong in him who said to the tempest—"Peace be still." This is faith in the abstract, simply belief, but belief that harbors no doubt; belief that casts out every shadow by the sunshine of its great fidelity. That this is essential to the Christian character, all will admit. An unbeliever, no matter how moral, cannot be saved according to the divine word of God. We see in all the teachings of Christ and his apostles that man are commanded first to believe. But, while belief is the groundwork of salvation, it must rest upon the chief corner-stone—Jesus. Bible faith is, then, belief in our Lord and Savior Jesus the Christ. To believe fully in a man, is to believe that all he claims for himself is true. You cannot be said to have faith if you doubt in the least his word or pretensions. Such being the fact, I ask you sincerely, do you believe on Christ by simply acknowledging him the Son of God? Does that cover the whole of your faith? If it does, then you have not that faith, without which it is impossible to please God. There are probably none present who will not say, "I believe on Jesus Christ; I believe that he died for the sins of the world." I wish to test your belief; I wish to measure your faith. Let me read you a passage from Luke. "And the angel said unto her, fear not Mary, for thou hast found favor with God. And behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and shall bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

You believe that Mary bore a son; you believe that his name was Jesus; now tell me why you reject the other part of the message? If you believe on Christ, why do you substitute for the throne and kingdom he is heir to, one beyond the heavens? Will those who do such things tell me where David ever reigned save in the earthly city Jerusalem? The word of God uses no mystery concerning Christ's inheritance, and thus, in Acts ii., in support of what was proclaimed by the angel to Mary, we find that "God sware with an oath to raise up Christ to sit on David's throne." This, then, is an element of gospel faith.

In Acts viii. 12, we read that "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." When a person believes these things, he believes on the Christ, and not before. Jesus himself declared that he came to preach the gospel of the kingdom. If belief, then, in this kingdom is not another essential element of the faith of the gospel, why did our Lord make it the subject matter of his ministry? Why did he say, "He who believeth not this gospel, or glad tidings, shall be condemned?" Glad tidings of what? Why, most assuredly, of the kingdom promised him, that is to be established in Canaan when he returns to rule on his father David's throne. But you may say, "Show me proof that the kingdom promised Christ will be in Canaan on this earth." The simple statement that Christ is to possess David's throne and rule upon it proves much, but we will investigate further.

Paul, in Heb. xi., says, "Faith is the what did Paul, whom we know had true faith, hope for, for his hope is the only hope for mankind. When brought before Agrippa, he said: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promises made of God unto our fathers." Notice he said for the hope of the promises. Now, if faith is the substance of these promises, how needful that we should understand them. Abraham was one of the fathers of the Jewish race. Let us see what God promised him. Turning to Genesis we read: "I will give unto thee and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession." Note the place was promised in Canaan, on the earth, and it was to be for an everlasting possession. God made another promise to Abraham when in the strength of his faith he was about to slay his son. "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand that is upon the sea shore, and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blest." To Isaac, another father, God made the following promise: "Sojourn in this land (Canaan) and I will be with thee and bless thee,—and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father—and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

God reiterated these promises to Jacob. Now, mark that the promise was in thy seed (sing) as shown by the use of the pronoun "his,"—"shall all nations be blessed." Now, Paul declares, this seed who is to bless the earth, to be Christ. "He saith not of seeds as of many, but of one; and to thy seed, which is Christ." Gal. iii. Thus, we have Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob promised an immortal inheritor (Christ) who should be a great blessing to all nations; and Jacob, in his last prophecy, pronounced that this inheritor, styled Shiloh, should be a King, and that he should be of the line of Judah, but it was not revealed until Samuel, the prophet, was commanded to anoint David, of what house he should be. David, then, being God's anointed, let us consider the promise made to him. In 2 Samuel xxiii., we read: "Now these be the last words of David. David, the son of Jesse, said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel said, the spirit of the Lord spake by me and his word was in my tongue. The God of Israel said, the rock of Israel spake to me: He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth; even a morning without clouds, as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain."

After declaring that God has made an everlasting covenant with him, he adds: "It is all my salvation and all my desire." What a grand covenant this must be! What is it? By turning to 2 Sam. vii., we read that God, through Nathan, promised David that, "When thy days be fulfilled and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build an house for my name and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever." "And thine house and thy kingdom, shall be established forever before thee; thy throne shall be established forever." This was David's salvation and all his desire,—to see his seed established upon the throne of his kingdom. Notice that the covenant contained the express words, "Thy house, and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee," evidently teaching that David should be alive to witness it, and that life is to be "forever." Now, the words of Peter agree to this covenant. "God sware with an oath to David that of the fruit of his loins according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." Thus Christ, Abraham's immortal inheritor, is of the royal line of Judah, of the house of David, and heir to David's throne in Canaan.

Now, what is the faith of the gospel? Simply belief that what God has promised he will perform, even an eternal possession in the land of Canaan, with Christ their seed as King upon David's throne. Simply belief that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of God, and that through his name there is remission of sins to all who, having the faith of the gospel put him on. When you believe this, repent, and are immersed, (the only way of putting on Christ) then your faith is accounted for righteousness and you become a new creature in the sight of God. There is no vague idea of something to be received beyond space; no conjecture will be, but stamped with that simplicity and clearness that belong to truth, we can realize the beautiful promise,—"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Do you think it immaterial as to where the kingdom of God will be? Do you think or doubt an indication of your firm basis on the rock of ages? By sowing to a myth, do you hope to reap reality? The Word answers, "What a man soweth that shall he also reap." "He who sows to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he who sows to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting."

My friends, if you hope to be rewarded, search the Scriptures as did the noble Bereans of old. Hear no voice save that voice of the spirit which is the word of God. "Search and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you;" and in that opening you will see such priceless and sparkling gems of truth that you will forever cast away the baubles of the world. What though you become of that number who are but pilgrims and sojourners in the world! What though you be cast from the association and friendship of the great! What though you be down-trodden, misrepresented and calumniated! Have you not the divine assurance that, if you suffer with Christ, you shall also reign with him? You speak of the beauty of the earth now, of the tender freshness of spring—of the sunny, flower crowned summer—of the mellow richness and glory of autumn, and even of the stern grandeur of winter. Think what it will be when Christ makes it free from the curse of sin, and bids it rejoice in an everlasting jubilee! Our pleasures here are marred by sorrow. Life walks side by side with death, and even sunshine bringeth shade. But how changed when the Lord returns.

All we can say to express the glory awaiting those who continue through life obedient to the faith of the gospel, is in the words of John: "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Who will compare the misted heaven of Orthodoxy, composed of the vagaries of heathen philosophers and modern spiritualists, with the effulgence emanating from the Son of righteousness, and that lighteth up the hearts of all who remove the vail of prejudice and gaze upon it? Surely, there are none present. If so, my sincere prayer is, that God may cause his light so to shine that it may lead them from darkness to the perfect freedom where the pure air of faith is untainted by the poison of untruth. Let me cite a few passages that bear upon the return of the author and finisher of our faith. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved and Israel dwelt safely, and this is the name whereby he shall be called—the Lord our righteousness." Jer. xxiii.

Before this comes to pass, men may look in vain for stability of government. Neither democracies, nor monarchies, nor any form of human government shall stand. They rest on the crumbling basis of carnality, and are supported by systems rotten to the core. God will surely "Overturn, overturn, overturn, until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek xxi. Gospel faith has no part in politics or the so-called patriotism of the day. A Christian is a patriot, but not in a worldly sense. He should be willing to suffer loss for the sake of the inheritance Christ has invited him to; but he knows no other country. He is separated as much from the political institutions of these United States as a citizen of England. He claims protection under its laws for which he pays tribute—nothing more. He knows no such phrase as dying for country. Paul declares plainly that no man who warreth for Christ entangleth himself with the affairs of this life. For why? "That he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier." 2 Tim. ii.

I conclude, then, from this teaching that all is but so-called faith that practices otherwise, that it is alien from the faith of the gospel, and the offspring of the pride of life, the lust of the eye, and the lust of the flesh. Do not understand me to say that men, because their faith is wrong, are actuated in their lives by impure motives. I mean no such thing. On the contrary there are moral unbelievers; men of kind, honest, and pure lives, but their system blinds them and they cannot see that, though morality is an element of Christianity; it is not Christianity and cannot free man from the dominion of sin. To such men who are of good and honest hearts, I address myself, and say, investigate, and you will find that your system is leading you to death. But, if you embrace the faith of the gospel, then you become Christ's and heirs with him and Abraham in the glories of the promised inheritance.

Let me call your attention to this third chapter of Galatians. We find from it that it is an essential thing to be adopted into Abraham's family. Why? In order that we may be blessed with faithful Abraham. What blessing does Abraham bring to us? The blessing of Christ. If ignorant of the promises to Abraham, Christ's blood would never be efficacious to us. We must first believe the promises that brings us to Christ, then as many as are baptized into Christ become the children of Abraham by adoption, and thus are made partakers in the hope of eternal life, which is given when Abraham receives his reward—the promise of eternal possession—necessarily implying the promise of eternal life. The Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Now, as many as are of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham; and we have seen that Abraham never doubted that God would give him the land of Canaan forever. Now, would God be a covenant-keeper if, after having promised this to Abraham, he should say, "I never meant Canaan on this earth, but one beyond the skies?" Remember he swore with an oath, and described the boundaries of the inheritance.

Here, then, let me warn all who continually spiritualize the literal declarations of God's word that they may bring upon themselves a curse. Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Paul says, the fathers died, not having received the promises, God having provided some better thing for us, that they, without us, should not be made perfect. They rest now in the grave, waiting till he comes in majesty and great glory to raise them and make them kings and priests in the olonian kingdom of Deity. He who has gospel faith completely repudiates the heathen dogma of inherent immortality. One who believes in the immortality of the soul need not delude himself with the belief that he is an accepted son of God. The errors of the father are often hugged by the child, but in no instance in the world's history have men clung with such tenacity to error, as to this false, delusive, and fatal dogma of immortal soulism. They seem to regard it as the very essence, the very life of truth. But, alas for them, unless they cast it off it will prove the serpent that will crush them! Beware (said Paul) lest any man spoil you through philosophy. What is this dogma but the veriest mysticism of philosophy. Search for it in vain, for it is not recorded between the lids of the Bible. If you desire to find it study Plato.

But, to return to the promises concerning Christ that are of such needful import in the right understanding of faith. Listen to what God proclaims through Jeremiah: "In those days and at that time (the time of the end) will I cause the branch of righteousness to grow up unto David, and he shall execute righteousness and judgment in the land." What land? The land God gave Abraham, Isaac and Jacob forever. Now, let these following words sink deep in your minds, for Jehovah uttered them: "Thus saith the Lord, if my covenant be not with night and day; and if I have not appointed the ordinance of heaven and earth; then will I cast away the seed of Jacob and of David my servant." "His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven. My covenant will I not break nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips." Psa. lxxxix.

If you believe God made heaven and earth, pause, I entreat you, before you pronounce the awful words—"I do not believe God intends Christ to reign in Canaan upon David's throne." If God made the earth, then Christ will reign on the earth. If one is true, both are true. If one is false, both are equally false. But God cannot lie, therefore he has said: "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David; his seed shall endure forever and his throne as the sun before me." Psa. lxxxix.

What more testimony do you want? If this is not enough, then language utterly fails to produce more or stronger. Now, I ask you to come and partake of this pure fount of truth—the eternal word of God. The fountains of this world contain the dreadful malaria of sin. They are choked with the rubbish of ages, and whosoever drinketh of them is sure to die. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come, buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do you spend money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make with you an everlasting covenant, even the sure mercies of David." What more could you desire? "Even the sure mercies of David." What are they? An everlasting place in the kingdom when David beholds Christ upon his throne. Such excellencies faith holds forth to you. The blood-covered hand of war will no more stain the annals of earth. The struggles of ambition, of pride, of hate, will cease, and forever it shall rejoice in the light of the morning without clouds.

Go where you will, to-day you find thousands groaning beneath the burdens of injustice and oppression. Examine what nation's record you may and you will find it blotted by blasphemable and abominable practices. All creation groans for him who alone can remedy the manifold evils; who alone can ameliorate the condition of mankind. Still, in spite of the divine testimony that human governments are, and will be forever failures, you hear men everywhere speak vauntingly of the wonders to be performed under this or that administration; the prosperity, the equity, the freedom, that shall bless all classes.

My friends, as well might you hope that the flight of an insect can reach the heavens as to hope that man can invent any system to prevent wrong and suffering. The cathedrals with spires that touch the clouds, the boasted cradles of life and health, are, in reality, the nurseries of death. I am no croaker, but the Bible declares that, unless a man obeys the faith of the gospel, and looks to the coming of Christ and the establishment of his righteous government, as a succor from the storms now gathering over the world, he will be wofully and dreadfully deceived. Open any paper of the day and the cry is, "fraud," "corruption." Now, as a pleasant and beautiful contrast to this, I will invite your attention to the joyful notes of praise and thanksgiving that will ring out during the reign of Christ: "But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills, and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. He shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Micah iv.

Then shall the moon be confounded and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously. Not as the sovereigns of to-day, whose lives are threatened and whose crown trembles, but glorious with the unmatchable splendor of eternity; triumphant over the blightings of time; made fresh, verdant, and sparkling by showers direct from the excellent glory of the Lord. Lift up your head, Jerusalem. Rejoice, for your King cometh. Shake off the garment of humiliation and rise in the royal robes of olonian life. There is a hymn in Sankey's collection—"Are your windows open to Jerusalem morning, noon, and night to pray? For the coming of the King in his glory are you watching day by day?"

Oh, friends, if you are found unfaithful, if you are expecting another home save that promised in the word of God, think how bitter will be your disappointment. I beseech you, do not delay, but investigate. You are standing on the verge of a fearful precipice. Oh, turn away from it, and come unto the Savior. Begin now to seek for glory, honor, and immortality. I can assure you there is more real happiness in contending for truth, though alone, than there is in following error though myriads support you. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Most certainly, none. God is able to overcome all adversaries, even the mightiest adversary—death. "Our polity is in heaven, from whence also we are expecting a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who will change the body of our humiliation into a conformity with his glorious body, according to the energy by which he is able to subject all things unto himself." Diaglott, Phil. iii. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory." Then, when glorified with Christ, "The kingdom and dominion and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens (not above them) shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all nations shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii.

You are invited to an eternal heirship in this kingdom. You may become joint heirs of Christ by believing and obeying the faith of the gospel. Now, go through the length and breadth of the earth and you will not find a reward equal to this. What is fame? What is power? What are riches? Simply mists that envelope the earth until the sunlight of Christ's coming dissipates them forever. Men have reached the heights of fame, merely to be dragged through the dust and spit upon. Well has Gray said: "The paths of glory lead but to the grave." The grave covers all, and from its gloom there is but one way of escape and, that lies through faith in the promises to be fulfilled in Christ, when he establishes here his mighty kingdom. When all nations shall flow unto Jerusalem to worship and bow in allegiance to the King of kings. Neglect not then so great salvation, but with firm reliance in God, knock at the gate or the grand temple of truth, and you shall find an entrance to joy and eternal rest.

SELECTIONS.

The Jews in Palestine.

The following is a translation of some interesting details under the above heading, extracted from a French newspaper:

"Judging by reports which appear tolerably well confirmed, the Jews are little by little retaking possession of their ancient patrimony. Eighty years ago the Sublime Porte permitted residence in the holy city to only three hundred Israelites. Forty years ago this number was raised, but the Jews were obliged to reside in a special quarter of the city which bore their names. This last restriction, however, disappeared in its turn ten years ago, and since then the Jews have bought up all the land in Jerusalem that could be bought, and have even built entire streets of houses outside the walls. Naturally, the increase of the population has been followed by substantial progress. Synagogues and Jewish hospitals have multiplied. The German Jews have no less than sixteen charity associations, and in the interior of the city one may count already twenty-eight 'congregations religieuses.' Two journals have been started. In the Rothschild and other Jewish hospitals 6,000 patients are ministered to annually. A Venetian Jew has given 60,000 francs to found a school of agriculture in Palestine. Baron Rothschild, at the time of the last loan of 200,000,000 made to Turkey, accepted as security a mortgage on the whole of Palestine. Owing to the Jewish immigration, the population of Palestine has doubled during the last ten years. In 1875 there were 12,500 Jews in Jerusalem only. The value of the land at the gates of the city has increased more than ten-fold; building and constructive work of all kinds is carried on night and day, and it is to be remarked that the immigrants, who, to a large extent, are from Russia, are animated by religious enthusiasm of a very pronounced type. Given the industrial enterprise and activity of the Jews, one may predict the resuscitation, at no distant period, of this once so flourishing province."

The Love of God.

What a glorious fact it is that there is one life that can be held up before the eyes of humanity as a pattern! There were lips that never spake unkindness, that never uttered an untruth; there were eyes that never looked aught but love and purity and bliss; there were arms that never closed against wretchedness or penitence; there was a bosom which never throbbed with sin, nor ever was excited by an unholy impulse; there was a man free from all undue selfishness, and whose life was spent in going about doing good. There was one who loved all mankind, and loved them more than himself, and who gave himself to die that they might live; there was One who went into the gates of death, that the gates of death might never hold us in; there was One who laid in the grave, to take its damp, its coldness, its chill and its horror, and taught humanity how it might ascend above the grave; there was One who, though he walked on the earth, had his conversation in heaven, and took away the curtain that hid immortality from view, and presented us the Father God in all his glory and in all his love. Such an One is the standard held up in the church of Christ; it is a church that rallies around the cross and that gathers around Jesus; and it is because he is attractive and lovely and glorious that they are coming from the ends of the earth to see the salvation of God.—Bishop Simpson.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Punishment of the Wicked.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? 1 Pet. iv. 17.

This question is a very natural one. It is suggested almost constantly by our observations. Peter asked the same question concerning the reward of the righteous, and surely no thinking person can fail to be anxious in relation to the destiny of both the righteous and the wicked. Our question at this time relates to the end of the wicked. It is an important question and occupies very nearly as prominent a place in the Bible as does that of the righteous. It is also a definite question, and deserves a definite answer. We believe that the Bible is the true source of information on this subject, and that it only can answer this question correctly. Let us then divest ourselves as much as we can from the prejudices of our early education: Let us earnestly and candidly inquire of the Bible

WHAT WILL BE THE END OF THE WICKED?

Will it be torment? or, will it be destruction? Will it be of long continuance? or, will it be of brief duration? Will it be one punishment? or, more than one? What is it? What does the Bible say about it?

Where shall we begin our inquiry? Shall we begin in the book of Revelation? If we should find anything here that had not been previously revealed, would it apply to the world that had passed away? for no such information had been given, and where no law is there can be no transgression. If we should inquire of Christ, what shall be the end of the wicked? and should learn of him something essentially different from what had been previously revealed, would it apply to the world previous to that time? Or, if we should consult the law given to Moses, and should find a punishment not known before, could it be accepted as a correct answer to our question, for where there is no law there can be no transgression, or punishment. We must then enquire of the law which must have existed before there could be any transgression. This was the law given to Adam before sin entered into the world. With this the Apostle Paul agrees when he says, "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." The law given to Adam was to have jurisdiction over his race forever. It was the law of the kingdom which was made and which was to continue forever. It was the only law in the Bible, or out of it, which appoints all men to death. Other laws punish only some particular crime with death, but this law punishes all sin with death. This law was given at the right time to influence the whole race. It was given to the Father that it might be communicated from father to son through all generations. This law contains a full and complete answer to our question. All other instructions, wherever found, must be measured by this immutable law of the kingdom.

THE LAW.

This law enjoined upon Adam perpetual obedience. It enforced this obedience by a well defined penalty for transgression. "Thou shalt surely die," described its punishment. The words are simple, and easy to be understood. They come within the comprehension of a child. These words have never been misunderstood, only when applied religiously to man. The punishment they describe is death; to die so as not to live; the extinction of life. They can mean nothing else. Their sense is complete. They need no addition or diminution to make complete sense. They are as final in their import as the words, "thou shalt be hung." No after consideration can possibly attach to them. They describe one punishment and only one. When a man has died, this law has no farther demand on him. This is the punishment which has passed upon all men. When all men have died the demands of this law have been fully met. This punishment measures God's estimate of the deserts of sin. And "his judgments are true and righteous altogether." Therefore this punishment can never be increased or diminished, or in any way improved. As God cannot deny himself, even he, himself cannot change this punishment to make it more or less. It must be the punishment of the wicked so long as the law of the kingdom is of force. This one, complete, and final punishment must measure all of God's judgments concerning the race of Adam.

ADAM SINNED

and judgment was passed upon him in these words: "Because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake. In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return to the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

This is the death which has passed upon all men. It is comprehended in the penalty of the law given to Adam, "Thou shalt surely die." If this death has passed upon all men, then all men are under this law and subject to its penalty. It is the punishment of all men under the gospel, in all dispensations. In all God's judgments against wicked men he has never deviated from this law, either more or less. Then, in this judgment which has passed upon all men, we have a full and definite answer to our question, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

THE TREE OF LIFE.

Adam was excluded from the tree of life, lest he should eat of it and live forever. Not to live forever is another description of the punishment of the wicked.

THE EXECUTION OF THIS PUNISHMENT.

All the days that Adam lived were 930 years and he died. He died so as not to live. The penalty of the law was fully executed upon him. The law said, for transgression thou shalt surely die. After he sinned, the sentence was pronounced upon him, Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return. He was then excluded from the tree of life lest he should eat of it and live forever, and when he was 930 years old he died so as not to live.

In the history of Adam after he sinned, we have the history of his race. Thus we have in the simplest language that can be used, the history of the one man who by sin brought death into the world.

1. The law said to him, for transgression thou shalt surely die.

2. After he sinned the sentence was passed upon him. In sorrow shalt thou eat of the fruits of the earth all the days of thy life, and then return to dust.

3. He was excluded from the tree of life lest he should eat of it and live forever.

4. All that had been threatened was executed upon him and he died so as not to live.

This punishment is only one punishment for every man. It is all the punishment God thought sin deserved. This is the only law that appoints every transgressor to death. And "God's judgments are true and righteous altogether." This punishment was appointed, and executed after the need was promised, and was, therefore, the first example of punishment under the gospel plan. It seemed to be a final disposition of all wicked men. God seemed to be satisfied with it for at least 3,500 years. Under this law and in harmony with it, he executed judgments upon the people. He destroyed the world by a flood. He burned up the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. He overthrew the Egyptians in the Red Sea. He wasted the children of Israel in the wilderness until not a man remained alive who were numbered when they came out of Egypt, except Caleb and Joshua, and all his judgments upon the people thus far in the history of the world, have been of the same kind. Nothing more has been executed, nothing less would do. This one punishment, "to die so as not to live and return to dust" seemed to satisfy the law giver. Nothing is said or intimated about another punishment, or any further punishment. The descriptions of the judgments seem to be complete and final. If we had lived in those early days what other view could we have had, than that they were final? If they were not final, how can we know it? If those judgments were a sufficient punishment for sin then, will not such judgments always be a sufficient punishment for sin? If the gospel enjoins another punishment, why was it not mentioned in the sample punishment under the gospel? If the gospel doubles the punishment, why is it not mentioned in some of these judgments? Are we sure that the gospel does require another punishment for sin? If it does, where is it written? Where is the first place that it is mentioned? If we could find where such a punishment was first revealed, could it be applied to the world that had died before that time? Do changes in law apply to the past? Then, what will become of the world that had passed away before the additional punishment was revealed?

Is there a single passage for the first 3,500 years of Bible history, that mentions another punishment besides the one that has passed upon all men? If not, then by what law will those who died during that time be judged?

Has the law which requires only one punishment been changed? Can it be changed? Is it not immutable? Can God deny his own law? Can he improve it? Does the gospel require another punishment? Did Christ come to condemn the world? If not, who will condemn it to a double punishment? Will all those judgments, which were true and righteous altogether, ever be revealed? Will those who suffered them be tried over again? If so, how can we be assured that the second trial will not need to be repealed?

Then may we not most assuredly answer the question in our text, What shall the end be of them who obey not the gospel of God? The one complete and final punishment of the wicked will be, to die so as not to live, and return to dust.

This conclusion rests on the following facts:

1. The law is immutable, and therefore can never be changed.

2. This law was given to have jurisdiction over Adam and his race forever.

3. It is the law of the kingdom which was prepared when the world was made, and which is to have no end.

4. It is the law which hath appointed one death unto all men.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

Most Believers have the Spirit? Yes,

I would like with great respect for brethren of dissenting views, to express some thoughts briefly in regard to a subject which has been freely treated in THE RESTITUTION. I refer to that very sacred and important subject of the present and positive influence and function of the Holy Spirit. I say in the beginning, after candid and careful study of the subject, I do not see how we can suppose this influence inoperative now. Let me give a few proofs.

It is said we cannot expect the Holy Spirit to answer to prayer or infer its positive promise from Luke xi.-13, because the definite article the is wanting in the Greek, and we are simply compelled to understand a Holy Spirit as proffered by our heavenly Father to them that ask him. This will not do. In Matt. i. Mary conceived by pneumatos agiou without the definite article, but the mighty agent was God's Holy Spirit—that we know. I will add, in Luke iv., Jesus returned from the Jordan full of Holy Spirit, (no article) but surely it was the energy of God, for the spirit in a bodily shape had just rested on his head. So in Acts ii. 4, they were all filled with miraculous or special energy from God, Holy Spirit, and was it not just as much the Holy Spirit's power as ever we could suppose any where realized in times of special divine interposition to energize and help waiting men? It was the very day of Pentecost.

What we claim, and all we claim, is direct and potent influence from God. So, in the case of Peter, in Acts iv., answering the querulous elders of Israel with power after the miracle of healing the cripple, he was filled with Holy Spirit, and we must certainly understand, special divine power. So Jesus, breathing on his disciples, said "Receive Holy Spirit." Was it not in some degree the energy of God? Undoubtedly.

Again, emphatically, look at John vii. 39, where Jesus promised to the believer, out-flowing rivers of living water. "But this he spake of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive. For the Holy Ghost (no article) was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified." Here we see plainly that the Spirit of God is used with and without the article in the very same verse. And so in the Emphatic Diaglott, though the article is wanting in the second case in the Greek, it is rendered in English, "the Holy Spirit," and very properly, too. It is perfectly easy to give a mountain of proof of like character. So, to my mind, the case is very plain.

The article may be present or absent. Precisely so, and repeatedly we find in respect to the name of God and Christ the article is wanting. Before leaving the subject I would cite special attention to 1 Cor. xii. where we have a particular account of special and even miraculous operations of the Holy Spirit, such as the gift of tongues and the interpretation of tongues; and I wish particularly to have noticed that the article is in the very beginning twice absent in this chapter, though afterward supplied. No more need be added on this point.

In Gal. v. 22, it is said, "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith meekness, temperance." Were these fruits limited to apostolic days? Is the Holy Spirit's beneficent power forbidden to us and withheld from us? Are we to expect such blessed fruits, and strive for them, without any help of the Spirit? Surely, I cannot think it at all reasonable. And "we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith." Is that simply a privilege and exercise restricted to Christians contemporaneous with Paul? How can that be? We do the same, in our day, do we not? Are we again to have the absent articles suggested? Then in verse sixteen how is it? "This I say then, walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh" (no article). It would hardly do to say "walk in Spirit," for the sense would not be so clear; and in the very next verse we read "for the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh," and here we have the article. And in the next verse again, "but if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law," and here the article is omitted. The fact is the case is precisely thus: When we are very particular to personate, we say George Washington, the name George being equivalent to a definite article; but again, we say a hundred times simply Washington, and all the world knows to whom we refer. I beg pardon for touching the point again.

3. Take the eighth of Romans. Dropping all reference to the article henceforth, let us see what we have here. Are all these blessings and operations of the Spirit to be imputed and restricted to ex-apostolic or immediately past-apostolic Christians? Impossible. "That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Are we excluded from this law and liberty of Spirit work and power? "But ye are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." Are modern believers not included? Let those believe it who can. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." This is the Spirit of God just nine words back in the same verse. So that it is infinitely far removed from a matter of indifference whether the Spirit is a matter of possession of not. There is no option in the matter, or only one option, and that is (the option and necessity, too,) of Spirit possession. Brethren, let us be honest before God. Surely, I am after the truth, pure and simple, and the truth is very plainly set before us.

Still more, "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." What have we here? Why the great fact of the resurrection indissolubly associated with prior spirit inhabitation. Mark it well now. The same Spirit that dwells in believers before death, and indelibly marks them, is the agent by which God shall raise them from the dead. How can such a vital truth be ignored?

And again, "for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And the plain inference is, that the absence of such leadership would involve the non-existence or non-possession of sonship. This would be a calamity indeed. The Spirit of God either is or gives the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

And again in 1 Cor. iii. 16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" How is this? Are latter day, or I might even say, last day believers excluded from any part or partnership in the temple of God? Do they not help compose it? If they do, why then does not God's Spirit as truly dwell in them as in believers of early days? Let some one answer that is in the fear of God.

And again in ch. vi. 11, "And such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." See what this agency of the Spirit is. It is vital, it is imperial. Can we do without it? Is not the Spirit's work indispensable in sanctification? We are told to take the Spirit and doctrine or teaching of Christ interchangeably. I cannot do that. We need just as much carefulness and truth in discrimination here as otherwise. This is a right and imperative rule of successful and sensible Scripture study.

It is written in Eph. iv. 30, thus: "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." This sealing work is plainly shown elsewhere to denote a personal, specific action of the Spirit upon the creature, the believer. With all respect to those who differ, I should much fear lest a denial of the necessary work and in-dwelling of the Spirit in the believer should be one thing that would grieve God's Spirit.

What have we in 1 Peter iv. 14? "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye, for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you." Is this no more true in times when there is not the power of miracle working? We are plainly told that the Spirit's work is multifarious and not miraculous only, as the word miraculous is often understood. The fact is, poor worried and persecuted Christians are assured for their comfort that they are honored and crowned by the Spirit of God resting on them. Dare I doubt it? Never. It is impossible to be so hand-tied as to have no faith in a present coronation of this Spirit for troubled saints.

In Rom. v. 5, "And hope maketh not ashamed because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." Now, here the positive agency of the Spirit is the production or diffusion of God's love in the heart. What right have we for supposing that diffusion possible, independently of the efficient Spirit? And still more, the mighty sustaining power of hope is seen in its vital relation to love, "hope maketh not ashamed because the love is shed abroad."

But I must forbear. The subject needs another article for which I may possibly find time. I have not a particle of prejudice, and have not an atom of taste for controversy. However, I dread the death, the dearth, the droughts, or whatever it is, which it seems to me must be inseparable from a doctrine exclusively the Spirit's positive presence and agency. I dare not discredit so great a truth as that Spirit's necessity to Christian life. I have no consciousness of any wish but to have the truth exactly, and after weighing propositions and allegations, I am clear and settled in my convictions. Love to all who are in Christ Jesus.

Riches.

A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth—Jesus.

There is an idea prevailing among men that riches consists in having wealth in abundance. If a man possesses many cattle, large farms, palatial residences, much gold or silver; or grain, he is regarded as being rich. If he has abundance we say he is in a good condition to live. So intimately are these ideas connected that we come in time to regard life and abundance as identical and think there is nothing in life worth living for unless we are rich or have an abundance for enjoyment.

But there is a higher life even now. There is a condition of being in which wealth finds no place. It is styled by our Savior as being "rich toward God." This is the life that does not consist in the abundance of the things we owe. We may have no cattle, or farms, or gold, yet we are rich. We may live in a hut, or camp in the field, without owning a foot of land, yet we are rich, for we regard life as more than meat, and this existence as more than the raiment we have on. He who looks only to the riches of this life is blind, and cannot see into the life beyond. He who is engaged only in laying up riches here will have an empty treasure-house when the other life will have come. If we are rich toward God, it is not because we have gold but because we have been good; not because we were thoughtful of the morrow and anxious in its cares, but because we trusted him in the hours of solicitude trial and gloom; it is because our love is true, our faith unwavering and our treasures laid up in heaven.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

You can attend to your own business without being meddlesome.

By the streets of "By-and-by," one arrives at the home of "Never."

Never be ashamed of the gospel; never be a shame to it.

The calm retreat, the silent shade,
With prayer and praise agree,
And seem by thy sweet bounty made
For those who follow thee.

Thousands are hated, whilst none are ever loved without a real cause. The amiable alone can be loved. In most situations of life the consciousness of innocence is our best shield and our firmest buckler.

God makes the earth bloom with roses that we may not be discontented with our sojurn here, he makes it bear thorns that we may learn to look for something better beyond.

The ill-timed truth we might have kept—
Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung!
The words we had not sense to say—
Who knows how grandly it had rung?

Prayer in the morning is the key that opens to us God's mercies and blessings. Prayer in the evening is the key that shuts up under his protection and safeguard.

Jeremy Taylor: Mercy is like a rainbow which God set in the heavens as a remembrancer to man. We must not look for it after night; it shines not in the other world. If we refuse mercy here, we must have justice in eternity.

Arabic Proverb: Wisdom is better than riches. Wisdom guards thee, but thou must guard thy riches. Riches diminish in the using; but wisdom increases in the use of it.

The loss of time is much,
The loss of truth is more;
The loss of Christ is such
No mortal can restore.

The lark goes up singing towards heaven; but if she stops the motion of her wings then straightway she falls. So it is with him who prays not. Prayer is the movement of the wings of the soul: it bears heavenward, but without prayer he sinks in the filth of earthly impulses.

Stability out of the pulpit often speaks more eloquently than in the pulpit.

LONG LIFE.

He liveth long who liveth well,
All other life is short and vain;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of living most for heavenly gain.

He liveth long who liveth well
All else is being flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 20, 1879.

FROM our weekly receipts we are barely able to pay current expenses for publishing THE RESTITUTION. We hope our friends will exert themselves in behalf of the paper.

IT appears that some negotiations have been going on for the recovery of the body of the late A. T. Stewart. The grave-robbers demand $250,000 for returning the body, which is declined by Judge Hilton and Mrs. Stewart, and the affair is at rest for the present.

BROTHER MYERS' second article on the Second Death appears in this number. He states that he is willing to rest the case here. Brother Magruder has written to us that he will give one responsive article on the other side before long. Both sides of this question will then have been fully enough heard—for the present at least.

THE yellow fever continues its ravages at Memphis, and is said to be spreading into districts that were hitherto supposed to be safe. There have been a few cases reported at Corinth, Miss. It has been officially stated that the epidemic has appeared at Tampico in Mexico in a most virulent form. What the loss of life may be before the occurrence of autumnal frosts no one can tell.

THERE has been a collision between the French Canadians and Irish Catholics at Quebec, which resulted in the death of quite a number concerned in the melee. Bloody riots are also reported between Catholics and Protestants in Ireland. These ebullitions are only outward manifestations of the pent up fires that are burning below the surface of society that will sometime burst forth in volcanic fury.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Card.

To the Brethren of the One Faith:

The subscriber having so arranged his affairs as to allow him to take the month of September and the latter half of October, as a vacation, proposes to devote that time to visiting the brethren and laboring among them in the word and doctrine, as opportunity may offer. He will accept any invitation to lecture and preach the gospel of the kingdom of God to his fellow-men to the best of his ability, on the single condition, that those who may wish his services shall be at charges with him in paying his traveling expenses to and fro, but naught beyond that necessary amount. If called to attend as a preacher, any meeting or appointment, previously fixed and announced, rail road companies will reduce the fair considerably. I should be most willing to pay my own way and so relieve those interested wholly from expense, but though rich in faith, I humbly trust, I am of the poor of this world, I have a dependent family for whom with God's blessing, it is necessary to provide. The railway lines nearest to me are the Baltimore & Ohio, and the Virginia & Tennessee. I may be addressed at,

A Change of Government in the World.

It is well known to all, that the governments of the earth are in a perilous condition. The strifes of the nations have led to wars of the bitterest kind, which have brought distress upon the nations engaged; and excitement and anxiety upon the whole world. The war between Russia and Turkey has been closely watched by every clime, the distress of those countries is fearful. We are told by the World's Crisis, that this war has cost the lives of ninety thousand strong stalwart Russian soldiers, and perhaps as many Turks. All the world wonders when they view the status, and see how the Czar of Russia has humbled the Sultan of Turkey, how different is her status now to that of four hundred years ago, when the Ottoman power held the sway over all the Orient. Asia, eastward to the border of China, Syria, Arabia, Northern Africa, and the southeast of Europe. But the different wars she has been engaged in, have weakened her power, from time to time one slice after another has been taken from her. And by the treaty of Berlin, in July, 1878, she has again been dismembered partitioned, cut up, and sliced off.

Still the nations of the earth are not satisfied, they are still longing for blood. All Europe is making great preparations for war, gathering together the bone and sinew, drilling them for battle, as the prophet Joel said. "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, let them come up. Beat your ploughshares into swords; and your pruning hooks into spears." Are not the men of war doing this. Where, in all history, do we read of war implements being made so multitudinous as in the last few years. Again a few days ago the cable brought us word that England's strong arm has fallen upon the Afghan's and driven them back, but not without the loss of blood. Yea every country in Europe can be refered too, as a mighty warrior, listening for the war whoop, that they may fall upon their prey.

America has recently passed through a civil war, and we well remember the distress brought upon the nation by it, the loss of life, the destruction of property, the high taxation, and we are still laboring under the oppression caused thereby, and still there remains a political strife, and who knows but another rebellion may grow out of it. We also are in arms against the Indians, whom we follow from place to place, and strive to obliterate. Thus we see that "perilous times" have come, not with one nation only, but with all nations of the earth. And when one nation is exalted another is abased. Thus we see that human governments are a failure. Is it not high time to view a change of government in the light of prophecy, that when we look back upon the past with sorrow, we may look forward to the future with joy.

Let us remember that the governments of the earth are in the hands of Jehovah, and although the "prince of power of the air" may have his away, the "spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience," may have its power over the kings of the earth, yet their bounds are fixed that they cannot pass. In Dan. iv., we read of "Nebuchadnezzar the king, who was at rest in his house, and flourishing in his palace." He forsook the living and true God, and made him an image of gold, and demanded the wise men of the province of Babylon to worship it, after this he was humbled for a time, his power was taken from him, "he became as the beasts of the field, till seven times passed over him." "This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones, to the intent that the living may know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men," Dan. iv. 17.

Although the above is not very complimentary to the rulers of the kingdom of the earth, yet when we consider the present, and look at the past, who can deny the truth of these words. "He setteth up the basest of men." The kingdom of men must run its full course before a successful change of government shall be made in the world. In the vision of Nebuchadnezzar we have an image presented, whose head was of fine gold, Daniel's interpretation of it is in this wise, "Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, strength and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold," Dan. ii. 37–38. (This is the Babylonian kingdom.) "And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee," verse 39, this is represented as the "breast and arms of silver," of verse 32. (This is the Medo-Persia kingdom,) "another third kingdom of brass, which bear rule over all the earth;" verse 39, here is "the belly and thighes of brass," of verse 32. (This is the Grecian kingdom.) "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron," verse 40, here is the "legs of iron, and feet part of iron and part of clay," of verse 33. (This is the Roman kingdom.

"And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided, but there shall be in it, of the strength of the iron, for as much as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken," verse 41–42.

This Roman kingdom has been divided as Daniel represented by the toes of the feet. Ten kingdoms have grown out of her, which are described by Sir Isaac Newton as follows: "1 The Vandals, 2 Servians, 3 Visigoths, 4 Alans, 5 Burgundians, 6 Franks, 7 Hirull, 8 Huns, 9 Lambards, 10 Ravenna." "And in the days of these kings (or kingdoms) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdoms shall not be left to other people, but it shall brake in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever," Dan. ii. 44. And as the first four kingdoms existed on the earth, the fifth must be on the earth also.

These same four universal kingdoms are represented in Daniel's vision, as recorded in chapter 7. "The lion with the eagle's wings," representing Babylon; "the bear," Medo-Persia; "the leopard," Greece; "the fourth beast dreadful and terrible, exceeding strong with iron teeth, having ten horns," this represented Rome. "The fourth beast shall be the the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces."

This undoubtedly describes the Roman empire in the Zenith of its power. And the ten horns out of the kingdom are ten kings that shall arise. Thus in the four beasts we see a full representation of the four parts of the image, and the ten horns represent the toes of the feet of the image. And the little horn will represent the Roman or fourth kingdom at the time when it exercises its power. It comes up among the ten horns on the head of the fourth beast, therefore it belongs to the Roman empire. When its dominion is taken away, that empire will end, and nothing less than the fifth kingdom (or the kingdom of God) is able to destroy this fourth (or Roman) kingdom. This fifth kingdom is "the stone cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet, and broke them in pieces," Dan. ii. 34, which also "became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth," verse 35.

A few Questions to our Friends of the Seventh Day Advent Faith.

I ask these questions in all candor and in good faith, believing that some one of their faith will answer the same with equal candor, and thus the true basis of their faith be set in its true light, and thus evince a willingness to give to every man that asketh the reason of the hope with meekness and reverence.

As the ten commandments were a covenant, Deut. iv. 13, I would respectfully ask, was this under the old or new covenant? Was it national or individual? Was the fourth commandment of the decalogue (which is the great criterion with the seventh day people) applicable to any but those who were brought out of Egypt? See Deut. v. 15. If any one should answer (as I have often heard it) that the ten commandments spans all time after its announcement from Sinai, then I would ask again, why did God announce that he would make a new covenant with the children of Israel, (the same people,) after those days, and not according to the covenant he made with them when he brought them out of Egypt. See Jer. xxxi. 31; Ezek, xxxvi. 8; xxxix. 20.

The above inquiries are particularly to that class of Adventists who deny any future to literal Israel, or Israel proper, or Daniel's people, and not to that class who are known in common parlance as believers in the future, or age to come. They view the seventh day Sabbath question from a different standpoint of observation; if I have been rightly informed, they observe the seventh day as a type of the future rest, which is to be on a higher and broader plain, which will include the Gentiles as well as the Jews.

I am no advocate of the observance of the first day by virtue of the Pope's edict or command, but to the teachings of the apostles exclusively.

Christ distinctly declared that the word of the apostles should be the test; all who should believe on him through their (the apostles') word should be saved, and it is plainly stated that the ten commandments were a covenant made with the children of Israel—those who were redeemed from Egyptian bondage, (applicable to no other people,) a national covenant called the first covenant. This was predicated on certain conditions, which they agreed to perform, but which they failed to perform, and as per-consequence the promised national blessings were withheld. The people were required to celebrate the Sabbath as a memorial of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. Query: Now, could the Gentiles celebrate it for the same purpose? As the seventh day Adventists deny any future to Israel nationally, how can they reconcile the new covenant which is to be made to the children of Israel; not according to the covenant that he made with them when he brought them out of Egypt. See Jer. xxiii. 7–8; xvi. 14; Ezek. xxxiv.; xxxv.; xxxvi; xxxvii.

The covenant made with the fathers (commonly called the Abrahamic covenant) was never called the old in contradistinction from the new, which God has promised to make with the children of Israel after those days. After what days? When he, (Christ) the great shepherd of Israel, shall gather the remnant of his people or flock. See Jer. xxiii., and Ezek. xxvii. 25–26, and many other prophecies too numerous to cite at this time. But Jeremiah's testimony alone is sufficient warrant for our belief in the age to come doctrine, the bare mention of which, too, often throws many of our good friends into spasms. We have a sufficient scriptural warrant for the term even, ages-to-come," this being the first in the series. "The world, (ages) to come, hath he not put in subjection to angels, but to his Son." See Heb. i.

In that day—the day of the Lord, so frequently used by the prophets, spans more than a twenty-four hour day; it must be identical with Peter's day of the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. We are under no necessity of putting a forced construction, as our friends too often do in order to make the Bible harmonize with itself—such words or phrases for instance as flesh or carnal Israel, spiritual Israel, etc.

Words are the signs of ideas, and if the words I have cited, and which I often hear, are not found therein, I would respectfully ask then, are there any such ideas there? Echo answers! Our orthodox friends,' (self styled) or many of them at least, have a very convenient and summary method of interpreting all Scripture, viz: the types were literal, but the antitypes are spiritual. In order to interpret the following Scripture in accordance with their system, or paraphrase of it, would necessitate something additional, viz: He that scattered (literal) Israel, will gather him, and keep him, (spiritual Israel) as a shepherd doth his flock. See Jer. xxxi. 10. This system of interpretation would subject a vast amount of Scripture to a similar uncouth condition, to say nothing of the curse which would be incurred by adding to the word. See Rev. xxii. 18; Deut. iv. 2.

With all due defference to our friends of the Seventh day Adventist church, I think it comes with rather ill grace, to say the least, to those especially, who reject the future, or age to come,—any future to Israel—to hold so tenaciously to this command—the fourth in the decalogue—the covenant with the children of Israel, a national covenant. See Deut. v. 1–6. The covenant made with the fathers was prior to this, yet is never called the old or the first covenant. The authority for keeping the seventh day as a Sabbath was for the purpose of celebrating their deliverance from Egyptian bondage applicable only to the children of Israel nationally; and this is to be superseded by a new and-better-covenant, not according to the first covenant when God led them out of Egypt.

To deny any future to Israel nationally, is virtually to reject the new covenant. When the new covenant comes into force will its perpetuity be contingent on the nation's accepting Jesus as the Savior? This new covenant is not on the same conditions the first or old one. This new covenant and taking away the sins of the nation or people are the subjects of prophecy, and can prophecy be conditional? As prophecy is history in advance, and can there be such a thing as conditional history?

Again, I would ask, why the necessity of a new covenant if the first or old one was faultless or could give life? Did not the old law, or ten commandments, fulfill the mission assigned to it, in performing the functions of a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ.

NEWS ITEMS.

SERAJEVA, August 14.—One thousand four hundred and seventy-six houses burned in the recent fire. The loss will reach 50,000,000 florins. Forty-six soldiers were killed and wounded.

MADRID, August 14.—Several fires, some incendiary, are reported in the provinces. In one case thirty houses were destroyed and thirty-four persons perished.

ROME, August 14.—The health and strength of the Pope have visibly declined. His physicians insist on the necessity of an immediate change of air, but the Pope refuses at present to change his residence.

LONDON, August 15.—In some quarters it is believed that a political crisis is imminent in Turkey, owing to the growing popular discontent with the mismanagement of the affairs of the empire.

LONDON, August 16.—Mrs. Nellie Sartoris, daughter of ex-President Grant, is dead. Mrs. Sartoris was married in the White House on May 21, 1874, to Algernon C. T. Sartoris of England, by the Rev. Dr. Tiffany. Mr. Sartoris is the son of Edward Sartoris of Hampshire England. Since their marriage they have lived in England.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 16.—There is general sorrow here over the news of the death of Nellie Grant Sartoris. The impression prevails that her remains will be brought here for burial some time next month, when it is believed General Grant and Mrs. Grant can reach Washington. It doesn't seem certain that General Grant can bear of the death before he reaches San Francisco.

LONDON, August 17.—A correspondent at Vienna, discussing the chances of war between Russia and China on the Kuldja question, says the Chinese have available over 100,000 men and 100 guns.

The cholera is still prevalent at Cabul. Major Cavagnari has telegraphed that cholera has appeared among the regiments which recently returned from Herat. This caused a panic at Cabul, and some of the soldiers deserted. The cholera is diminishing at Candahar.

LONDON, August 18.—A Times dispatch says the drouth in Cashmere still continues, and the condition of the people is deplorable.

LONDON, August 18.—At Lurgan, Ireland, Saturday, 200 police charged on a mob with fixed bayonets. The police were beaten back and twenty of their number injured. The rival mobs fired at each other with rifles. One leader of the Catholic party had some dynamite, which exploded, injuring him fatally.

LONDON, August 18.—There has been a long-continued and disastrous rain-storm in England and Wales. Lowlands have been overflowed, bridges have been washed away, and traffic has been suspended on some railroad lines. The wheat is gradually rotting, and any crops left standing will not repay the cutting.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., August 18.—Eight new cases of yellow fever were reported to the board of health up to noon to-day, and five deaths occurred, one of which occurred five miles out on the Poplar street boulevard.

BREVITIES.

A protestant meeting at Gorrequella, Spain, was broken up by the Spanish police, the pastor arrested, the women driven out, and the names of the men present recorded in the police books.

The Kremlin at Moscow was set on fire in broad daylight on July 19, a wooden staircase having been saturated with petroleum. Red flags were displayed on the church towers, the tocsin was sounded, and the whole population hurried to the place, but the palace was saved only by great exertions.

The Jews of Damascus have petitioned Midhat Pasha, Governor-General of Syria, to promote the construction of a railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem, in order to render the pilgrimages of religious Jews to the holy city less difficult. The Jews hope to attain their object, since Midhat Pasha is at present engaged in projecting a line between Damascus and Beyrout.

It is not hasty but seriously reading, meditating upon holy and heavenly truths, that makes them prove sweet and profitable to the soul. It is not the bee's touching on the flowers that gathers honey, but her abiding for a time upon them, and drawing out the sweet. It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on Divine Truth, that will prove the choicest, wisest, strongest Christian.

THE GRAVEYARD OF SPAIN.

Boston Herald: An intelligent resident of Havana says that Cuba is the graveyard of Spain and a more befitting name than "Pearl of the Antilles." In one cemetery near the capital 30,336 interments have been made within ten years, and in a neighboring burial ground over 10,000. Out of the Spanish garrison of 7,000 men, twenty die every day, or a whole battalion every month.

Scotch Presbyterianism is torn by the case of the Rev. Dr. Macrae, who has been tried and suspended for disbelieving the doctrine of eternal punishment. Before the synod in Edinburgh he endeavored to prove from the Scriptures that the bad have not the same possibility of life in them as the good, that evil has no everlasting existence, and that the universe will eventually be purified from sin. He disclaimed any intention of imposing a new dogma on the church, and only asked liberty to hold his own views. The majority against him was overwhelming.

[Jewish World.]

THE HOLY LAND.

A correspondent of the New York Hebrew World writes that there are more signs of business and social activity at Jerusalem now than at any time since the days when it was the capital of Israel's kings. In and about the city many new buildings are going up, and this naturally calls for an increase of agricultural and manufacturing interests in the neighborhood. This result is due not to the efforts of our co-religionists in Palestine and their friends in other countries, but to the activity of Russia and Germany as antiquarians and colonists. Russia, especially seems bent upon colonizing in the Holy land, probably with a view to counteract a supposed preponderating influence on the part of England. The Czar looks with a jealous eye on that portion of the world's map, and quietly encourages a fanaticism on the part of the Greek church in that direction. This tends of course, toward building up business interests, and the people of Palestine will gather the harvest of gold that will follow.

The first of the recent cases of Russian incendiarism was tried on July 1, in the Odessa military court. The defenant was a retired soldier, forty-six years old, who said he was of the Roman Catholic religion, and he had served in the Russian army twenty years. On his retirement from the service he settled in a village and opened a shoemaker's shop. He was not successful in his business, nor in making friends among the villagers; on the contrary, being of irritable and revengeful nature, he was generally disliked. Three times he had set on fire the houses of men who had shown him enmity. He was arrested, tried, and sentenced to death by shooting.

The district of Adabazar, within one hundred miles of Constantinople, is in a sorry plight, owing to the lawless proceedings of the Circassian colonists, of whom there are about forty thousand, against about seventeen thousand other residents. Circassians infest the roads and rob all who venture out. The fields are deserted, for no man can use cattle in a field for three hours without drawing down upon him a mob. Flocks and herds still browse on the hillsides, but they all belong to the Circassians, and no one dares to claim any of the animals as stolen property. The houses in the town of Adabazar are barricaded, but the Circassians send nightly storming parties to force the barricades. The bazaar is closed. Trade is impossible, as Circassians dog the steps of buyers and sellers and cast ominous glances at the cash boxes of the merchants.

THE TUILERIES.—THE HISTORIC PILE TO BE DEMOLISHED.

A recent dispatch from Paris reports that the bill to demolish the ruins of the Tuileries has passed the Chamber of Deputies, and has been referred by the Senate to a special committee. The ups and downs of this old building are so interwoven with dramatic episodes in French history as to give this action of the popular branch of the French Legislature a peculiar significance. The original palace was built by Catharine de Medici in 1564. Additions were made by Henry IV., Louis XIII., and Louis XIV. The work was taken up by Napoleon I. in 1808, who began the northern gallery. This was completed by Napoleon III., and during the second empire the Tuileries, with the Louvre, formed a connected building, including the Place du Carrousel. The building has an imposing front and a magnificent interior, and was one of the finest palaces in Europe. The palace was used as a royal residence until the court removed to Versailles in 1672. For over 100 years no French king lived in the Tuileries, but in 1789 the people decreed that Louis XVI should remove thither. Three years later the mob stormed the building, murdered the guards, and took possession. During the consulate and the first empire the palace was the residence of Napoleon Bonaparte, and was occupied by the Bourbons after the restoration. In July, 1830, it was again sacked by the mob, and for a third time in 1848. Napoleon III. made it his residence, and greatly improved it. On the 4th day of September, 1870, or after the fall of Metz, the Paris mob again invaded the gardens of the Tuileries. The Empress Eugenie was alone with a few attendants, and it seemed that she could not escape. At this moment a man now prominently before the world came to the rescue. This was Ferdinand de Lesseps, the builder of the Suez canal. He informed the Empress that all was lost, and going with her through the gallery of the Louvre, they left the palace as the guards at the garden entrance surrendered it to the troops of the newly-proclaimed republic. In May, 1871, the Communists, finding they could not hold the city against the government troops operating from Versailles, decided to burn all the public buildings. On the 23d they distributed cans of petroleum through the palace of the Tuileries, and that night fired it. The next morning they fired the Hotel de Ville, the Palais Royal, and other public and private buildings. A week of carnage followed, and then Paris was in possession of the government troops. The gardens of the Tuileries have been restored, and many of the public buildings have been or are being rebuilt. The palace so long the residence of French sovereigns remains as the fire left it, and the action of the Legislature signifies that it will not be rebuilt.

POETRY.

[National Baptist.]

"For My Sake."

Three little words, but full of tenderest meaning;
Three little words the heart can scarcely hold;
Three little words, but on their import dwelling,
What wealth of love those syllables unfold!

"For My sake" cheer the suffering, help the needy.
On earth this was My work, I give it thee;
If thou wouldst follow in thy Master's footsteps,
Take up My cross, and come and learn of Me.

"For My sake" let the little ones be tended,
All that I gave unto thee safely keep;
I took them in My arms, received, and blessed them,
Do now the same for Me, "Feed now My sheep."

"For My sake" let the harsh word die unuttered,
That trembles on the swift, impetuous tongue;
"For My sake" check the quick, rebellious feeling
That rises when thy brother does thee wrong.

"For My sake" ever press with patience onward,
Although the race be hard, the battle long;
Within My Father's house are many mansions,
There thou shalt rest and join the victor's song.

And if in coming days the world revile thee,
If "for My sake" thou suffer pain and loss,
Bear on, faint heart, thy Master went before thee,
They only wear His crown who share His cross.

O Thou, dear Lord, who walked on earth incarnate,
Fain would we follow, but we fear to fall;
Lo! at Thy feet we bend, Thy aid imploring,
Our only plea that "For Thy sake" we call.

The Church and the World, and Coming Events.

The Prophetic Future of the Last Days—Present Retributive Judgments upon the Church of Rome—Mohammedanism's Doom in 1882—Symptoms of the Crisis—The Coming Antichrist—The Three Evil Spirits—The Elect to be Translated before the Full Violence of the Last Fiery Trial.

In 2 Timothy iii. 1 we have a portrait drawn of the last days to which our own times have a striking resemblance: "In the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, implacable, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

Spiritualism and necromancy too are mentioned. "As Jannes and Jambres (the magicians) withstood Moses, so these resist the truth." Comp. Mal. iii. 5; Rev. xxi. 8: "sorcerers." Much the same sins are attributed in Rom. i. 29, etc., to the heathen. So that it is a relapse to heathenism with its beastlike propensities. Thus the hotbed is being prepared for the manifestation of the beast—the reintroduction of these infidel elements under the coming last open Antichrist—the worst form of the beast.

The instrument of the church's sin becomes the instrument of the church's punishment. The beast will turn upon the harlot who sat upon it, "hates her, and with its ten horns makes her desolate and naked, eats her flesh, and burns her with fire." This is just what the Romish Church has suffered within these last few years throughout the European continent. The world-powers—France, Italy, Austria, Spain, and Germany, upon which she formerly leaned, and which she spiritually ruled—have one and all turned against her, and stripped her of her temporal possessions. This answers to the Greek of Rev. xvii. 16: "They shall eat her masses of flesh"—i. e., her carnalities.

Compare Rev. xvii. 1, 15: "The great harlot sitteth upon many waters. The waters which thou sawest, where the harlot sitteth, are peoples and multitudes, and nations and tongues." The drying up of the Euphrates, on which Babylon was situated, has a double and synchronous fulfilment.

Mohammed was in his cave, A. D. 606–610. His Hegira flight from Mecca to Medina was 622; 1260 years added will bring us to 1882 as the fall of the Turks, the successors of the Saracens, the scourge of the idols of gold, silver, and brass, etc., sent as apostate Christendom from the region of the Euphrates (Rev. ix. 13-20).

Thereby the way is being made, before our eyes, for the return of the Jews, "the kings of (Greek from) the East," to their own land, as God hath promised; just as originally Cyrus's drying up of the Euphrates' channel opened the way into Babylon, and so opened to the Jews (Jehovah's kingpriests, Ex. xix. 6) the return from Babylon (Isa. x. 26; xi. 11-16. See Zech. x. 9-11).

At the same time, A. D. 606, the Emperor Phocas confirmed Justinian's grant of headship to the Pope and gave Boniface the new title of Universal Bishop; 1260 added to this brings us to our times, when the waters of mystical Euphrates, the world-resources of the beast power, and being withdrawn from the mystical Babylon, the harlot or apostate church, that the way may be prepared for Christ's transfigured saints returning from the East, to reign as kingpriests with him (Isa. xl. 3; Ez. xliii. 2 Zech. xiv. 4, 5; Rev. i. 6; xix. 8, 13, 14). Babylon must fall, that Jerusalem, literal and spiritual, may rise. "The kings of the earth" (Rev. xvi. 14) shall be superseded by the Lord from heaven and "the kings of (from) the East" with him (Ez. xxi. 27).

So far the prophecy is fulfilled to the letter. It only remains that the world-power should burn the apostate church with fire. What this exactly shall be remains to be seen. Even the professing evangelical churches, so far as they contain Babylonian elements, shall share in Babylon's doom. The church going after the world, as if it were the reality, instead of witnessing against its godliness, is false to her profession. So the world, which for a time used her to further its ends, and to sanction its carnality, whilst all the while hating Christ's unworldly religion, at last will execute God's wrath upon her, as an unreality whose sanction it can dispense with, and whose aid it no longer cares for.

Already symtoms appear of the crisis, when the world will rid itself of the nominal profession of Christianity, which it never really relished. So entirely void of reality was the world-powers' profession of Christianity that in Dan. vii. 7, 8 no notice is taken of that profession; but from the fourth form of the world-kingdom emanates the blasphemous "little horn," the haughty opponent of God, and persecutor of the saints. The men of worldly science are more and more casting doubts on the revelation of God and denying the exclusive claims of Christianity to rule the conscience and the life.

Socialism (another form of worldliness), infidelity, and false spiritualism are the "three unclean spirits" from the mouth of the beast, the dragon, and the false prophet respectively, preparing the way for the suppression of the apostate church, and the developments of the beast (Rev. xvi. 13, 14). Our Lord asks, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke xviii. 8.

The second beast or false prophet (Rev. xvi. 13) out of the earth (society-consolidated and civilized, as opposed to "the sea," yet still of earth, earthy), and the bottomless pit (xi. 7; xiii. 11; xvi. 13; xvii. 8; xix. 20; xx. 10) is the coming individual antichrist, with "horns like a lamb," feigning the Lamb of God, and "doing great wonders," as Paul's "adversary" (2 Thess. ii. 9) does. As champion of the "apostasy," or first beast, he will breathe life into its decrepitude, and combine in himself forces heretofore mercifully kept distinct—infidelity and superstition, against religion, liberty, and law.

Our times seem ripening for this unholy alliance. Rationalism, Romanism, or its successor, Spiritualism, and lawless liberalism, are the three evil spirits which "gather the kings of the whole world together to the battle (Greek war) of that great day of God Almighty." The battle field is named Armageddon—i. e., the hill of Megiddo, the scene of Josiah's defeat and death, because he came down from his spiritual elevation to join in the world's quarrels as ally of Babylon: a warning to the Church. As the world has seen a pagan and a Papal persecution, so it shall witness an infidel persecution under the little horn of the fourth kingdom, along with the little horn of the third (Dan. vii. 25; xi. 31; xii. 1; Rev. xii. 16-17).

The Papacy has probably a last phase, in which, having lost its temporal possessions, it will not scruple to go forth as a spiritual power, leagued itself with democratic anarchy (the last development of the beast) to subvert society; for the false prophet succeeds the harlot. Then after rocking the social fabric to its basis, its kingdom, and that of the beast, shall perish in the one last vast downfall (Rev. xvi. 18–15; xix. 9, 19, 20). The fourth kingdom's little horn, as a polity (Dan. vii), will probably culminate in the little horn representing the beast, as an individual with the eyes of a man (unsanctified intellect), and a mouth speaking great things.

Brethren, these are solemn realities. The part of the prophecy, so far fulfilled, is a pledge that the rest shall follow. Blessed be God, the darkest night shall be short, and shall usher in the brightest day, and that the everlasting day.

The reign of Satan is great, but his time is short. The kingdom of the beast continues but "a short space." From the moment of its full manifestation, after the judgment on the apostate Church, he is doomed to perish, and is therefore called "the son of perdition."

The saints shall escape the full violence of the last fiery trial, and of the judgment to be inflicted, first on the papacy, then, after the beast's brief reign, on antichrist; for it is just after the seduction of "the kings of the earth to the war of that great day of the Lord God Almighty," by the three unclean spirits, and directly before their being gathered into Armageddon, that the Lord marks the time of his translating his elect by saying, "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame" (Rev. xvi. 14-16).

When the hearts of worldlings are failing for fear, in looking after those things which are coming on the earth, believers can look up and lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh (Luke xxi. 26, 28). Meanwhile, let us, by the cross of Christ, be crucified to the world, and have the world crucified unto us, that so we "may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man" (Luke xxi. 36).

The dead in Christ shall rise first. Their resurrection is "the first resurrection." "The rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are finished." The language is unmistakably clear. None but the saints share in the resurrection which precedes the thousand years. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

It is the appointed reward of suffering with Christ on earth that we should reign with Christ over the earth. "If we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer we shall also reign with him." Reigning with Christ will be the peculiar privilege of those now suffering with Christ.—Rev. A. Fausset, Rector of St. Cuthbert's, York, England.

Life:—A Meditation.

"To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, God will render eternal life."

O, give me immortality! Thou Holy One, the only immortal in the universe, be pleased to give me eternal life! Do not, I beseech thee, shut me out from the study of thy wonderful works and ways, in which I take such unspeakable delight now. Deprive me not of the holy luxury of thinking about Thyself, O Father! This is such a vast theme of ever widening wonder, that I crave time to continue my reverent researches; but the time I need for this cannot be found in the transient years of mortals—I want eternity!

I have often been overwhelmed by the splendor of thy revealed character, O glorious God! The depth, and height, and length, and breadth thereof, present such oceans, and firmaments, and continents of moral and mental wonder, that I am lost in astonishment, and sink upon my knees in silent worship—silent from the power of emotion, for speech is not needed if it were possible, and not possible if it were needed.

But at such times, O most Blessed! though lost in adoring wonder, I am perfectly conscious that mine is but the gaze of a child upon the mysteries of the alphabet which he will in due time find the key to the history and literature of the world; or that of a traveler who for the first time, after leaving his native shores, sees the wonders of creation in distant regions of the earth. Notwithstanding all the limitations, moral, mental, and physical that surround me, I know that what I know of Thee is infinitely less than can be known; therefore I implore Thee to bestow upon me the gift of eternal life in Christ that I may have time to think about Thee unhindered by the limitations that circumscribe my vision now. Why, O heart Searcher! Thou knowest that the very thought of dying and being no more for ever is agony to me! Who says that death is not a sufficient penalty for sin? No man who knows what he is speaking about. To die without hope of resurrection to eternal life is terrible! To lose for ever the possibility of loving Thee, and rejoicing in holy meditation over the perfections of Thy character—O gracious Father, remove from before my mind this most dismal vision! I cannot bear it! An end to worship, an end to praise, an end to love—the heart no more to leap at the name of Jesus, the lips and heart, too, no more to call God Father, O forbid that this dire calamity, this drying up of all joy, this withering of all beauty, this destruction of all bliss should be my sorrowful lot!

Tell me not that if it be so I shall be ignorant of it—my being having ceased—and that, therefore, it cannot pain me; as there will be no "me" in existence to feel the privation and mourn over the loss. And call ye this comfort? Why it is the very essence of the pain, the poison in the cup, the sharp point of the lance that pierces the heart. The thought of such a possibility creates the anguish that seems to blot the sunlight from creation, or to read like a summons to attend the funeral of the universe.

"But who are you," some great one asks, "that put such eager questions? What will it matter if you should never live again?"

I reply, in all sincerity, that I feel myself "less than the least of all saints," and that I am quite conscious that should I disappear for ever, I would no more be missed from the grand assemblies of the glorified than a dewdrop is missed from an American prairie. But I submit that this is not the question. The unit, utterly insignificant by itself, is essential to the aggregate. The multitude that no man can number will unquestionably be composed of individuals, not one of whom had much to boast of about himself in the days of his mortal journey. But the "Ego" is a moral force, the personality is a power that will assert itself in spite of conscious infirmities. The fact that I am one of a multitude does not destroy my sense of individuality. I can love, and trust, and worship the ever living and glorious God; I know that I do love, and trust, and worship this ineffably holy Being; and I ask him, should the exercise of these faculties be interrupted for a season, to revive and renew them in resurrection that I may resume my conscious fellowship with him after the sleep of death, as I resume the duties of life in the morning after the sleep of night. To have this power of loving, trusting, and worshipping the Father of my beloved Redeemer, and my blessed Father in him, arrested and paralyzed for ever, is the awful calamity I deprecate; and, therefore, with all eagerness I seek for immortality!

Moreover, I am no stranger to sorrow. I have known griefs of many kinds, and have been told that such chastening is useful for the formation and development of character; that discipline is a necessary part of Christian education; and that as the refiner has tests for the precious metals, so he who is the great Purifier, and whose work it is to gather gems for his Father's casket, makes use of affliction for the purpose of producing the fruits of righteousness. But if I am not to receive the gift of eternal life, I may, with all reverence, ask whether I might not have been spared the painful discipline through which I have gone, and the heart-aches that have sometimes made life a burden? What real advantage have I gained from these sorrowful experiences if there is to be no after harvest of a noble character, no opportunity of bearing ripe fruit, from seed sown in tears, to the glory of the Divine Husbandman? I cannot think that the present result of the chastening is a sufficient explanation of its necessity, if mortal life be all that I am to have, for that result is at once imperfect in character and fleeting in duration. Let me suppose now that I am a Christian in whose life the fruits of the spirit are distinctly and habitually visible. My gratitude to God for that evidence that I belong to Christ is simply unspeakable. But I am, alas! painfully conscious of human blight upon the fruit, and if when the last mortal breath expires, my history is forever closed, it appears to me beyond controversy that in my case the Redeemer has not seen the full reward of his redeeming love. I want him to be adequately rewarded for his marvelous kindness, and therefore I pray for immortality.

And to my mind there is another powerful argument, not to mention incidental and inferior ones, which justifies the holy ambition that seeks for imperishable—or incorruptible—glory and honor. I mean the relative or mutual argument, that, namely, which arises from my connection with other believers, members of the body of Christ. The love of the brethren is an evidence of sonship. I know that I love the followers of Christ; I delight in their company, they are my chosen friends, without reference to theological opinion or ecclesiastical party. Sometimes in the company of a few Christians, as such, assembled for fellowship, I have had a feeling of peace, and love, and homeness—to coin a word—which was very precious. The action upon our hearts of mutual sympathy in relation to the work and character of our adorable Lord, and our desire to glorify him, was like the fire upon the altar glowing with the light of the Shekinah. Well! must this heavenly experience—the undoubted result of the Holy Spirit's presence—have an renewal hereafter, but pass away forever with this mortal body? Must I give up the cherished belief that these gleams of holy light and brotherly love were only herald angels of the glorious day of reunion in resurrection when our joy will be full? I cannot, and will not give up that belief! The Father could not use me so. I want to meet his sons and daughters again when mortality shall be swallowed up of life, and therefore I seek the great gift of which such splendid things are spoken in the New Testament—the gift of immortality!—Wm. Leask, D. D., Editor Rainbow.

"PREACHING FOR A CROWN."

Howell Davies, walking one Sunday morning to preach, was accosted by a clergyman on horseback, who was bound on the same errand, and who complained of the unprofitable drudgery of his profession, saying that he could never get more than half a guinea for preaching. The Welshman replied that he for his part was content to preach for a crown. This so offended the other, that he upbraided the pedestrian for disgracing his cloth. "Perhaps," said Davies, "you will hold me still cheaper when I inform you that I am going nine miles to preach, and have only sevenpence in my pocket to bear my expense out and in. But the crown for which I preach is the crown of glory."

DIED.

HARROLD—June 15, 1881, at the residence of her parents, near Fayetville, Mo., of catarrh and female diseases, Sister Cinda R. Harrold, aged twenty-eight years, nine months and seventeen days.

Our sister was a firm sufferer in the precious coming king. It was hard to give her up, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we believe that Jesus died and rose again, and all that sleep in Jesus God will bring with him. But how long, O Lord, will it be that the tyrant reign triumphant over the just. But how near and how happy will be the day when thy elect will be gathered home where there will be no more parting, where we will all be clothed in immortal beauty. The conqueror's crown we then shall wear, and psalms of victory we shall hear.

Sleep on, dear sister, and take thy rest
With thy head laid on thy Savior's breast;
We loved thee well but Jesus loves thee best.
Good by.

Calm is thy slumber as an infant's asleep,
But thou shalt wake no more to toil and weep;
Thine is a perfect rest, secure and deep.
Good by.

Until the eastern glory lights the skies,
Until the dead in Jesus shall arise,
And he shall come not in lowly guise,
Good by.

Until made beautiful by love divine,
Thou to the likeness of thy Lord shalt shine,
And he shall bring that golden crown of thine,
Good by.

Only good by, dear sister, not farewell,
A little while and all his saints shall dwell
In hallowed union inviolate
Good by.

Until we meet before his throne
Clothed in the spotless robes he gave his own,
Until we know even as we are known,
Good by.

Explevitt, Mo. MRS. DR. L. HICKMAN.

POETRY.

Nature's Hymn.

Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord.—Ps. cl. 6.

Praise Him, O praise Him, ye ministering Seraphim!
Praise ye Jehovah, enthroned on high;
Awake every harp, ye archangels and tell of His
Shrouded in glory, yet graciously nigh.

Praise Him, bright Sun, in the glow of thy splendor;
Praise Him, thou Moon, silver queen of the night;
Ye Stars, who like virgin retainers attend her,
O praise the great Lord who hath robed you with light!

Praise Him, O praise Him, ye soft-flowing fountains,
Amid the lone valleys go murmur your song!
Uplift the loud anthem, ye thunder-voiced mountains,
Let peak answer peak and re-echo the song.

Ye forests—ye need no cathedral of marble,
No Thurifer's censer to perfume your shrine;
Your own winged choirs will His praises best warble,
Your woodland flowers scatter sweet incense divine!

Praise Him, ye mists which on mountain-tops hoary,
Like white wings of cherub the rock-clefts infold;
Praise Him, ye sunset-clouds, piled up in your glory,
Resplendent with amber, vermillion, and gold.

Praise Him, O praise Him, ye deeps with your wonders,
Discourse of His glory to earth's farthest shore;
In lullaby ripples, in hoarse-booming thunders,
In stillness and storm, lend your voices and adore!

All Nature arise! the great anthem intoning;
And from your vast storehouse a tribute lay bring;
No voice can be silent, let all join in owning
Jehovah as Maker, Redeemer, and King!

The Second Death—Upon Whom It Will Pass.—No. 2.

G. M. MYERS.

Having shown in my preceding article that the "Second Death" of Revelation will not pass upon the righteous dead, will not pass upon the righteous who are living when the Master comes, that the wicked dead will not be raised to life, and therefore cannot die the second time, it now only remains to show what the second death is, and upon whom it is to be visited.

But, before I proceed to this task let me suggest that it might be about as easy to have a second death without some one dying twice as it would be to have a second resurrection without some one being raised twice. The Revelator speaks of "the first resurrection," and it is, therefore, supposed that there will, at some subsequent period, be another; but no one ever concludes that some one must be raised twice, but a second installment, a second band or company. Then why not a second death without some one in it who had died once before?

But, the term "second death," like many other phrases found in the bible, is peculiar to the Jews. Therefore to the better understanding of the phrase as it occurs in the book of Revelation let us refer to its use by the Jews:

1. Pirk R. Eliezer, c. 34, commenting on Exod. xix. 12, says: "Every idolater, who says that there is another God besides me I will slay with the second death from which no man can come to life again."

2. Julius Africanus, A. D. 221, says: "That Adam being one hundred and thirty years old begat Seth; and living thereafter eight hundred years he died, to-wit: the second death."

This gives us a key to the former expression as to what death is referred to, as also light upon the expression as it occurs in Revelation. The language is significant. It is not, is dying the second death, nor will hereafter die the second death, but the act is by this writer put in the past tense. But again,

3. Jalkut Rewbeni, vol. 124, s. 1, says: "Every thief, or robber of his neighbor's goods, shall fall by his iniquities, that he may die the second death." Of this text, in v. 188, s. 4, he says: "We learn from this place, Num. xiv. 37, that they died the second death." Notice, not a future, but a past act.

4. Again in vol. 141, s. 1, the same writer says: "Because he (Cain) was doubly guilty, he was slain with a two-fold death—the latter far more severe than the former." Not a work of the future by a resurrection and another death; but, "was slain" in the past tense.

5. The Targum on Isaiah lxvi. 6: "Behold, this is written before me, I will not give them long life, until I have taken vengeance for their sins; and I will give their glory (soul) to the second death."

6. The same on Jer. li. 39: "They shall die the second death, and shall not live in the world to come, saith the Lord."

7. The same on Jer. li. 57: "They shall die the second death, so as not to enter into the world to come." Notice, by this writer the second death by reason of its visitation, is made the reason why they would not enter into the world to come. Therefore he did not understand that there would at the end of the thousand years be to these parties a resurrection and then the second death.

Professor Hudson, from whom we have quoted these examples, further remarks: "These examples plainly warrant the remark of Hammond on the phrase 'second death,' that 'it seems to be taken from the Jews, who use it proverbially for final, utter, irreversible destruction. It seems to denote such a death from which there is no release.' And according to this notion of it, as it reflects fitly on the first death, (which is a destruction, but such as is reparable by a reviving or resurrection, but this past hopes and exclusive of that,) so will all the several places wherein it is used clearly interpreted. And though in these different matters some difference there must needs be in the significations, yet in all of them the notion of utter destruction, final, irreparable exclusion may very properly be retained and applied to each of them."

Prof. H. further says: "The similar phrase in Jude, verse 12, 'twice dead,' if explained by the following words, 'plucked up by the roots,' clearly denotes an utter destruction. The tree that has been cut down, may grow again; the tree that has been uprooted, never."

Possibly Paul had the same thought before his mind when writing of certain parties, he says: "If they shall fall away it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame." And again, "If they sin willfully after that they have received the knowledge of the truth, there remains no more sacrifice for sins." Heb. vi. 6; x. 26.

With these quotations before us, and the work of the second death as set forth in them as a matter of the past it is easy to see that the Jews understood the phrase as denoting, not a resurrection and a dying a second time, but a death from which there was no relief. This was the idea of many of the Pharisees (though not all) as to a revival from the dead. See Antiquities of Josephus B. 18, C. 1, Sec. 3. "They also believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them and that under the earth, there will be rewards and punishments according as they have lived virtuously or viciously in this life; and the latter are to be detained in everlasting prison, but that the former shall have power to revive and live again."

It is to be remembered further that the Jews never believed in a resurrection of the Gentiles from the dead in any sense.

Again, with these quotations before us, their placal of the act of the second death, of which they speak, in the past, together with the faith of the Jews in general, it is easy to see that the second death as spoken of by the Revelator, is not a death to be pronounced upon a resurrected party, but a death from which there is to be no relief pronounced upon some one else. A few quotations and remarks now will be sufficient to show who they are.

1. In the next age "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die a hundred years old; but the sinner being a hundred years old shall be accursed." Isa. lxv. 20.

2. Of Israel, in that age it is written: "And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhoring unto all flesh." Isa. lxvi. 24.

3. When the Lord watches over Israel to plant and to build as he has watched over them in the past to pull down, "In those days they shall say no more, the fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. But every one shall die for his own iniquity." Jer. xxxi. 27-30.

4. The symbolical beast, false prophet, Babylon, the dragon all to be judged, and "the treading of the wine press," all show that death will yet be visited upon mortals during the millennial age.

5. And last, when the thousand years are completed and the little season begins, then opposition further will be offered by an army that is to be gathered up from the northern hosts. This army will take about one in every five or six from the districts from which it is gathered, which is about the ratio of the warriors to the population in all nations. The remainder will remain at home as aiders and sympathizers when the army goes forth to battle. And when the army is devoured, as will be the case, then these sympathizers as the last enemies to the kingdom will be judged; the old and the young, the small and the great.

It is to be remembered that the book of Revelation is largely symbolical. It speaks of John standing upon the sand of the sea, of a beast rising up out of the sea, chap. xiii. 1. Of a burning mountain cast into the sea, chap. viii. 8, all of which sea is symbolical. It speaks of the waters upon which the woman sitteth as peoples and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. Chap. xvii. 1, 15. Of there being no more sea, in the beyond, chap. xxi. 1, and yet literal sea where the river and tree of life is in both the millennial age and beyond. Zech. xiv. 8; Ezek. xlvii. 10, 11. It speaks then of the sea giving up the dead. This, too, must be symbolical sea, and spoken of that sympathizing host of which we above spoke, dead by the figure of prolepsis. When cast into the lake they die the second death, or as the Jews understood of the second death, a death from which there is no relief. We have not space to examine all of the occurrences of the phrase second death used by the Revelator, but we have here laid a foundation by which all may be easily explained. It is a death from which there is no relief, which all the fearful, the unbelievers, the abominable, the murders, the idolaters, sorcerers and all liars will die, and from which the resurrected and immortalized saints will be free on account of his character and nature. We might stop now at the point to which we have arrived and consider our task ended in harmony with the general tenor of Scripture, and that, too, we think to the general satisfaction of all, were it not for a few seemingly opposing Scriptures. These we will notice briefly as we have not space to examine at large. We will begin by calling attention to the one standing in close proximity to the text of which we have been writing:

1. "But the rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are finished." Rev. xx. 5.

Question: Who are these? The general answer is, the wicked dead who were not included in the first resurrection. But we should not be too hasty. Let us look a little further before we draw our conclusion. Then, to chronicle and enumerate a few points as set forth of the future we see,

1. That when Gentile times is ended, the fulness of the Gentiles is come in, then Jesus returns to earth. See Rom. xi. 25, 26; Acts xv. 13-17; Luke xxi. 24.

2. Next we have the open, visible coming to the world, see Jude xiv. 15; Zech. xiv. 5, and between these two events the signs as set forth in Luke xxi. 25, 26.

3. Following the open, visible coming is the sealing of the 144,000 from Israel. Rev. vii. 1-8.

4. Then following this event is the 144,000 sealed ones from Israel standing upon Zion and harping to the Lamb and the four beasts and twenty-four elders which symbolize Christ and the saints (chap. v. 6-10,) Rev. xiv. 1-5.

5. Then appears the first angel's message with the everlasting (age lasting) gospel. Chap. xiv. 6, 7.

6. Next the second angel's message pronouncing judgment upon Babylon.

7. Then the third angel's message pronouncing judgment upon the beast. Chap. xiv. 9-11. Now, notice by reading closely this work described under the second and third angel's message is the same as described in chap. xix. 11-21, where the false prophet and the beast are taken and are given to the burning flame, or cast into the lake. Of the saints that are at that time, John says, chap. xiv. 12: "Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." In chap. xx. 4, he says that they were resurrected, sat upon thrones, wore crowns and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

8. Next event, in chap. xiv. 13. He "heard a voice from heaven saying unto me write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from hence-forth; yea saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Of this class, in chap. xx. 5, he writes: "But the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years are finished." Who, then, are the rest of the dead? Answer: They that die in the Lord of chap. xiv. 13. The phrase, the rest of the dead, may be restricted and made to apply to these saints who, from that time forward die in the Lord, as the phrase the dead in 1 Cor. xv. 35, applies only to the righteous as seen in chap. v. 43-54.

2. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Dan xii. 2. Of this text, 1. It views all the dead as one class. 2. The phrase "many of" separates the sleepers into two classes. 3. It predicates the act of awaking of the class included in the "many of," but not of the others. 4. It predicates everlasting life of the "many of," but shame and contempt of the unawakened. That this explanation is justified by a correct and critical rendering of the text no one who has examined it will deny. It is sustained by such men as Gesenius, Wigram, Whiting, the Tafels in their Hebrew interlinear, and many more we might mention.

3. Next in importance appears to be John v. 25-29: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man. Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." This is regarded as the strongest text in all the Scriptures as teaching a universal resurrection, and is ever quoted by every one who talks of a resurrection of all mankind. The main question to be brought forward relative to this is, does it teach a literal, or a figurative resurrection? Upon the hypothesis that it teaches a literal resurrection, that it does not teach a universal resurrection is apparent,

1. From the consideration that the expression "and they that hear shall live," in verse 25, denotes partiality. That there is a class that do not hear, and therefore do not live.

2. From the consideration of the phrases in verse 29, "they that have done good," and "they that have done evil." These phrases show that the coming forth is confined to those only who have acted in the matter. This will exclude the heathen who have not acted religiously. The word "all," of verse 28, though a universal term, cannot include more than are in these phrases "they that have done good" and "they that have done evil."

But we have remarked, that the main question here is, does this Scripture teach a literal or a figurative resurrection? This question must be settled by the context. Then verse 24 reads: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." Of this text there are a few points to be noticed which serve as a key to the whole paragraph reaching to the close of verse 29.

1. There are parties brought to view who were dead, and, consequently, were in the death state.

2. These parties are made to hear and believe.

3. A transition state then obtains by, or in consequence of hearing and believing.

4. This transition or passing brings them into life from the death in which they had been. These are exactly the thoughts brought to view again in verse 25.

1. The dead, as in verse 24.

2. They hear the voice of the Son of God.

3. They that hear, in the sense of believe, in verse 24.

4. Pass into life, as in verse 24

Next, in verses 28, 29, the same thoughts are again brought out, but in a different wording.

1. The graves—the receptacle of the dead—is put for the dead as in verses 24, 25.

2. They are made to hear the voice of the Son of Man as in verses 24, 25.

3. They do good, or bad—believe or the reverse—disbelieve, as in verses 24, 25.

4. Those that do good, hear, in the sense of believeth my (Jesus) words have a resurrection—a transition—pass into life as in verses 24, 25; while those that do bad, do not hear in the sense of believe as in verse 24, have a resurrection—transition—pass into condemnation. This party passes into condemnation while the other does not, as is seen in verse 24. All, in the sense of many, are called forth—called upon to hear the gospel. In the gospel as it has two parts and two kings to be used, also has two Saviors, One is life, the other is death. To the one who comes forth to its proclamation and does good—believes it, it is a savior of life unto life to him, and to the one who comes forth to its proclamation and does bad—disbelieves it, it is a savior of death unto his condemnation—death. Further, that the belief or rejection of the gospel when persons are brought forth to hear, is made a turning point to them. See John iii. 16-21.

4. Then follows in importance, Acts xxiv. 15: "And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there will be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."

Of this text a distinguished writer says: "The idea of the apostle is clearly this: the Jews by holding to a resurrection of both classes, in fact, admitted of Paul's hope, which hope embraced only the just. The Jews' doctrine covered Paul's ground, but went beyond it. Inasmuch, therefore, as the whole includes the parts, the Jews allowed what Paul contended for, and thus proved their complaint against him to be groundless." This extract expresses exactly the point. It is easy to be seen from all of Paul's writings that he only allowed, or more properly rendered, expected a resurrection of one class. Hear him, Rom. vi. 5: "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his (Christ's) death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection." Here is a condition set forth as a basis of a resurrection. Rom. viii. 11, "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you." A condition again as a basis of resurrection. Phil. iii. 8-11: "Yea doubtless, and I count all things but lost. . . . That I may know him and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; (why?) if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of (from among) the dead." 1 Cor. x. 35: "But some men will say how are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" Paul's answer is

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a Scriptural belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

A Change of Government in the World.--Part 2.

God is never at a loss to accomplish his purpose. The Russian and Turkish war has turned the eyes of the church toward the country which God promised to Abraham for an everlasting possession, which will be the center of the fifth universal empire. The changes of that country, have astonished the world. It is the place where paradise once existed, where the ruling power was first given to Adam, and God told him to "replenish the earth and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." Gen. i. 28. But he lost his first estate by rebellion, from which time Palestine has undergone its changes. Paradise faded away into oblivion, and man failed as a pure and holy governor. But this land is still remembered by Deity who "ruleth in the kingdoms of men."

When Abram left his father's house he came and dwelt in this land, and God promised to make him a great nation while as yet he had no child. "And Abram passed through the land. And the Canaanite was then in the land. And the Lord appeared unto Abram and said, unto "thy seed will I give this land." Gen. xii. 6-7. Here is a promise of a change of government. "He saith not. And to seeds, as of many; but as of one. And to thy seed which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16. Here we have the king of the fifth empire, of which we shall speak hereafter.

Now the name of Abram was changed to that of Abraham. God said, "for a father of many nations have I made thee. And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee." Gen. xvii. 5-6. He then became the father of Isaac, and Isaac of Jacob, and Jacob of the twelve patriarchs. "And the patriarchs moved with envy sold Joseph into Egypt, but God was with him." Acts vii. 9. Joseph came into power and prepared for the famine that came upon the land, and thus saved the families alive. But as they increased in numbers they were soon oppressed by the tyranny of the king of Egypt, then they were delivered by Moses (as their law-giver and king, under Jehovah,) through the wilderness.

But when Moses died, Caleb and Joshua became their leaders, and those that fell not in the wilderness, they brought safely into the promise land. Then they were governed by Judges for four hundred and fifty years, until the days of Samuel when the people desired a king. "They said to Samuel, make us a king to judge us like all the nations." This displeased Samuel, but the Lord said unto him, "they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them." 1 Sam. viii. 5, 7. By this we see the kingdom was now the Lord's. Their request was granted after Samuel had told them what a king would exact of them. He said, "this will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: He will take your sons and appoint them for himself, for his chariots, and to be his horsemen, and some shall run before his chariots," and so on. Read 1 Sam. viii. 10-15.

Saul then was chosen to be king over the people of Israel. He was anointed by Samuel. Thus he became the Lord's anointed. But the Lord reserved the right to set upon the throne or to cast down whom he would. The kingdom and throne belonged to him, and although the people had kings like other nations to go in and out before them, yet only by permission of the Lord their God. These kings were only to rule in subjection to his authority. Hence we find that when Saul, the first king, ventured to disobey the commandment of God he lost his favor and the kingdom. Read 1 Sam. xv. And because of his disobedience the Lord rejected him. The Lord rent the kingdom from him and gave it to David the Son of Jesse, and though David was persecuted by Saul, yet when he was placed upon the throne he obeyed the commandments of the Lord and did all his will. "So the Lord God made a covenant with him, that the throne and the kingdom of Israel should be established to him and his seed forever." This had respect to the immediate descendants of David in the first place, and it also embraced one in the distant future who should be just, "ruling in the fear of God." Psa. lxxxix.

The throne of David was established in Jerusalem, "the city of our God. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great king." Psa. xlviii. 3. But for all this the reign of David was not a peaceful reign, for he was a man of war, therefore, he could not build the temple. It was left for his son Solomon who succeeded him—a wise man whose reign was a reign of peace. David's charge to Solomon was (when he was about to die), "I go the way of all the earth; be thou strong, therefore, and show thyself a man, and keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies," &c. 1 Kings ii. 2-3. "So Solomon reigned king over all Israel," Chap. iv. 1. The following verses show the princes who reigned with him. "When Solomon had reigned forty years in Jerusalem over all Israel, he slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father: Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead." Chap. xi. 43. Whereupon the people of Israel promised him (on condition that he would relieve them of the heavy yoke of his father) to serve him, but after a consideration of the matter, he said, "I will add to your yoke; my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions." Chap. xii. 4-11. Hereupon the kingdom was divided into two kingdoms—the kingdom of Judea and the kingdom of Israel, and though the kingdom of Israel became lost to men, it is known to God.

The kingdom of Judea still existed till the birth of the Messiah, who came unto his own and his own received him not. But they said of him, "this is the heir let us kill him."

After this was the destruction of Jerusalem and the kingdom of Judea was a nation no longer. So the children of the kingdom were dispersed unto all nations of the earth, and became a "bias and a by word in all nations of the world."

But according to prophecy we can look forward to the time when the two nations shall become one again, and shall no more be two nations.

The late war between Russia and Turkey, is preparing the country for the change that is fast approaching. The Holy Land, "the city of the great king," which Jesus said should be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," Luke xxi. 24. This the barbarous Turks, the most degraded of Gentiles, have done. Now that land is being taken from them. The times of the Gentiles are fast running to a close, and then Israel comes into remembrance, Babylon falls, and Jerusalem rises. Here we see the force of Ezekiel's language, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 27. But before Jesus the Messiah comes to take possession of his kingdom we may look for a commotion throughout the nations.

Changes in government are produced by war. God does not convert the nations by the gospel, but by the sword. So we may look for a fulfillment very soon of Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix., when Gog shall come up to take the spoils, when the children of Israel shall be gathered in their own land and dwelling safely, then will Jesus the King come and save them.

Letter from England.

The debate between Edward Hine and R. Roberts is published. If (to use an Americanism) ever a man was "used up" in controversy, this man is Mr. Hine. I expected he would be confounded, but I did not expect such an exhibition of nonsense as appear in his speeches. Were you to read the debate, I think you would feel sorry for Mr. Hine. I felt so. And with all deference to him, I think I am only just in saying that not one speech of his merits the word argument. His answers to Roberts' questions are pitiable; many of them unworthy to be called answers. I think the advocates of "our Israelitish origin" will feel ashamed, and well they may.

When I read Wilson's work about thirty years since, I observed the absence of proof throughout. He was pleased with his notion. He wrote enthusiastically, but not convincingly, because his under-pinning was unsound.

For some time past, being convinced that the "origin" notion was erroneous, its propagation could only be pernicious, I so expressed my mind when I mailed you a pamphlet some months ago. Another exposure has appeared previous to the issue of The Debate, but this last eclipses all.

If any suppose that I mean to compliment R. Roberts by what I say, such are mistaken. I only speak the truth when I say that Bro. Roberts in the preface, in the debate itself, and in the rest of the pamphlet, is majestic in the exhibition of Bible truth. He is clear, mighty and overwhelming in his exposure of the absurdity and groundlessness of "Anglo-Israelism," which is a humbug throughout, and I find no fault with Roberts in calling it a craze.

No wonder that some in the public press have indulged in humor at Mr. Hine's expense. Intelligent, unbiased men, see the foolishness of the notion of Britons and Irish being Israelites. We are Gentiles as other nations are, French, Spanish, German, &c. &c.

Damage to a vast extent is already done to crops in both Britain and Ireland, by the absence of fine weather and devastation by floods. Manufacturing declines, but this is nothing new; ups and downs characterize this industry. The agricultural depression is more discouraging to the people. Such a fall in agricultural value as is now manifest, is without precedent in Britain's history. Landed property in this island has for generations been considered the surest of earthly wealth. The Times, "the Epic of the world," as it has been called, has had to tell the disspiriting truth, though it would rather have told of the nations prosperity. But the great journal must keep up its high repute as a matter of fact paper.

So far as I can learn there is less talk among the clergy about the world's conversion by preaching than there was a while ago. The Methodists, the most zealous and effective of all the large Protestant sects, do not impress the people as formerly. The Primitives, who especially have told on the rougher portion of the community, are adding but few, if any, to their numbers, and the Wesleyans have lost during the past conference year in by far the greater number of districts. It is gratifying to state that the Lord's coming is now and then more than merely alluded to by preachers. The darkening clouds on the nation, the unconcern of the people about religion, as well as the scepticism permeating society, and the apprehensions of trouble as the winter approaches, cause some to think "what of the night?" In fact some business men are appalled. And especially grevious is the situation of middle class families who are delicate about acquainting others with their actual condition. It is admitted that these will and do suffer the most acutely. I pray God to move the hearts of many who have the means, to relieve graciously those who endure privation rather than ask charity; but it is indeed charity to secretly relieve this class of sufferers.

The editor of the Christadelphian, residing in the populous town of Birmingham, says in the July number, "Trade bad, employment scare, a slow famine in the houses of multitudes, the weather deranged and unnatural," &c. Like words apply to many a town and city, and the editor is aware of this.

Now, Bro. C. I will quote from the Christadelphian some thing singular, and if you or any readers of THE RESTITUTION discern the proof that Bro. Rae and Bro. Roberts see in the occurrence noted, you and your readers perceive what I do not. Under the caption, "Restored Identy at the Resurrection," we read, "Brother Rae, late of Bristol, now of London, sends the following clipping from the Observer of September last: 'During a thunderstorm on Saturday afternoon, two laborers in the employ of Mr. Benslon, a farmer near Leek, were killed by lightning while reaping wheat. It is stated that on the breast of one of them is an impression of a sheaf of corn. A third man is so seriously injured that he is not likely to recover. Bro. Rae says he has been on the lookout for an occurrence of this sort ever since reading anastasis, wherein Dr. Thomas referred to the case of a man killed by lightning while sheltering under a tree, having the immage of the tree impressed on his body, as illustrating the principle on which the mental impressions of the present life are engraved on the new brain produced at the resurrection, resulting in the reproduction of identity. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, the character formed during probation is reproduced on new substance, and the result is the man that was before, recognized by himself and all who knew him.'"

For my part, Bro. C, I see more proof in the reproduction (but is not restoration a more truthful word?) of identity in the simple declaration of the inspired Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 42, "it is sown in corruption; it is raised in corruption," than in impressions made by lightning, &c., &c. Let divine teaching be our proof; we understand not how the great miracle of resurrection is wrought, but we believe it.

A friend kindly mailed me several numbers of The Bible Standard lately. In the May number there is a piece from Dr. Seiss's parable of the ten virgins, headed "Preparation for Christ's coming," which is too excellent to be left unread. Should you see the article perhaps you may view it important enough to be published in THE RESTITUTION.

The death of the Prince Imperial is one of those events which stir up the political world. Only last year he had a remarkable escape from death in Sweden, but he loses his life in Africa. French Imperialism in the minds of some has been stricken with a death blow. So it may be; but while your humble correspondent has his thoughts I will, for the present, refrain from uttering them.

Prov. xxii. 16. I am sure you have seen pieces in the American papers about the "rejected wreath." Poor Turnerelli! If he has not come to want, he has come to be a laughing stock to the world. I doubt if ever the caricaturists have had such a treat. The most sedate would laugh at some of the cuts in the windows. Had the "pennies" been dealt out to some thousands who need them, what blessings would have flowed from the bestowal! "Give to the poor," we are commanded. So let us do. But give to the rich? Never!

Thank God, since I began this letter there has been finer weather, and much of the hay has been secured.

Reformed Judaism.

Reformed Judaism like reformed Christianity, is one of those monstrous and daring innovations to which the infidelity of modern times has given birth. Both are the legitimate offspring of an impious desire to get rid of the solemn obligation and authority of Jehovah's plain word, and supplant it by "the doctrines and commandments of men," as Christ declared to the Scribes and Pharisees in Mark vii. 8, 10.

The subjoined statement of the "science of Judaism" from a learned Jew—Professor Adler of the reform school, is significant of the egregious folly and sin of the attempt to improve on God's wisdom by man's pleasures, and affords an apt illustration of the warning words of Jesus.

Allan B. Magruder.

REFORMED JUDAISM.

Ever since the appearance of Geiger's Scientific Journal, Jewish philology and Jewish theology have been inseparably connected. To attempt a detailed account of the latter would involve the necessity of frequent reference to the former, an attempt in which we can hardly assume the reader's interest would bear us out. Unwilling to test his patience by such a course, we shall content ourselves with stating the main principle of Reformed Judaism, and briefly indicating the successive steps by which it advanced to its present positions.

The one great fact which the Science of Judaism had indisputably established was the fact of evolution in the sphere of the Jewish religion. Each generation had legislated for itself. The authorities of the Middle Ages had introduced changes in the ritual; the Talmud itself, that corner stone of orthodoxy, was a stupendous innovation on the simplicity of the Bible religion. Applying the theory of evolution to their own case, the modern Rabbis assumed on their part the right to institute whatever changes the exigencies of the age had rendered imperative. The very fact of change, it is true, pre-supposes the existence of a substratum that remains unchangeable. What that substratum in the case of Judaism is claimed to be we shall presently discover. The measures of the Reformers were in the main dictated by the sentiment of patriotism and the desire to remove the barriers that interposed between them and their fellow-men. They would cease to be a "state within the state," cease to separate themselves from fellowship of the Gentiles. Hence the leading proposition upon which Reformed Judaism is founded. The Jewish people have ceased to be a national unit, and will exist hereafter as a confederation of religious societies.

If the Jews have ceased to be a nation, then the reformers must abandon the idea of a national restoration. They did so. If they have ceased to be a nation, they must give up the hope of a personal Messiah who should lead them back to the promised land. They did so. If they desired no longer to dwell in seclusion they must abolish the dietary laws, which forbid them to taste of the food of Christians, though commanded by the Talmud and founded apparently on the authority of Moses. This, too, they were willing to do. Other changes were inspired by the philosophic teachings of the day, and were undertaken with equal readiness. Thus the doctrine of resurrection in the flesh were set aside. The fabric of ceremonial observances had been rudely shaken, and soon gave way altogether. Changes in the ritual followed. The prayer book reflected the gloomy spirit of a people whose life was imbittered by constant trials and dangers. Naturally they had turned to the past and glories of Zion; the pomp of the sacrifices, the advent of the Messiah, the future restoration of the kingdom of David, were the themes on which they loved to dwell. All this was no longer suited to the temper of the modern Jews, and radical alterations became necessary. Many of the festivals and fast days also were struck from the calendar. One of the most distinctive customs of the Jews, the so called rite of Abraham's Covenant, was boldly attacked, and though the abolition of this ancient practice is still strenuously resisted, there is little doubt that it will ultimately go with the rest. Samuel Holdheim advocated the propriety of intermarriage between Jews and Christians.

The manner in which these conclusions were reached may be described as follows:—At first an attempt was made to found each new measure of Reform on the authority of the Talmud. The Talmud was attacked with its own weapons. The fallacy of such a method becoming apparent, the authority of the Talmud was entirely set aside. A return to the Bible was next in order. But even the laws of the Bible proved to be no longer capable of fulfillment in their totality. A distinction was therefore drawn between the letter and the spirit of the Bible. The letter is man's handiwork, the spirit alone ought to be regarded as the Divine rule of faith. The "spirit of the Bible" is the essence of Judaism, which cannot change. In the process of evolution it constantly assumes new forms, but remains substantially the same. Nor could any motives of expediency, nor could even the ardent desire of political emancipation have induced the Reformers to pursue the course they did, had they for one moment believed it contrary to the substantial teachings of the Bible. The spirit of the Bible is expressed in two fundamental propositions: the existence of one God, the author and governor of the universe; and the Messianic mission of the people Israel. The former is no longer the exclusive property of Judaism, the latter is distinctively its own; both together express the simple creed of Reformers.—Prof. Alder, in the North American Review.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Well spent days bring happy nights and glad morrows.

Keep clear of a man who does not value his own character.

Carry your cross on dry land, and it will carry you in deep waters.

He who follows the Lord fully, will find goodness and mercy following him.

As it is not putting on a gown that makes the scholar, but the inward habits of the mind, so it is not putting on an outward walk of profession that makes a Christian, but the inward grace of the heart.

COMING GLORY.

"Eye hath not seen; ear hath not heard."
The fairest landscapes eye hath seen,
The greenest dells and hills,
The freshest meadows, sweetest nooks,
The clearest brooks and rills,
Are only shadows, dim and faint,
Of what this earth will be
When curse is lifted from the soil
Of glad eternity.

Anon: Time is a commodity of which the value rises as long as we live.

Milton: Truth is as impossible to be soiled by the outward touch as the sunbeam.

It is a most mortifying reflection for any man to consider what he has done, compared with what he might have done.

Edward Bickersteth: The sweetest life is to be ever making sacrifices for Christ; the hardest life a man can lead on earth, the most full of misery, is to be always doing his own will and seeking to please himself.

"Judge thyself, O Christian, is it meet
To see thy heart on what begins set their feet?
'Tis no lay sabbote if you be told,
You digior dross with mattocks made of gold.
Affections are too costly to bestow
Upon the fair faced nothings here below.
The eagle seems to fall down from on high
(The proverb saith) to catch the silly fly,
And can a Christian leave the face of God,
To embrace the earth, or dote upon a clod?"

"What is whisky bringing?" asked a dealer in that article. "Bringing men to the gallows, and women and children to want," was the answer.

Most men never get thoroughly awake to the responsibilities of life and the possibilities of their own nature. What we want is the single eye that will see what our work is, the humility to accept it, however lowly, the faith to do it for God, the preserverance to go on till death. While we mistakenly sit still and wait for large opportunities and rip ned powers, the day slips away and the long night closes the scene.

Only one day then waste it not
In futile plannings where the Lord is not.
Only one day God gives to me
At once; oh, may I use it faithfully.

Isaac Williams: Our Lord, in his unbounded love, has taken great pains to teach us that death is to be considered but a sleep; that it is to be in our minds associated with sleep, and to be lightened and cheered by that association. By so often emphatically calling death a sleep, He has doubtless intended to alleviate and to strengthen our minds in faith in him, showing us thereby his desire that we should look on death as but a sleep, in ourselves and others.

EXTREMITIES.

When the mildew's blight we see
Over all the harvest spread,
Humbly, Lord, we cry to thee,
Give, oh, give us, daily bread!
But the full and plenteous ears
Many a time we reap with tears.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 27, 1875.

A PAMPHLET from Brother H. Beadle, M. D., on Yellow Fever has come to hand. Will notice more fully hereafter.

To those four kind friends whose letter brought sixteen dollars to our relief fund, we not only tender our sincerest thanks, but implore that they may reap a hundred-fold in this life, and in the world to come have life everlasting.

CONFERENCE is to convene at Rensselaer on Thursday of this week. Much as we should like to be present, our editorial duties, and some other matters will probably compel us to remain at our post. We hope the occasion will be one of edification to all who may meet.

A LENGTHY article on some difficult passages of Scripture, from the pen of Henry Constable, will be found in the present number. The author is an English writer of learning and eminent ability as is demonstrated by his two works on Hades and Future Punishment. Whether our readers accept his solution of the controverted passages or not, we think the article will be read with interest.

WE hope all our friends will put forth every effort, in our conference gatherings, to advance the claims of THE RESTITUTION to the support of the brotherhood. In the coming critical times such a medium of news and fraternal communication will be found indispensable. We shall watch the signs of the times, and endeavor to keep our readers fully posted in the bearings of prophecy on current events.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Glorious Ingathering.

The brethren ought to embrace the opportunities afforded by this delightful weather to make a general forward movement all along the lines. During the past four or five weeks I have been laboring in western Kentucky, proclaiming the good old gospel of the kingdom. I found the believers in that region to be intelligent, zealous and kind-hearted. I spoke nineteen times, and baptized fifty persons. To God be all the glory through Christ our dear Savior, now and evermore. Amen. WILEY JONES.

In the Master's Service.

Often in my daily toil, I feel so weary that I am tempted to say bitter and repining words, but some good angel at my elbow whispers, "You are in the Master's service," and instantly my troubles vanish, and I am all courage, to go on. "You are in the Master's service." The fretful scolding words must not pass your lips.

You dare not covet ease. You must redeem the time. The garlands of the future, must be won by work for God.

"They who love the world have not in them the love of God."

And you who "walk with the unseen," must be holy and undefiled, by earthly stain.

"You are in the Master's service," be that your watch-word hour by hour, as you meet and oppose the evil, and the battle will be won.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Not for Themselves but for You.

To whom it was revealed that not for themselves but for you they ministered these things which now are declared to you by those who evangelized you in holy spirit sent down from heaven, into which things messengers earnestly desired to look. 1 Pet. i. 12.

This is human nature. We get an inkling of a thing, become interested, and we become anxious to learn all of the details, the time, the manner and place of the salvation of which Peter speaks. The prophets prophesied of this salvation; they were interested, hence they examined closely to understand the things and the reason of which the spirit, which was in them, was pointing out, when it previously spoke of the sufferings of Christ, and after these the glories. See an example of this in Daniel's case: "And it came to pass when I Daniel had seen the vision and sought the meaning." Chap. viii. 15. "And I heard, but I understood not; then I said, O my Lord, what is the end of these?" Chap. xii. 8. "How long to the end of these wonders?" Verse 6.

Concerning the things, and concerning the season, or time they searched diligently, but they were ministering, or prophesying not for themselves, but for others. The spirit in them was pioneering and setting up the waymarks, and others were to travel the road whilst they would be quietly sleeping under the divine care. Hence, it was said, "Go thy way, Daniel, till the end be; for thou shalt rest and arise again in thy lot at the end of the days." (Jewish Translation).

This salvation of which Peter speaks is the common heritage of all the chosen, from Abel to the last one who embraces it, hence their intense interest in the events and time. The plan was drawn in the divine mind from the beginning, but it reached down through ages. Its development was in the womb of the future. In its gradual development, to each one was given that which he could comprehend, and that which immediately concerned him. Each, from his standpoint, could understand that he was to be saved, and saved by a Redeemer, and, also, what was required of him. But it would have seemed long to Abel had he been told that more than four thousand years would roll round before the promised seed of the woman would be born, and longer still had he been told that more than 1800 years more would elapse before he would come in majesty to bruise the serpent's head.

The revelations of the spirit in the prophets concerning the sufferings of Christ, and after these the glories, cover a long period of time. We hear the old prophets speaking of the suffering and majesty, as it were, in the same breath. Their predictions pointed out the first and second advents of Messiah, his coming in humility and suffering, and his coming in majesty and glory. Is it strange, then, that they searched diligently to understand these things and the season, or time, of their fulfillment? But the Lord is good to those who trust in him, and he knows best what we should understand. When the sufferings, referred to, began, those prophets were sleeping in the dust of the earth, and the time between the sufferings and the glories will be to them but as a flitting moment. But had it been revealed to them, doubtless the knowledge would have cast a gloom over them. We are all but little children and when a good thing has been promised us, our patience is sorely tried when we have to wait a long time. But we should be co-workers together with God, whilst he works for the good of the whole. We should serve the parts as God gives ability. We cannot serve those members who are sleeping; they need not our care. In the divine hand they are safe. It is left for us, if we serve at all, to serve this present generation, on whom, doubtless, the end of the age will come. The prophets of old prophesied as they were directed, and thus the spirit that was in them set up many a light-house that was of service to others.

Those who lived at the time of the first advent could point to many a prediction and to its fulfillment in the man of sorrows. And now, what would be our condition with the wheels all revolving, the steam valves opened, and the world rushing down grade in the dark, were it not for the prophecies? Thank God for the ministry of the prophets—for the light of the prophetic word—for the milestones, the light-houses and the beacons set up by them. If we are in the closing up time of this age,—and we are, for the prophetic rays are meeting in a focal centre—then we have a part to act, a service to perform that no others ever did or ever will do again. This age, with its duties, has not yet closed; it will close but once. We can not go back and help Noah build his ark and warn the old world, nor assist Moses and Aaron in the deliverance of Israel from bondage, nor strengthen the hands of Elias as he confronts the hordes of Baal's prophets. Nor can we loose the colt and spread our garments thereon that Jerusalem may have the opportunity to receive or reject her King.

The season of the first advent, with its privileges and duties, is past, and that of the second is at hand. It is upon us, even at the door. What is to be done? What service can we render for others? We, as a people, have, as by common consent, agreed that the end of the age is at hand. If we have learned this much from the prophets, can't we learn from them what action to take, what move to make, what service to render? We have got our lamps, will we be so foolish as not to take oil in our vessels with our lamps? Just so sure as the age is about to close, so sure have we a work to perform that is peculiar to the crisis. If we are ready to receive our Lord, this would be self-evident from the precedents of past history of transient periods. If the prophetic word was silent, but it is not, for its light shines in this otherwise dark place, for us who are about to witness the close. The prophets, Jesus and his apostles have ministered. The most stupendous change that this world has witnessed is at the door. Great empires, mighty nations are about to be dashed to the earth, and the mighty horde of earth's rulers are as ignorant of the time and manner of this change as if they had not been born—then the masses of the people—what is their condition? Then we, ourselves, who have an inkling of coming events—what are we doing? What do we intend to do? Shall we sit still and be content with present labor and present attainments in knowledge, or will we learn what God would have us do and do it? Let us not deceive ourselves. If we work not in harmony with the divine will and fail to act the part assigned to those who live in the close of the age, this will not stay the wheels of the coming kingdom. Jehovah has said, all the earth is mine. He will find those who will do the appointed work. If, in the transient period from the law to the gospel men had to leave the dead to bury their dead—to leave all to serve—what of those who may be permitted to pass from the gospel to the kingdom age? To be living in such a grand and awful time will not be sublime to us unless we perform our part. If worthy, we will have ample time to learn the full details of the plan of the ages beyond the one thousand years' reign after the kingdom is established—preparations must now be made to receive the King and the incoming kingdom. The kingdoms of this world must be notified of the coming kingdom of God; preparations must be made for the great nuptial feast—the marriage supper of the Lamb. His wife must make herself ready. This she has not done, for when she does, the marriage takes place.

Hoping that these words may stir up some minds, by way of remembrance, I remain your brother in hope of life in Christ. J. C. KINSEY.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution: Please find enclosed two dollars and fifty cents for back pay and to renew subscription. I have no idea when my time was up; I have had so much trouble the past six months I have been unfit for anything. Death has robbed me of my loved ones till I am almost overcome. Last December I lost my little boy six years old of scarlet fever, in March lost my little girl aged ten, bright and lovely children for their years. Last month I lost my mother who was living with me. She seemed in good health the day she died, went to bed and slept quietly till twenty minutes past eleven, woke up with an attack of the asthma, choked to death in about two minutes, and I am left desolate indeed, my family all gone but one child, a son grown. I thank God with all my heart that one is spared to me. Truly I have been chastened and scourged, but my faith grows stronger, and my hopes brighter, for I believe the time is but short till the Master will come and bring them back from the land of the enemy. My mother died in the hope of the glorious resurrection when the Savior comes. Has been a member of the church of the one faith over twenty years. We believe that they which sleep in Jesus will he bring with him when he comes. Glorious hope! 'Tis an anchor to the soul. If it were not for that I should have sunk. I will trust in God and wait for his son from heaven. "Yea though he slay me yet will I trust in him for I know that my Redeemer liveth and that he will stand on the earth at the latter day. And though the worm of corruption destroy their bodies, yet in their flesh shall they see God." How I long to see the day when this old sin-cursed earth shall be restored to its former purity, when sin and sorrow, pain and death, shall be blotted out, and all will be joy and gladness. May the Lord hasten it in his own good time and help us to endure the cross a little while longer till we win the crown. I would be so glad if some brother would come this way and preach; I have heard but two sermons of our faith in nine years; there are a few of our faith here and would be more if they had a chance to hear. Truly the harvest is plenty but laborers are few. May God bless you in your good work of spreading the truth in THE RESTITUTION. I feel as if I could not do without it. I want to do something for the paper; I think I shall soon be able to send something. Yours in the faith of Abraham. MARY A. STUDLEY.

NEWS ITEMS.

MEMPHIS, August 23.—Seventeen new cases were reported to the Board of Health to-day, ten of whom were colored. Eighteen deaths occurred.

MEMPHIS, August 24.—Nineteen new cases were reported to the Board of Health to-day, seven whites and two colored. Eight deaths have occurred.

Miss Birdie Goff died of yellow fever last evening at White Haven, Tenn.

The fever continues to spread in every direction. There are six cases in Chelsea, and several people sick with the disease have been reported in North Memphis, which portion of the city was exempt one week ago.

LONDON, August 24.—A dispatch from Boshire says the drouth has severely affected the spring harvests in South Persia and the Bagdad and Bussorah districts in Asiatic Turkey. The price of wheat in Mesopotamia has risen to three times the usual price.

The News' Rome dispatch says: "Owing to the miasmatic fever prevailing in the neighborhood of Ceprano, which has affected one-third of the population, the orders for the autumn maneuvers have been countermanded."

August 21.—At an early hour this morning severe shocks of earthquake were experienced along the line of the Welland Canal in Canada, between Lake Erie and Ontario. Several cities and villages were shaken; at Thorold it was particularly violent.

PARIS, August 23.—The cholera is reported at Ostend, Brussels, and in Western Flanders.

LONDON, August 23.—A Calcutta correspondent of the Times reports that starvation and misery still prevail in Cashmere.

THE RUMPA REBELLION.

Affairs in Eastern Bengal are also causing much anxiety. The Duke of Buckingham has not yet carried out his idea of visiting the scene of the Rumpa rebellion. The troops of Nizam will aid the British in repressing disorder.

FEVER.

The Seventeenth and Twenty-ninth Madras Infantry are suffering severely from fever.

THE CHOLERA.

The cholera is increasing at Cabul. The number of deaths in the regiments which lately returned from Herat is variously estimated at from 100 to 305.

LUDOAN, August 24.—Further riotous demonstrations occurred here today. The rioters wrecked the windows of the houses of a number of Protestants.

The Times Berlin correspondent reports that the loss of property in Russia by fires in July alone is stated at 8,003,236 roubles. An enormous fire occurred at Batoum on the sixth instant.

SELECTIONS.

Jews in Palestine.

The Free Church of Scotland, which has a special Committee to look, after its mission work among the Jews, has in its monthly publication an article on the Jews to Palestine, in which it says:

"The land of their promised inheritance is rapidly becoming their own in fee. If we compare the present time with eighty-three years ago, when the Sublime Porte permitted only three hundred to live within the walls of the holy city, the change is remarkable. Forty years since, the Porte modified this original order so that a larger number could abide there; but they were shut up in narrow and filthy quarters, next to the dog and leper quarters, the objects of contempt and cruel oppressions. But even this quarter restriction was removed ten years ago. And now the ruling power is in the hand of Great Britain, and the sceptre itself is in the hand of an Israelite, and Baron Rothschild holds a mortgage on Palestine as security for 200,000,000 francs loaned to the Sultan of Turkey. It looks very much as if accomplished fact had put itself in the place of prophecy.

"The Jews, after the quarter restrictions were removed, bought all the land which could be obtained within the gates, and have built entire streets of houses without the gates. With the improvements inevitable from liberty and possession of homes have come kindred progressions in provisions of charity for the destitute and afflicted. The German Jews have sixteen of these. Two journals have been started, and in the Rothschild and other Jewish hospitals 6,000 patients are under constant treatment. The Venetian Jews have 60,000 francs to found a school of agriculture; and, in evidence of a progress that shows divine care and intervention, the number of Jews has doubled in about ten years. In 1860 there were not more than seven thousand Jews, shut up in their quarters; and though a vast improvement on the past, still they appear to us wretched enough to make the most careless sigh over the mighty fallen. But in the five succeeding years they increased to more than 13,000."

Mission Work in Syria.

The Rev. Dr. H. H. Jessup, missionary, Syria, gives a glowing description of the work in that land. Beirut is the headquarters of missionary work in Syria, and is the largest, most beautiful and civilized city in Syria and Palestine, containing 80,000 inhabitants. In this city there are 10,000 children in the different schools, 3,000 of them being in Protestant schools; while in many of the other schools the teachers are those who have been trained under Protestant influence and some of them belong to Protestant churches. In the land of Syria there are 11,000 scholars in the different Protestant schools. Nearly all the school books used in the different schools, secular and religious, are furnished by the American Mission Press, which publishes about 40,000 volumes a year. There is a genuine waking up of mind among all classes, and particularly among the women and girls. Mr. Jessup was invited just before he left Beirut to the English schools under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Mentor Mott, who are educating 1,500 pupils, mostly girls. The object of the invitation was that these pupils might express their gratitude to him for his love and labors on their behalf. As he stood on the balcony, with 1,500 girls in the garden below, the 300 nearest him were unveiled Mohammedans, and when we remember that this is in most marked opposition to the Koran, their sacred book, which consigns the unveiled woman to disgrace here and burnings hereafter, we can judge the benevolent influence of Christianity on public sentiment.

Well Spoken.

Virtue is often a negative quality. The man who has no temptation to do wrong, and is no circumstanced that he finds it most natural and most easy to do right, has no especial occasion to plume himself on his virtue, and is not to be held up as a pattern, by any means. For instance, Canseur could name a man who never drinks. He never did drink, he never wanted to drink, he does not like to drink, and—he doesn't drink. That is not virtue. He could name another who did drink, who always wanted to drink, who drank to excess, who does like to drink, and who, after a long and manly struggle, succeeded in getting the mastery of himself and does not drink. That is virtue. Yet the world praises the one because he never drank, and though it applauds the other for conquering his appetite, remembers the time when it seemed to have conquered him. Let us praise virtue and applaud it, let us make certain that it is virtue before the demonstration begins. People who bring into this world hot tempers, strong impulses and fiery passions are certainly to be pitied, but not to be blamed unless they give way to them without effort; while if they control and conquer them they deserve the highest praise. The more fortunate ones, whom nature endows with cooler blood, genial, sunny tempers and more deliberate ways, are certainly to be congratulated, but never praised. The time will come when half the things that men complain of in their fellows will be treated as infirmities rather than as faults; when they will be cured, not punished.

"Then at the balance let's be mute,
We never can adjust it;
What's done we partly may compute,
But know not what's resisted."

[World's Crisis.]

The Stars Malignant.

That is a dreadful augury of evil days to come announced by Prof. O. A. Grimmer of San Jose, Cal. Should his astrological predictions prove true, the awful times of A. D. 542-600, and A. D. 1333-1400, will come to a sin-smitten and wailing world. Indeed, the world's end itself scarcely exceeds in horrors and woes and judgments foretold by the star-gazer of California. I have read his tract. He goes beyond Dr. Knapp altogether, but the reasons he assigns are the same, viz., the almost simultaneous clustering of the giant planets on one side of the sun, and all at their nearest point to that mysterious luminary. The era of disaster is 1880-87, and if rigid sanitary measures are not adopted, fifteen millions in our country will be swept into the tomb.

I am curious to know why with united voice the world of science is foretelling such evil days. Are they in a causeless panic and going mad? Or is a divine power compelling their lips to speak the truth, as Baalim, the old seer, was compelled? But, gentlemen, who scoff as do the secular editors, you are not posted in perhelia horrors. You will no doubt change your tune. Nothing is truer than that the solar system is put in unwonted commotion by the nearer approach of Jupiter alone to the sun. Don't laugh yet. The yellow fever alone will give the nation sorrow enough before the next frost. It smites now. They who have deceived themselves by saying it would not come, have not studied the matter. I am not a prophet, but I know it would come. So its death-blast is over the Mississippi Valley, and the cholera and plague are on their way.

Shout in derision, "Pessimist! Croaker!" if you will, O man. I have not read Webster's History of Pestilence in vain. I question if Dr. Knapp or Prof. Grimmer are trying to get up a "great scare." No. It is signs in heaven and earth that are alarming the sagacious students of nature—the wise man foreseeth the evil to come.

O that the Master were here, King over all the troubled planet! How he would, out of the chaos, bring the quiet lone, sweet calm! Meanwhile, who would not be a Christian?—D. T. Taylor.

The Kingdom.

Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear.—Heb. xii. 28.

The verses preceding this show that the kingdom is yet to come. The present kingdoms of the earth have to be shaken, and not only shaken, but removed, before the kingdom here mentioned is given to the saints. The words, therefore, must mean, Having to receive a kingdom, having it in prospect, the kingdom being promised to us, and we daily coming nearer to it. Let us seek grace by which we may obtain more of the spirit of, and preparation for, the glorious inheritance. It will be a kingdom which cannot be moved: it will abide, will be everlasting, and will exceed in glory, and beauty and blessedness the present heaven. We have the promise of this kingdom. Let us be thankful for it, and receive it with faith and confidence. Such a promise should inspire us daily with strength, and courage, consolation, and hope.—Silas Henn.

Worldliness.

A lawyer who consumes three hours in arguing a question of law relating to the ownership of a barrel of apples, is indignant at his minister for exceeding twenty-five minutes in unfolding one of the great principles of morality, on the observance of which the whole existence of society depends. The judge who fills two hours with his "opinion" on the right of a counsel to challenge a witness grumbles at his minister because he has prolonged the discussion of fundamental laws of human existence to thirty minutes. The physician who takes ten minutes to prepare the medicine for the headache, is nervously restive if his minister spends twice so many in attempting to relieve a chronic heartache. The belle who has spent—how long?—in adjusting the bows on her bonnet, is remorseless in her criticisms on the minister who does not finish his meditations on the character of God in fifteen minutes. The fop who has combed and perfumed and waxed his beard and mustache for an hour, is mortified past endurance if the poor minister is not through his discussion of the immortal life "inside of twenty minutes."

To Attain Long Life.

He who strives after a long and pleasant term of life must seek to attain continual equanimity and carefully to avoid everything which too violently taxes his feelings. Nothing more consumes the vigor of life than the violence of the emotions of the mind. We know that anxiety and care can destroy the healthiest body; we know that fright and fear, yea, excess of joy, become deadly. They who are naturally cool and of a quiet turn of mind, upon whom nothing can make too powerful an impression, who are not wont to be excited either by great sorrow or great joy, have the best chance of living long and happy after their manner. Preserve, therefore, under all circumstances, a composure of mind which no happiness, no misfortune, can too much disturb. Love nothing too violently; hate nothing too passionately; fear nothing too strongly.

There will be a quarterly conference in Edinboro, Pa., on Saturday, 2 p.m., and Sunday, Sept. 5 and 6. Elder M. Beck of Canton, Ohio, will be present to preach the word and administer baptism. Come to the meeting brethren, one and all.

POLLOCK—Aug. 8, 1875, Sister Pollock, wife of Mr. John Pollock, of South West City, Mo., after a short illness, aged about thirty-five years.

Sister Pollock was baptized last November during a meeting held by brother Moore and myself. The church and society of South West City, Mo., have suffered a very great loss by the death of Sister Pollock, as she was a highly educated, noble and talented lady, universally respected and loved by all. She sweetly sleeps, and her works do follow her. Her kind husband and four loving children have her beautiful walk to console them, while left behind to fight the battles of life.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
Flowers wither at the north wind's breath,
But thou hast all seasons for thine,
O, death."

O, cruel monster, when will you cease to rob us of our loved ones? 1 Thess. iv. 14-16. Let us all do our duty and prepare to live when Jesus comes.

Your brother,
JOHN S. LAWYER.

POETRY.

Evening.

W. L. CROCKETT.

When the mountain top is crowned
With the sun's last lingering ray,
And down its wooded sides so gently steal
The shadows of the night;
How peaceful is the scene.
The busy voices of the day have ceased
And nothing breaks the stillness,
Save the rustle of the leaves;
Or, where the brook, chafed by the pearly pebbles
Onward leaps with gurgling sound.
O I do love this quiet, thoughtful hour,
It brings to me upon its whispering winds
The golden promise of eternal rest.
When all the pomp of life's great day
Shall fade, and I shall lay me down
To earth asleep, for that sleep shall bring
No thought of sorrow, but a steadfast hope
Of glorious day when I shall wake
To life and everlasting joy.

Our Father Knoweth.

'Tis the God of all worlds who knoweth
The needs that we have with life;
How weary we are of striving,
How worn with the constant strife;
And yet how we, aye, must labor
For clothing and daily bread,
And fight and endure and suffer
Because we are hard bestead.

But since it is He who knoweth
To whom silver and gold belong,
Is there need of so much endeavor?
Have we not time for song?
He who once showered the manna,
And made streams when the land was dry,
And sent His food by the ravens,
He can our wants supply.

And He is our loving Father;
O Christ, who has taught us this,
Give us Thy Holy Spirit,
That the rapture we do not miss.
Our Father is kind and earth
For the needs that His children know,
And He never will leave them orphans
In the world of want and woe.

So we take our lesson in trusting;
Why should we be afraid?
The burden of our providing
On the mighty God is laid.
He cares for the birds and flowers;
How safe must His children be;
O Christ, who has shown us the Father,
We lend our thanks to Thee.

SELECTIONS.

(The Rainbow.)

The Spirits in Prison.

The famous text in 1 Peter iii., which speaks of certain spirits in prison to whom our Lord went and preached, has given rise to very various surmises, and has been eagerly laid hold of by men of very opposite views. By each of them it is quoted as confirmatory of their peculiar theories. Two schools of thought, however, there are in our day who regard the passage in Peter with especial favor. The first are those who would extend human probation beyond this present life, and who suppose that after men are dead they still have messages of mercy sent to them. Of these there are various shades of opinion. Some suppose that these messages are partially, others that they are very generally, and others again that they are universally accepted at one period or other of the eternal future, by those who in this life had died unreconciled to God. Another school of thought looks to this passage as proof of their view that death is not by any means the extinction of existence in the case of man, as it is in that of all the creation inferior to him. Some of this school are identical with that already mentioned as hoping that a work of salvation goes on among the departed; but others are wholly opposed to this view, and, holding most unhesitatingly that there is no probation after this life, quote and refer to the passage as proof of the continued existence of man during his condition of death. "The passage," says Mr. Robert W. Landis, a well known American writer, "teaches the uninterrupted immortality of the human spirit of Christ, and by consequence that of his redeemed. It teaches, likewise, the uninterrupted immortality of the spirits of wicked men, and of course that they do not cease to exist at death."*

The ground on which these different schools of thought appeal to this passage is that the "spirits in prison" spoken of are the spirits of men. Some of them make it to refer to a particular generation of men, viz., the disobedient of the time of Noah. Others give it a wider application, and suppose that it includes with the above all others before or after Noah's time, who died under somewhat similar circumstances. While others would give it a universal application to all men, of all times. "That great work," says Mr. Birks, with reference to this verse, "includes all states of men, living or dead, and all ages of mankind."† But with this variety in the application of the words, all are agreed that "the spirits in prison," are human spirits and no other. Few of them think it worth while to consider if any other view is possible. Most of them assume their opinion as indubitable. Some for a moment glance at a different interpretation, but dismiss it with a few quiet words of contempt. None of them seem to be aware that a very different interpretation was commonly held in the first ages of Christianity by Christian men.

* "The Immortality of the Soul." By Robert W. Landis, p. 234.

† "The Victory of Divine Goodness." By T. R. Birks, M. A., p. 97.

The view which I hold, and here advocate, is totally different from that referred to as generally received. Long deterred from even giving it an entrance into my mind for reasons which probably influence great numbers, I have now for a considerable time adopted it with a constantly increasing sense that it is the true and only and most rational meaning of the words. I make no claim to originality or novelty in the case; for which I am glad, as I do not think that any really new view can be true. I only bring forward a very old opinion now generally forgotten or ignored.

I hold then, that the "spirits in prison," are not men at all, nor any part, however important, of human nature. If man in his living perfection be three-fold in nature, consisting of body, soul, and spirit, I maintain that his soul and spirit are just as little referred to here as his body. If man's living nature be dual, and that soul and spirit are in truth one and the same, I hold still that there is in this Scripture no reference whatsoever to the souls and spirits of men. The apostle is referring to another order of beings, viz., to angels who in the days of Noah kept not the state and place assigned to them by God, and who were in consequence, when the human race was nearly destroyed by the deluge, confined in a prison house where they are awaiting judgment. To these, as I gather from the passage, our Lord went and preached or proclaimed some great message, probably between his resurrection and his ascension to heaven.

My first reason for rejecting the idea that men are referred to in the passage is that the term "spirits," taken by itself absolutely and without any qualifying phrase, is not applied to men in Holy Scripture. We read indeed of the spirit of man, or of beast. Gen. vii. 22; Job vi. 4; Psalm xxxi. 6; Acts vii. 40. In one passage, spoken manifestly in anticipation of a time and scene yet to come, we read of the "spirits of just men made perfect." Heb. xii. 23. But I think the simple term "spirit," or "spirits," without any indication that it refers to man, is never applied in Scripture to either individual or collective man. If I am wrong I ask the reader to correct me. If the term be ever thus used it is of very rare occurrence.

Another reason for rejecting the idea that the words refer at all to men is, that it is quite inconsistent with the teaching of Scripture to suppose that during the intermediate state between death and resurrection, which is usually supposed to be the state under notice, the spirits of men are in a prison of any kind. No matter whether they were good men, or men who repented when they saw the flood coming upon them, or men who continued obdurate after the destroying waters had covered them, and who died in their obduracy, it is unscriptural to suppose that these, or any of them, are in any sort or kind of prison during the condition of death. The teaching of Scripture on this important point is that in death every spirit of man, without respect to the character of the man in whom it resided, goes back to God. Here is proof: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Solomon is not speaking of the death of good men only, but of that of all men alike. He is telling us what death is in the case of every man. The spirit which, sent originally from God, had animated him during the earthly life, now that that is over, goes back to God. The spirit of a wicked man is no more in prison than the spirit of a righteous man. Neither is in a prison at all, and therefore, the expression "spirits in prison" has no reference to men of any character or of any age. Some speak of the book of Ecclesiastes as inferior in authority to other parts of Scripture, but its testimony cannot thus be got rid of, nor indeed would it be of much value in the present case if it could. Other Scriptures teach the same great truth. The description which Solomon has given of death and the return of all spirits to God, is the faith of the primitive ages of the world; death is God's "gathering unto himself man's spirit and his breath." Job xxxiv. 15.

Another reason for believing that men are not here referred to, is that if so they could only be the disobedient men of Noah's time. But no good reason ever has been, or ever can be, given why they should have had a proclamation or preaching of any kind made to them more than many other communities of men both before and subsequent to their time. Some commentators, aware of the force of this objection, have told us that Noah's contemporaries represent all other societies of men who resembled them in their religious circumstances. We reject this gloss upon Scripture, making it say what it says not. The very attempt shows the force of the reason against the idea that the apostle is speaking of men, and which is, indeed, incontrovertible. There is no conceivable reason why the men of Noah's time should have been preached to by Christ more than many others, or so much as many of whom we know. They were not so ignorant of truth as others have been. They had had long and faithful warning of their dangers which others had not. They had not only the preaching of Noah, but they had also before their eyes for years that act of faith and warning which God placed before them in Noah's building of the ark. We therefore set aside the notion that St. Peter is here speaking of men at all.

But it will of course be said, if he is not speaking of men, of whom is he speaking? He is speaking of some who were disobedient in the time of Noah, who for their sin were punished by imprisonment, to whom Jesus Christ went in their prison and there announced some great and solemn tidings! If these were not men, who were they? In answer I reply that these spirits were a rank of angels, who in the time of Noah were guilty of a great transgression,—even as before that time another rank of angels had fallen by a different sin,—who had in great measure through their transgression produced the exceeding wickedness of Noah's time, and who were in consequence, when the deluge came, confined in the prison-house of Tartarus, therein reserved for the final judgment, and to whom Jesus Christ after his resurrection from the dead,—in all probability during that period of forty days which elapsed before his ascension into heaven,—went and preached. And now for the proof from Scripture of this view, very long ago and very widely entertained as the true interpretation of the passage.

In the first place it is scarcely necessary to mention that the word "spirits" is perhaps the most usual in Scripture to designate angels, whether upright or fallen. It is more frequently applied to the latter than to the former. Of good angels we read, "are they not all ministering spirits?" Heb. i. 14. While the application of the term to fallen angels is common. Matt. viii. 16; Luke x. 20. For this reason it is natural to suppose that when the apostle speaks of "spirits," he had angels in his mind.

But those of whom he speaks are "spirits in prison." Can we show from Scripture that there are angels in a state of confinement? We can. We do not, of course, refer to those fallen spirits who had transgressed before man was created, who were the means of first introducing sin into our world, and who are still busily engaged among men in their old work of temptation. These are not in prison at all. They are free to go where they please. They appear in the very courts of heaven. They speed their way throughout our air. They wander over our earth seeking whom to devour. Job i. 6; Eph. ii. 2; 1 Peter v. 8. These are free, and cannot, therefore, be those of whom Peter speaks, as indeed they could not for another reason, namely, that those he speaks of had become disobedient in the days of Noah, whereas the others had sinned long before them. We must seek, therefore, for other angels; for angels whose sin was of a different character; who had been upright until Noah's time, and who then fell away from God; who on their fall were cast into a prison where they are still confined. We have plain and undoubted reference to such in various parts of Scripture.

This apostle (2 Eph. ii. 4) speaks of certain angels who sinned, and were in consequence imprisoned; and he brings them in close connection with Noah's time, just as in his first epistle he brings in the sin of the "spirits in prison" in connection with the same period. His words are: "If God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." Here is a passage which tells us beyond any dispute that at any rate, from Noah's time down to the present, there is a number of angels in prison. There is no need to dwell further on this verse except to remark that it is a great pity that the word "hell" should have been used as the place of the angels' confinement. The original Greek differs both from Gehenna, the hell of the damned, and from hades, the place of the dead. The true reading is, "but cast them down to Tartarus." Of course, it is open to any one to say whether Tartarus be or be not equivalent to the hell of the lost. But, at all events, let every one know what word is used. I am satisfied that the two places are distinct. Liddell and Scott, in their most valuable dictionary (see Ταρταρος), give the following as conveying the earlier and later opinions of the Greeks on the sense of Tartarus: "Tartarus, a dark abyss, as deep below hades as earth below heaven, the prison of Chronos, the Titans, etc. Later, Tartarus was either the nether world, generally like hades, or the regions of the damned, as opposed to the Elysian fields." The reader will please to remark that the earlier view of Tartarus, among the Greeks, makes it a prison-house for the Titans, a superhuman family among the Greek and Roman gods. The more we search the more we find agreement, distorted, of course, between the traditions of the heathen world and the primitive traditions preserved in Scripture. The history of the creation and the deluge are instances of this. I believe that Tartarus is another. But whatever we may think as to this, we are clearly told that there are angels now in prison who have been in prison from about the time of Noah.

We turn to another Scripture which teaches the same truth. In Jude we read that "the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he (God) hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." There is a close general resemblance between this text and 2 Pet. ii. 4. The Tartarus of the latter is the place of "darkness" of the former. In Jude the ultimate punishment is not yet inflicted—"reserved unto judgment"—just as we saw of Tartaros that it was not the place of final punishment. But the main point here is that Jude, like Peter, tells us that at the period of the Savior's resurrection there were angels in prison.

And now we inquire more closely into this remarkable passage in Jude. We pass on to the momentous question, What was the nature of the sin of these angels? Jude does not leave us in doubt. It was a sin of a similar nature to that of which Sodom, Gomorrah, and the neighboring cities were pre-eminently guilty.

This does not appear from the description he gives us in the sixth verse of the angelic sin as consisting in their not keeping their first estate but leaving their own habitations, although it is quite consistent with it. It is the seventh verse, when translated properly, which brings out this. That translation should run thus: "Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them, in a manner similar to these (viz., the angels of sixth verse), giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh," etc. It is thus that the Vulgate translates the passage: "Sicut Sodoma et Gomorrha et finitimæ civitates, simili modo exfornicatæ et abeuntes post carnem alteram," etc. And it is thus that Dean Alford, whose intimate knowledge of the language of the New Testament no one can dispute, both translates and understands the passage: "Sodom and Gomorrha," he tells us in his Greek Testament, "and the cities about them, following fornication in like manner to these (τουτοις) the angels above mentioned. The manner was similar, because the angels committed fornication with another race than themselves, thus also απελθουσαι οπισω σαρκος ετερας. So τουτοις is taken by Ludcappel, Herder, Augusti, Schneckenburger, Jachmann, De Wette, Arnauld, Stier, Huther." * Here, then, in the Epistle of Jude, as in Peter, we have the fact of angels imprisoned for sin brought before us, while in Jude we have the additional and important information as to the nature of their sin.

It is obvious to remark, with respect to the statements of Peter and Jude, that they both speak of the angels' sin, and the latter of its nature, as though it were a matter clearly revealed, which was well known to their readers. Jude speaks of it as a thing as well known as the destruction of the Israelites in the wilderness for unbelief, or the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha for unnatural crime. He also speaks of it (5th verse) as a thing known to his readers, or which had only to be called to their remembrance. He speaks of it, in fact, and so does Peter, as an event which had been very clearly spoken of in the Old Testament Scriptures. Now, have we in those Scriptures any passage, or passages, which speak of such a thing, viz., a great sin on the part of certain angels, which consisted in their acting in a manner resembling the sin of Sodom? We should certainly expect to find an account of this kind in the Old Testament. We have it in Genesis vi. That old chapter of God's word is a full and circumstantial account of what Peter and Jude refer to as already well known. There we have the fall of angels, or spirits, in the time of Noah, through their unlawful and incestuous mixture with another race, strange flesh, the children of men. The matter is painfully plain. We are led to expect a passage, or passages, in the Old Testament, describing such a thing as Peter speaks of twice, and Jude once. We have one passage, and no other, in the Old Testament. But it is enough. Genesis vi. is the place which the apostles had in mind, which affords the clue and the solution to their otherwise dark and inexplicable references, but which, when read in the light of this sadly-misunderstood chapter, are clearly and readily comprehended.

* The Greek Testament. By Henry Alford, D. D.

We read then in Genesis of certain "sons of God" who were guilty of awful sin in contracting polygamous marriages with "the daughters of men." Who are the "sons of God" here, and who are the "men" whose daughters the "sons of God" married, thus committing a fearful and intolerable sin?

Our modern commentators are ready with a simple explanation. The "sons of God," they tell us, are the children of Seth and Enos, the professors of the true religion; the men whose daughters they married were wicked men descended from Cain. And so, with this cut-and-dry comment, they dismiss the matter. But it cannot be thus dismissed. This explanation will not stand scrutiny for a moment.

It supposes, in the first place, that the descendants of Cain multiplied much more than the descendants of Seth! Why should this be the case? The Cainites, they tell us, were polygamists, while the Sethites were monogamists. The history of marriage tells us that polygamy rather diminishes than increases population. The sexes being equal, it follows that if one man takes ten wives, nine men must do without wives. This is rather an odd way of adding to population. Besides, it is the "sons of God" who are noted as the great polygamists of the age!

Again, why should we suppose the daughters of Cain to be fairer than the daughters of Seth? It was the beauty of woman which led to the polygamy of the sons of God. If these sons of God had been descendants of Seth, they would surely find as much grace and beauty among their own body as among the children of Cain.

But we cannot suppose "men," in the first and second verses of this chapter, to signify the descendants of Cain, to the exclusion of the descendants of Seth, without introducing extreme confusion and error into the whole narrative. Whatever the Hebrew word translated "men" means in verses 2 and 3, it means when it occurs in the succeeding verses of this same chapter. Now let us apply this, and see the utter nonsense it will produce. The same word translated "men," in verses 2 and 3, occurs also in verses 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, where it is sometimes translated "man," and sometimes "men."

We will translate verse 3 in accordance with the view which we oppose: "And the Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with the descendants of Cain, for that he also is flesh," etc. Was it only the descendants of Cain with whom God's Spirit strove? Were they only flesh? Was it their life only that was limited to 120 years? We will next take verse 6: "And it repented the Lord that he had made the descendants of Cain upon the earth?" Did he not also repent that he had made the rest of mankind? Again, take verse 7: "And the Lord said, I will destroy the descendants of Cain, whom I have created, from the face of the earth." Did God only create the descendants of Cain? Did he not as much create the descendants of Seth? Were the descendants of Cain alone destroyed by the flood? Did the descendants of Seth escape its waters and falsify the Scriptures, which tell us that only eight persons were saved? We must, therefore, reject this modern notion that the "men" of Gen. vi. 1, 2 were the descendants of Cain. They were the human race, all sprung from Adam. But if they were, "the sons of God" were not men at all!

Who were they? They were angels who in the days of Noah left their first estate, contracted marriages with the daughters of another race, helped mainly to produce the exceeding wickedness of the period of the deluge, and were in consequence confined in a prison awaiting the final judgment. With this view all is harmonious.

The epithet, "sons of God," by which they are described, is the well-known title of angels in the early Scriptures. As Adam, at creation, was called the son of God; as the Israelites called into covenant with God from among heathen nations were called "sons of God" (Luke iii. 38; Deut. xiv. 1); so this grand title was used to describe those great beings whom we term angels. In the first and second chapters of Job, where the assemblies of the court of heaven are spoken of, we read—"There was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves unto the Lord, and Satan came also among them." No one doubts that the angels are here named "sons of God," while one comes at once to the conclusion that the "men" of Gen. vi. 1, 2 were men, and not angels, because the word is used in the Old Testament in the sense of men. But it is used also in the sense of angels, and that in the Old Testament. Job xxxviii. 7 is a case in point. "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." We are thus fully justified in our supposition that this title in Genesis refers to angels.

Understanding it of angels we can realize the enormity of that sin which is especially noted as having called down the divine judgment in the waters of the flood. The intermarriage of the descendants of Seth and Cain was not a sin of peculiar greatness, nor was such intermarriage anywhere prohibited. Commentators with a special object in view may paint such intermarriages as most heinous, but it is not at all certain that they were any infringement of right whatever. Nor, again, was polygamy in those times reckoned a great sin. There is not the smallest ground for supposing so. If Lamech was the first polygamist, as is very possible, his polygamy is mentioned without any reprobation (Gen. iv. 19). It is most unreasonable to suppose that a practice (polygamy) in use by such men as Abraham, Jacob, David, and other true servants of God, should be brought before us as beyond any other or all other reasons the cause for the greatest act of judgment with which God has ever visited the world, and which can only find its parallel in the final destruction of the ungodly at the second coming of Christ. 2 Peter iii. 5-7.

But all this is changed when we interpret the record of Gen. vi. 2, as the intermarriage of angels with women—literally "the daughters of men." The law set to angels and to be in force through all their being is that they do not marry. Matt. xxii. 30. That is their first estate from which they were never to depart. And now in the time of Noah we find some of them rebelling against this law. They do that of which all nature testifies its abhorrence—they intermingle different species and different races. They take them wives of the daughters of the sons of men, becoming ringleaders in rebellion against the laws of God. No wonder that the race of men rapidly and fearfully degenerated? We have no reason whatever to suppose with many commentators that down to the time of Noah there was any marked distinction between the families of men. We are not to condemn all Cain's descendants as peculiarly sinful because their father was a murderer, or to suppose all Seth's children to be religious by virtue of their fleshly descent. But in the conduct of the rebellious sons of God, angels coming to earth, transgressing their own primary law, setting up the bold example of disobedience, we do see the sufficient cause for that all-but universal apostasy from God which marked the age of Noah and drew down the avenging and cleansing waters of the flood.

What objection of the smallest force, when we calmly consider the matter, can be made to this view? I know of of one. The idea of the impossibility of such intermarriage of angels with human beings must be at once dismissed as not possessed of the very smallest force. Whenever we read of angels they are in human shape and performing the works of men. (Gen. xviii. 8; xix. 16; Psa. lxviii. 25.) To suppose angels incorporeal is absurd in idea and is contrary to Scripture. (1 Cor. xv. 44; Luke xx. 36.) To intimate, as we do here, that there is between them and our race very close agreement in nature is only to concur with that well known identity in many things which runs throughout all creation with which we are acquainted, which knits together the vegetable and the animal worlds, which connects every living thing from the very lowest animal organism up to man, the highest of earthly creatures. We all know something of the use which the Darwinian school of science has made of this in its theory of evolution. Rejecting that theory as one of the most silly and irrational of the many speculations which have sought to improve upon divine revelation, we cannot yet deny that marvellous chain which binds and links together all creation from its lowest to its highest. Differences there are between different species which the theory of Darwin can never bridged over. Analogies and resemblances there are also which no dissenter from Darwin's view can possibly deny. Between the lowest zoophite and man there is an unbroken chain. Are we to suppose that between man and the order of being above him a link of this chain is broken? To suppose so is to reject analogy, and set aside Scripture. We are only then following the lead of God's two books, Nature and Scripture, when we say there is nothing bordering on the impossible, or even upon the improbable, in the theory which we advocate.

as impossible was freely accepted by those who were just as well capable of judging as we are, if not more so. Josephus may be accepted as speaking for the Jewish people, and he gives, without any apology or comment, the exact view which I have done. Speaking of the flood and of its cause he says, "Many angels of God accompanied with women, and begat sons that proved unjust, and despisers of all that were good, on account of the confidence they had in their own strength; for the tradition is, that these men did what resembled the acts of those whom the Greeians call Giants."* The early Christian Church, so far as I know, unanimously held this identical view. Justin Martyr, speaking of God's having committed the care of men to angels, says: "The angels transgressed this appointment and were captivated by love of women, and begat children who are those that are called demons."† Irenæus teaches the same: "In the days of Noah God justly brought on the deluge for the purpose of extinguishing that most infamous race of men then existent, who could not bring forth fruit to God, since the angels that sinned had commingled with them, and God acted as he did in order that he might put a check upon the sins of these men, but at the same time might preserve the archetype, the formation of Adam."‡ Tertullian and Lactantius write to the same effect.§ In fact, an opinion scarcely ever held among our modern commentators, all but ignored among them as unworthy of the smallest thought, was the common undoubted belief among the early Christians, viz., that the sons of God of Gen. vi., were fallen angels, who commingled with the daughters of Adam, and produced a race of spurious men.

So, now, I think it is very plain who "the spirits in prison" were to whom Christ went and preached. They were not men at all, or the spirits of men. Neither those who hold that man is alive during the state of death or who hold that after this life is over a state of probation still continues for those not reconciled to God, can derive any support from this-oft-discussed passage of Scripture. The Apostle is not speaking of the human race. He is speaking of angels, open to temptation and liable to fall as a man is, and in two instances yielding to temptation. Some had fallen before man's creation; probably through pride, and had led man astray from God. Others fell through sensuality, and produced that exceeding degeneracy among mankind which could only be removed by the waters of the deluge. These are the "spirits in prison" of whom Peter speaks, and to whom Christ went and preached after he was quickened by the Spirit and raised from the dead.

What was it which Jesus our Redeemer "preached" to them? We do not know. We shall be glad to be informed on a subject on which, so far as we know, God's word says nothing. The Greek word translated "preached" refers to any kind of proclamation such as the herald or ambassador of old bore from one person or state to another. Was it a message of mercy? We do not know. It may be that, while no such offer was made to those fallen angels who first tempted man to sin and still continue to do so, God may have left a door open to others. If so we should rejoice, but we dare not dogmatise. Or, was it the announcement of his triumph over death and the powers of darkness which Christ, raised up from the dead to die no more, went and made in the prison house of spirits? Some suppose that such an action upon his part is referred to in Colos. ii. 15, but neither here can we assert anything with confidence. If it were God's will, gladly would we accept the idea, that as to man there was a Gospel proclaimed by which all who accept it shall have eternal life, so, in that prison to which the "sons of God," leaving their first estate, were consigned at the period of the flood, there may have been a message of reconciliation brought by Christ; and so that if, in the great coming day of judgment, some of those imprisoned spirits come forth to the destruction which shall then overtake the devil and all his angels others may come forth to light and liberty and eternal life.—Henry Constable.

Victor Hugo's Predictions—The Millennium in the Twentieth Century.

While the great majority of the Parliamentary notabilities were yesterday at Nancy assisting at the unveiling of the Thiers statue, M. M. Victor Hugo and Louis Blanc were delivering speeches at the Chateau d'Eau Theatre. The object of the meeting was to raise funds for the workmen of Marseilles. M. Victor Hugo, who presided, made the first speech. "The nineteenth century," remarked the venerable Senator, "was the century of painters, the seventeenth that of writers, the eighteenth that of philosophers, and the nineteenth will be the century of Apostles and of prophets. In the twentieth century war, the scaffold, hatred, royalty, frontiers, and dogmas will have died all out: but man will live. Our children will enjoy this splendid century." Having prefaced his observations in this style—with which all who are acquainted with the aged poet's late utterances are familiar—M. Victor Hugo set forth the means by which this glorious end was to be attained. There are people said he, who have nothing in the world. On the other hand, there is a world waiting to be colonized and civilized. Therefore, cut isthmuses, turn deserts into seas, lay down railways. Noone will contest your right to occupy the land. Considering that Africa is specially in view, this might appear a somewhat startling assertion, but the Paris public know M. Victor Hugo, and delight in the presence of their poet. The details of his speeches are never harshly criticised. "These African plains," continued the author of "Les Miserables," "are worthy of being French, since they were once Roman. They are now in a state of barbarism; they are occupied by savages. Turn them out." A few sentences further, he adds; "Let us all feel citizens in equality, men in fraternity, and spirits in liberty, and let us love both those who love and those who do not love us." Possibly among the latter might be included the savages who are to be "turned out of their possessions." However this may be, M. Victor Hugo was loudly cheered at the end of his speech.

Extinguish the Bible—what then?

I fear, my friends, that we do not half appreciate the unspeakable treasure which God has given us in the holy Scriptures. I fear that even our most considerate, pious and devoted believers do not begin to comprehend the desolation which would swathe the world if it were not for what God's prophets and evangelists have testified and written for our learning. Have you ever thought what would be the result if these sacred testimonies were to be stricken out of being, with all that rests on them or has ever sprung from them? Have you ever considered what an utter obliteration of the highest intellectual and moral life of the race would attend such a calamity? Have you ever reflected how it would silence every preacher of righteousness and salvation, abolishing at once his office and his text, stop every work of mercy and philanthropy that would bind up the wounds of suffering humanity, and quench every fond hope of the recovery of our afflicted world, the restoration of our dead, or a home in heaven when this poor life is over? Ah me! Extinguish the Bible and its teachings, and no star remains to cheer the tossed mariner on this troubled sea—no chart by which to direct his uncertain way—no known haven or blessed shores for which to steer! Extinguish the Bible and its teachings, and the last appeal of the down-trodden and oppressed, the last check to the aggressions of power, the last bond of restraint upon man's depravity, are gone, clean gone, giving carnival to every lust and freedom to every beastly passion, without corrective, without limit and without end! Extinguish the Bible and its teachings, and light and comfort wilt away like Jonah's smitten gourd, and leave man to drag out a hopeless orphanage while years continue, and then gather himself up to die and perish like the brute! Extinguish the Bible and its teachings, and despair and wretchedness must settle on all hearts, as on the vanquished Chaldean sages under the decree of their inexorable king! Ay, did men but understand it, there is no possession like the deliverances which God has given us by his holy prophets. Treasure, then, the sacred record of them. The Bible is the Book of books.

"Within this ample volume lies
The mystery of mysteries,
Happiest they of human race
To whom their God has given grace
To read, to fear, to hope, to pray,
To lift the latch and force the way;
And better had they ne'er been born
That read to doubt, or read to scorn."

The Fruits of Intemperance.

The punishment of vice and intemperance does not end with the vicious and intemperate, but the great human family is so constituted that one member can not sin without pulling down others. Thus, in an appalling degree, are parents answerable for the wickedness and vices of their children.

A man drinks moderately and steadily all his life, with no apparent harm to himself; but his daughters become nervous wrecks, his sons epileptics, libertines, or incurable drunkards; the hereditary tendency to crime having its pathology and unvaried laws, like scrofula, consumption, or any other purely physical disease. These are stale truths with medical men; but the majority of parents, even those of average intelligence and culture, are apparently either ignorant or wickedly regardless of them. When our people are brought to remove gin shops and gin sellers for the same reason that they would stagnant ponds or unclean sewers, there will be a chance of ridding our jails and almshouses of half their tenants. We have urged this point until it has become hackneyed and tedious; but how can we be silent so long as a fresh murder or suicide every day exemplifies the ghastly peril and its cause?

BREVITIES.

Jerusalem is becoming daily more and more German, and that language is very generally spoken there. The German settlers are both Jew and Christian, and recently a magazine, to appear once in three months, has been started, giving an account of all that is interesting "down in Judee," and bearing especial reference to the archæological researches made in the district. The conductors of this periodical will pay particular attention to the various moot points as to topography in and around the Holy City.

It is related by a Chester lady that when General William Henry Harrison was running for the Presidency he stopped at the old Washington House, in Chester, for dinner. After dinner wine was served. It was noticed that the General pledged his toasts in water, and one of the gentleman from New York, in offering another, said; "General, will you not favor me by drinking a glass of wine?" The General declined in a very gentlemanly manner. Again he was urged to join them in a glass of wine. This was too much. He rose from the table, his tall form erect, and in the most dignified manner replied: "Gentlemen, I have refused twice to partake of the wine cup—that should have been sufficient; though you press the cup to my lips, not a drop shall pass the portals. I made a resolve when I started in life that I would avoid strong drink and I have never broken it. I am one of a class of seventeen young men who graduated, and the other sixteen fill drunkard's graves—all through the pernicious habit of social wine-drinking. I owe all my health, happiness and prosperity to that resolution. Will you urge me now?"

Major Serpa Pinto, the Portuguese traveller, who has just returned from his expedition through the African continent, started from the Portuguese possessions on the West Coast of Africa, and made his way in a zig-zag to Natal. He describes a tribe of natives he met with near the Zambezi with white skins, but with the woolly hair and other peculiarities of the South African. In portions of the country he enjoyed such excellent sport that he was able to kill game enough for the support of his 150 followers. On reaching an elevated plateau, Major Serpa Pinto said he was astonished to see a town in the middle of a vast plain. The houses were at some distance from each other, and all built on the same model. On approaching this town the traveller found that it was inhabited by white ants. Throughout, Major Serpa Pinto appears to have been well received by the natives. One of their kings offered him his daughter in exchange for his watch, and when the traveller explained that he could not part with it, his majesty asked for his shoes. The slave trade is in full swing. He met numerous files of unfortunate wretches chained together, going in the direction of Egypt. He passed through a portion of Zululand a couple of days after the death of the Prince Imperial.

THE WORD "MUSULMAN."

Of the many Oriental terms which are in daily use in public print at the present time, the most frequently used, and also the most frequently mangled and misunderstood, is probably the word Musulman. Its proper plural is Musulmans, but as often as not it is presumed to be Musulmen, and is consequently so written. There is even a hazy and ludicrous impression abroad that its derivation has something to do with the vender of a familiar shell-fish. The "Mussul" in the word has, however, no relationship with the well-known testacean, and the termination "man" no etymological affinity with the word expressing the genus homo in the English language. The title by which the followers of Islam distinguish themselves is, in the Arabic, Muslim, Muslim, or Muslman. According to Lennelavius, the appellation was first used among the Saracens; and among the Turks and others, in the course of time, it has come to mean orthodox, or "true believers." The original significance of the word is doubtless "saved" or "predestined;" the Mohammedans having an unshaken belief that they, above the votaries of all other creeds, are predestined to salvation. Martinius, a fine old authority, is very particular as to the origin of the name, which he derives from the Arabic musalam, "saved," or "snatched out of danger." The Mohammedans, he observes, establishing their religion by fire and sword, massacred all those who would not embrace it, and granted life to all that did, calling them Mussulmans," (rescued from danger,) whence the word in the progress of time became the distinguishing title of all those of that sect, who have affixed to it the significance of "true believer." The plural of "Muslim" is "Muslemin." The English word "muslin" has no connection, be it noted, with the above, but comes from Mosul, in Mesopotamie, where the fabric was first manufactured, before its importation into England from India in 1070.

CONCERNING LONGEVITY.

Our modern life insurance tables contain very accurate approximations to the average age attained by civilized mankind, and being founded upon the best attainable statistical information, can be relied upon. It would appear that the chances of the child who reaches the age of 10 years in fair health for arriving at the "three-score-and-ten," designated by the Psalmist as the reasonable limit of life, are four out of ten; that is to say, there are 40,000 men and women alive at 70 years of age out of every 100,000 who reach the age of 10 years. Only one in that 100,000 may expect, however, to round out a full century although ten may live to see 95 and 100 up to 93. The fewer deaths occur between the ages of 25 and 28 inclusive, at which period men and women should be in the very prime of their lives. Of the 100,000,-750 will die the first year; then the annual number of deaths will gradually decline to 718 between the ages of 25 and 28, after which they again increase, until at 51 they reach 1,000 per annum; at 60 they number over 1,500; at 66 more than 2,000, and between the ages of 73 and 74 they reach their maximum at 2,500 each year. At 75, there being but 20,000 of the original 100,000 remaining altogether, they commence to decline again. At 80 the number of deaths annually is about 2,-000; at 87 it is less than 1,000. For the benefit of those curious in such matters, the following table may be of interest, the estimate being based upon 100,000 children, of either sex, who have reached the age of 10 years, showing the whole number that will live to the ages mentioned:

90,000	23	5,000	83
80,000	37	2,000	85
70,000	60	1,000	90
60,000	38	500	91
50,000	65	250	92
40,000	70	100	93
30,000	73	25	94
20,000	77	10	95
10,000	82	1	100

The deaths average less than 1 per cent. per annum of the whole number up to the age of 51, although amounting to upwards of 10 per cent. of the number surviving after the age of 41. Thenceforward the annual percentage of deaths increases very rapidly, until at 93 it amounts to nearly the entire number of survivors.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—The weekly visits of THE RESTITUTION I hail with delight; it is, (to use a figure) a trumpet which "gives no uncertain sounds;" here without speaking disparagingly of other periodicals, it is far ahead of any periodical extant, or, at least, of any which I have had the pleasure of perusing. Each correspondent seems to possess a good degree of independence, i. e.: they do not, to use a homely phrase, "pin their faith on another's sleeve," but are enabled "to give to every man that asketh, the reason of their hope with reverence." Although we often regret that such a diversity of opinions exists, yet we greatly rejoice in the fact that soon "the watchman shall see eye to eye," i. e.: when the Lord shall bring again Zion. The time has been when the same difference of belief would produce undue sensitiveness in the minds of many, which now, (I am happy to say,) is fast subsiding; and is it too much to hope that bigotry and intolerance with us, as a people, will wholly cease—be numbered with the things that were? The great improvement, in this respect, for the past few years, I think, fully warrants us in the indulgence of this hope. At any rate we shall do well to cultivate those Christian graces which will enable us to have "an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." We must try "to bear each other's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." Let us be so absorbed in the endeavor to do good as we may have opportunity, that we shall almost forget what different view may still exist. Let our united prayer be, Thy kingdom come, and thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven.

Your brother in Christ, waiting for this glorious event. M. I. LEWIS.

Ed. Restitution:—There are several things I would like to say a word about:

1. As a congregation we continue to meet every Sunday in bible class capacity, having learned much this way, we would commend it to all congregations. We are striving to keep in mind the admonition "let no man take thy crown." Being troubled but not cast down, knowing trouble happeneth to all men believing and hoping that this is one place on the earth that he loves to remember in mercy.

2. I would like you to know that we appreciate you as an editor. Knowing little about the arduous labor of an editor, yet we know this, that it is hard to please all, but especially do we remember your wisdom, your prudence and Christ like disposition in all you said and did in the Freeman case. While the would be embassadors of Christ have said a thousand foolish things, yea, wicked and perverting things, you have spoken forth the word of truth and soberness, speaking neither against them nor Freeman.

3. Sister Virginia Godwin, of the church at Baltimore, has located among us, proving by her walk and conversation that she was worthy of the letter of commendation the brethren of Baltimore gave her.

4. Allow me to communicate the sad news of the death of Hallie Clyde Robb, daughter of G. H. and E. A. Robb, aged sixteen months. Her beautiful form wasted to nothing by six weeks of dreadful suffering, which ended July 31, at 10 p. m. Heb. xi. was read at the grave. O, for the time when death will cease to have the victory. I. P. BITNER.

Sweet, laughing child, the cottage door
Stands free and open now;
But oh, its sunshine gilds no more
The gladness of my brow;
The merry step hath passed away,
Thy laughing sport is hushed for aye.

Thy mother by the door side sits
And listens for thy call;
And slowly, slowly, as she sits
The quiet tear drops fall.
Her little hindering thing is gone,
And undisturbed she may work on.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Change of Government in the World. Part 3.

The holy prophets foretold the change that will be made when the fifth universal empire shall be established in the earth. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, (Father of the age to come), the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isa. ix. 6, 7.

Here we have a double prophecy, one concerning the birth of the King, which is spoken as though it had already come to pass; but the prophecy concerning his reign upon the throne of David, is spoken in the future tense. This shows that the prophet did not expect Jesus to re-establish the throne of David at his first advent. He said of him in another place, "He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows, yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." The prophet speaks farther of his oppression, of his his death, and of the grave where he should be laid. Isa. liii. This shows plainly that Jesus was not to reign King on the earth during the time of his first advent, therefore we look for the second advent of the Messiah for the fulfillment of the latter part of this prophecy. "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old." Amos ix. 11.

"Daniel saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. vii. 13, 14. Daniel saw this vision long before the birth of Jesus, consequently before he ascended up into heaven, which was not until after his death and resurrection, and he gave his charge to his disciples, to preach the gospel (good news of the kingdom) to every creature; "And when he had done talking with his disciples, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 9-11. "Whom he has sat down with his Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. But his time is limited in heaven, and when his time there is fulfilled, "He (God) shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii. 20, 21. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel." 1 Thess. iv. 16. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. xxv. 31. Here is sufficient proof that Jesus the Messiah will leave the heaven where he now is, and return to this earth, then will be the fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy, "Of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judment and justice."

Therefore, as David reigned king over all Israel, so will Jesus reign King over all Israel. Hence the necessity of the twelve tribes of Israel being gathered together. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, the Lord liveth which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but the Lord liveth which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land." Jer. xxiii. 7, 8. "Behold, a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever. And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places." Isa. xxxii. 1, 17, 18. "Unto thy seed (Jesus the King) have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." Gen. xv. 18. Here we have a description of the territory of the kingdom, but his dominion shall reach to the ends of the earth. "The Lord shall be King over all the earth." Zech. xiv. 9. "And princes shall rule in judgment." Isa. xxxii. 1. These are the saints who shall form the cabinet in the Messiah's kingdom, in a resurrected and immortalized state. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 27. Jesus said to his disciples: "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging (or ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28. The Psalmist said: "Let the saints be joyful in glory; let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen (Gentiles) and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written; this honor have all his saints." Psa. cxlix.

Thus we see that the Israelites will be the subjects of the kingdom, and the nations of the whole earth the subjects of his dominion. And Jesus shall reign King over all the earth. And the saints "shall reign kings and priests with him on the earth." Rev. i. 5; v. 10. And Jerusalem, the "city of the great King," is the capital; "and the kings of the earth do bring their honor into it." Rev. xxi. 24.

"And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Isa. ii. 2-4. 'And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which come against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain; (this will cause a famine). And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain; there shall be the plague, wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles." Zech. xiv. 16-19.

So, we have an abundance of prophetic evidence that there will be a change of government in the world, yea, among all nations of the earth. And as we hear of wars, of famines, of distress and of perilous commotions, we may know the time draweth nigh, when Jesus, the King, shall descend from heaven, and build up the throne of David and raise and immortalize the saints, (the church, the Lamb's wife,) who shall "reign kings and priests with him, and shall subdue the nations, and unto him, (the King,) every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess;" "and of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." "For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all." 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26, 28. Then shall John's vision of the "holy city, the New Jerusalem, (or new order of things) come down from God out of heaven." Rev. xxi. 2. Then will the "meek inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Psa. xxxvii. 11. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Rev. xxi. 4.

Let us prepare and watch for this great event that will sutely come to pass, that we may say from the heart, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Amen.

Precious Promises.

"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity."

I wish to say some words to a few dear lambs of our flock who feel that they must soon bow to grief which seems very hard to bear, and, as we must all, sooner or later, bear the same crushing sorrows, let us try to understand whence they come, and why? and so accept them, as to gain wisdom and instruction, hence making them blessings rather than otherwise. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. 2 Cor. iv. 17. I do not expect to give sweet consolation, as is often given to the afflicted, regardless of truth and meaning; but, as I firmly believe, words of truth and soberness.

How often does the human heart feel that God is unjust to cause pain and affliction to our loved ones, when those loved ones seem to us the very embodiment of goodness and perfection? Dear hearts, do you look upon God as a Master who takes delight in creating misery and suffering for some selfish purpose, as most people believe, to draw us to himself? If so, how can you love him? But what gross injustice is often done our great, wise, unerring Creator! I am led to believe, through the revealed word, that God is not the author directly of our pains and sufferings, only as we will through disobedience; but of our joy, happiness and virtue, nor would we divest him of any power, for all power is his, and all wisdom and goodness. Hear what he saith to the Jews, Malachi iii. 7, 10: "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." What might our blessings be, should we return back of every broken law of God, and never break one of them again? Oh, who can doubt but it would be health, happiness and prosperity, never an ache or pain, and no lack of the necessaries of this life, and no death until the shock was fully ripe and ready for the reaper? God's laws are fixed and perfect, and if disobeyed in the least, suffering is the consequence. I will give an instance of broken law which came under my own observation:

A sweet babe sits at its mother's table, so full of health, life and happiness, that it bids fair to live its three score years and ten. It reaches out its hand for some rich pie. "No, no," says fond mamma, "it isn't good for baby," (wisdom); but the little hand is still held out. "Oh, that little hand reaches out so pratilly I must give it some," (weakness); and again, and again, the little hand reaches out and receives the pie. "No more," says mamma sternly; but baby shrieks for more. "There, do take it, and stop your noise," decides mamma angrily. In a few hours baby is very ill. Oh, what pains, what spasms the little one suffers. The mother wrings her hands in anguish. "You must be more calm," says one, looking on; "it is for some good purpose that God afflicts baby thus." "Don't talk to me," says the mother; "it's an unmerciful God that will make such an innocent baby suffer like that." Doctor comes, but the mother does not let him know what she has done, and he cannot account for such a state of things, and leaves a powder, and the case to decide on the morrow, when the disease is more fully developed. On the morrow, however, baby is dead; murdered by its own mother—just as surely as if she had taken a pistol and shot it—save that the pistol shot would have been the most merciful of the two. This little one's stomach was gorged beyond its capacity to digest, with a food, too, that was unfit for older and stronger beings. Inflammation of stomach and bowels set in, and death was the result; nature's laws were disobeyed, and was it not mockery to say God took that little one? It is God's mercy to these little innocents that the breaking of his laws has such a penalty.

And there are thousands of these little innocents sleeping in the tomb to-day who might still live a joy to their parents had not God's laws been broken in one way and another, often through ignorance, but sometimes through such ungarded mothers as the above. Mothers, you will doubtless despise me for telling this truth, but pause for a moment, and see if you cannot recall similar weakness on your own part, or some of your acquaintances, where, if the result has not been death, it has given pain, weakness, and untold suffering for months and years. Some of us suffer for laws broken for generations back, but mothers, are not many of us unwise to-day? Is it not our duty to gain wisdom and understanding before taking upon ourselves so sacred a responsibility? It is in love that I speak these words. Do not trifle with these sacred trusts; be decided. Do not let false love or desire to please the little ones overreach wisdom or their best good. We do not read in Sacred History of the old patriarchs suffering much pain. Rheumatics, were doubtless, unknown. We have no account of this using tobacco in any form. And, my dear fathers and brothers, every quid of tobacco you take, every cigar you smoke, every drop of spirits you drink, you are disobeying the laws of your nature; hence breaking God's laws, and sooner or later, you must suffer the penalty, pain, suffering, and often premature death, besides such a pernicious example before your promising boys. Tobacco has its use as all things else, that a wise Creator has placed here for the good of mankind, and woe to man whenever he makes a bad use of any of God's blessings. But, tobacco, of all things, is not suited to the delicate membranism of the human form without direful consequences.

It is plain to us, that we must suffer the penalties of breaking our country's laws. Is it not equally so in breaking God's laws? I believe it a gross wrong against a wise and provident Father to lay to his charge all these afflictions, trials and deaths, which disobedience to his laws alone bring upon ourselves. A God of such wondrous love and mercy, to snatch away a sweet babe or loving parent for the purpose of chastisement to those left behind, is utterly impossible to the divine nature of our Creator! We do dishonor him. Man, erring man, might take such a course, but the Author of our being, never. We do not, however, doubt his ability to crush the world with a breath, but we do desire to give unto him all glory, honor, majesty and power, and yet so loving and compassionate to the children of men. Such pity for our weaknesses; so ready to help in all our trials and sufferings, even when they are a direct disobedience of his laws. And we must have faith with works. We may plead for one whom our imprudence has placed on a bed of suffering, but if we plead only, our prayers is vain. We must do all in our own power meantime, and in whatever we may ask the Father's help, and when we must, regardless of prayers and efforts, bury the loved one out of our sight, look to heaven and say, "it is well;" for that dear Father knows just what you suffer, and looks down only with pity and compassion, regardless of our errors; and in our grief, desires that we should come with him. Here is where the mistake is often made, that God takes them purposely to bring us unto him. Not so. Sinful indeed, is the heart that flies not to him in the hour of great danger or deep affliction.

I have known persons to take their Bible and read during a severe thunder-storm, who would never touch it in fair weather; and men have been known to call upon God to help in great danger, when only curses were meted out to him at other times. Yes, the vilest sinner is glad of his protecting arm in trouble. But let us, who name his name, draw nearer; ever nearer in our affliction, and they will eventually purify, and make brighter the pure gold of our natures, and the more dross we have taken away here, the better shall we be fitted to enter upon the duties of our new life in the kingdom of our God.

Yours for the truth,
MRS. O. F. HALL.

Adrian, Mich.

"I Am Praying for You."

"I am praying for you," dear ones; you, who have received the truth, and have not yet obeyed. I remember you all at a throne of grace. I feel your need of a Savior. I see your danger. My heart is burdened and cries out for you. You love the truth. You defend the truth. You want others to accept it. You want others to come to Jesus. You show them the way into the fold and rejoice greatly when they enter the door, but you will not go in yourself. You love the doctrine, but you will not be cast in its mold.

You have not yet "died with Christ." You have not "been entombed with him by the immersion into that death." Can you hope to live in the likeness of his resurrection? You have not been emancipated from sin and become bound to God, that you may have in the end, eternal life. You have not presented yourselves to God as if alive from the dead, you have not yet come under favor. "To whom you present yourselves slaves for obedience; his slaves you are to whom you are obedient."

You can only present yourselves in one way. There is but one door into God's fold. Christ is "the way, the truth, and the life." When you are "immersed into Christ, you are clothed with Christ," "you belong to Christ." The promise, that makes alive, is yours; you can account yourselves "living by God, in the anointed Jesus." You no longer "bring forth fruit to death," but have strong confidence, a hope that cannot be shaken. "When Jesus appears, you shall also appear with him in glory."

It is for this "I am praying for you." I want you to come into the service. I want you to lay hold of the hope set before you. I want you to make it secure. I want you to take the whole armor of God. And then, when "the name has been named upon you," when you have "received the adoption of sonship," have taken up your sword, and sworn allegiance to the Prince of the house of David. I want you to fight. I want you to feel that you have begun the race and must run it through to the end. Do not falter.

"Jesus will strengthen and help you,
He will carry you through."

And then, unfading riches, a crown of glory awaits you. You are seeking for food and raiment, and worldly treasures. You are afraid that these would fail, should you cast your lot with the despised soldiers of the cross. But who is it that has said, "I will never leave you, I will never, no, never forsake you?" Cannot you trust him for your daily bread? He commands you "to seek first the kingdom." You seek first the treasures of earth, yet though you gain the whole world and lose the kingdom, you will be poor indeed.

You fear the loss of employment, and for that fear, you throw away "the eternal weight of glory." Better suffer for righteousness sake, better endure the loss of all things, than to lose the future life. "All these things shall be added unto you." God's word will not be broken. Obey, and trust him for the rest.

"I am praying for you," dear young soldiers of the faith. I remember you by name. I pray that you may abide in the doctrine of Christ, "stand up for Jesus," "hold fast the profession of your faith firm unto the end." Keep the commandments of Jesus. Feel that you are the servants of righteousness. Watch and be sober. Your salvation is near at hand.

"I am praying for you," dear bride of Christ. I pray that you may be found blameless when he shall appear. You have been divorced from the world and espoused to Jesus. If you would share in the "might and the glory that is to be his in the ages of the ages, patiently suffer and endure on account of his name. Let no iniquity be found in your hand. No wicked thing dwell [illegible]. Lift up your face without spot unto God. "The end of all things has approached." The secret chambers in the cloudy ether will soon receive the ready ones. The meeting with Jesus will soon be brought about. "Stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel." Be content with food and raiment. It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Jesus and that kingdom are coming. Be ready.

"I am praying for you," dear watchers on the walls. I would hold up your hands. I would give words of encouragement to strengthen you for the fight. If it waxes harder, be more valiant. If others falter, be you strong. Among the crowned ones, bearing palm-branches of peace, will be found some, who once walked the highways and hedges, but who were brought to the light, and were saved through you. Blessed stars will they be in your crowns of rejoicing. Give the trumpet no uncertain sound, that others may prepare for the battle, and that we, who are in the fight, may be encouraged to fight on to the end.

"Be not weary; for the welfare,
Hard and bitter, will soon be o'er,
And the rest will be unbounding
On the green, celestial shore."

The Perihelia Crisis.

An English savan, H. C. Jenkins, Fellow of the British Royal Astronomical Society, concurs with Dr. Knapp in regarding the near approach of the large planets to the sun as causing unusual meteorological and electrical disturbances, sun spots, excessive rains, pafics, plagues, famines, and other terrestrial horrors. "Going back hundreds of years, he says every plague that has swept over Europe is related to these malign planetary influences. He ominously predicts [illegible] and very calamitous times [illegible] till the crisis of 1881 and on, and is confident that this matter will yet come up for thorough investigation by those scholars and scientists competent to handle it. And [illegible] teaching will be found in harmony with prophecy and the Bible.—D. T. T.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPT. 3, 1879.

In order that THE RESTITUTION may make its uninterrupted weekly visits without an occasional suspension, it will be absolutely necessary for all our subscribers to remit as fast as subscriptions become due, as we have no means to publish beyond current receipts. Contributions to our relief fund, from those able to do something extra for the cause, will be very acceptable indeed. If all will be prompt we shall have no embarrassment whatever.

We give, in the present number of THE RESTITUTION one more article from Sr. Rock on being "born again." It was the belief of the Nicodemus, and the Jews generally, that the right and title to the kingdom of God belonged to the lineal descendants of Abraham alone, and that the covenant of heirship was ratified by the rite of circumcision. Our Savior teaches that this fleshly descent does not constitute one an heir of God's heavenly kingdom, but that the heirs of this kingdom must be born from above Greek anothen—to constitute them legitimate heirs. If God's kingdom were merely an earthly kingdom covenanted to Abraham and his posterity according to the flesh, or in the earthly nature, then to be born of the flesh in the line of descent from Abraham would be a privilege indeed. But Christ is talking of heavenly things. A heavenly kingdom is designed for heirs of a heavenly nature; hence fleshly descent, even from the Father of the faithful, profits nothing. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." That kingdom is an "incorruptible, undefiled, unfading" and heavenly inheritance, and its heirs must wear the image of the heavenly, and be made partakers of the incorruptible and immortal nature. It is not the birth of the flesh in the most general acceptation of the expression as pertaining to all mankind, with the concomitant circumstances of parturition, that the Savior alludes to, but a birth to a privileged fleshly line to which the kingdom was supposed to belong as a matter of covenanted right. One to inherit the kingdom of God must have something more to plead than "Abraham is our father." We merely offer these few suggestions, not to take part in the discussion, but to present a point that has been, in the main overlooked. One of the deep things of God is embraced in our Savior's discourse to Nicodemus. May our understanding be opened to understand the Scriptures.

Questions and Answers.

Question 1. Are all the following words translated from the Hebrew word Rakia?

Gen. i. 1.—Heaven.
" i. 6.—Firmament.
" i. 7.— "
" i. 8.—Heaven.
" i. 9.— "
" i. 14.— "
" i. 15.— "
" i. 17.— "
" i. 20.— "
" vii. 7— "

2 Kings ii. 11.—Heaven, Elijah's translation.

Question 2. What Hebrew word is "heaven" in John iii. 13, translated from?

Question 3. Have we any Bible account that Enoch was taken to heaven?

Question 4. As the Bible does not state that Elijah was taken to God's throne, may we not reasonably infer that he was simply caught up in the atmospheric heavens?

Question 5. Are the words "earth" and "land" in Psalms xxxvii. 11, 20, translated from the same word?

Question 6. From how many other Hebrew words is the word "heaven" translated in A. V. of the Old and New Testaments? Name them.

By answering the above questions you will much oblige a brother who is watching and praying for the kingdom soon to come. L. D. C.

ANSWERS TO ABOVE QUESTIONS.

Question 1. The Hebrew word רָקִיעַ Rakia, occurs only seventeen times in the Scriptures, and is rendered into the English by the word firmament in every single instance in the authorized version. It is never rendered heaven.

Question 2. The word in the original Greek of John iii. 13, is ουρανος, an accusative of ουρος—ouranos—and it is translated in the English by the words heaven, air, sky.

Question 3. Enoch, the son of Jared, who was translated, is mentioned only in the following places in the Scriptures: Gen. v. 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24; Luke iii. 37; Heb. xi. 5; Jude 14.

Question 4. The Hebrew word שָׁמַיִם —shamayim—occurring in 2 Kings ii. 11, like the Greek term ouranos above, is translated by the two words heaven and air in every instance but one, Isa. xlvii. 13, when "viewers of the heavens" is translated astrologers. Fowls of heaven, stars of heaven, winds of heaven, waters of heaven, frost of heaven, and dew of heaven (Chaldee form of the word) are examples of the usage of the word. From Isa. lxv. 17, and lxvi. 22, we learn that there are to be new heavens.

Question 5. Yes; both the words are from אֶרֶץ—arets—variously translated earth, land, ground, and country.

Question 6. The Hebrew word גַּלְגַּל galgal—is translated heaven once. Psalms lxxvii. 18. In other places translated wheel. once rolling thing. The word שְׁחָק—shahak—is twice translated heaven, Psalms lxxxix. 6, 37, in all other places translated by the words sky and cloud.

The word עֲרָבָה—arba—is once translated heaven (in the plural) in Psalms lxviii. 4. In almost all other places by the words even or evening, both meaning the same thing.

The word עֲרָפִלִּים—arephim—occurs but once in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is translated heavens. Isa. v. 30.

In the Greek of the New Testament we have besides the word ouranos above, some derivative forms—as ουρανιος—ouranothen—which occurs Acts xiv. 17; xxvi. 13, in both places rendered heaven; and ουρανιος—epouranios—translated heaven in Phil. ii. 20, and in other places heavenly or celestial; and also μεσουρανημα—mesouranema—Rev. viii. 13; xiv. 6; xix. 7, which are all the places of its occurrence, and translated midst of heaven each time.

Although the words occur in different numbers, we have given the singular form in our explanations. Poor health at times, and perplexing cares at others, have delayed our answer to the above questions to the present time. We have given all the words from the original translated heaven, and leave our readers to draw their own conclusions.

The Inter-State Industrial Exposition of Chicago, will commence September 3, and continue to October 18th. All interested in agricultural implements, in machinery, natural history, textile fabrics, the fine arts, and in the beauties of nature as displayed in a fine collection of rare plants and flowers including tropical plants, will be benefited and gratified in the full and varied aggregation to be placed upon exhibition during the Exposition.

The Fittsburgh, Ft. Wayne and Chicago Railway, will give seven Grand Excursions during the Exposition on the following days: September 3, 9, 16, 23, 30, and October 7th and 14th.

The rates for the round trip from Ft. Wayne are $3.00, from Columbia City $2.75, from Pierceton $2.45, from Warsaw $2.25, and from Plymouth $1.90. Proportionally cheap from all other points. Tickets are good to return until Saturday evening, following the excursion, on all trains making regular stops. Some of our friends may wish to visit Chicago, and all such will be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity.

The charge of admission to the Exposition will be twenty-five cents. It is due from us to speak in terms of the highest praise of the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne and Chicago Railway. We have, as a minister of the gospel, enjoyed its courtesies for many years—have traveled over its entire line from Chicago to Philadelphia several times, and have found its official management excellent and its agents and conductors gentlemen.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The New Birth.

When I wrote on the above subject a few months ago I did not intend to trespass upon your space so soon again, but deem it my duty to do so now, if you can allow me the room. I am very glad that my article was read with interest, and thank the brethren who were so kind as to notice it. And I ask them to bear patiently with me, while I point out to them, what seems to me to be very grave mistakes in their positions.

Brother Wm. H. Wilson, in a communication in THE RESTITUTION, July 9th, in writing on this subject, says: "Our dear Lord's language is addressed to men who need salvation, and not to a nonentity which has no existence in fact." He says: "Except a man (not before he becomes a man) be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." In this opinion Brother W. and I perfectly agree. Had the Savior been speaking to a nonentity, he would have said, ye must be born once, and again. But at the time of the conversation, Nicodemus was a full grown, intelligent "master in Israel," to whom the first birth was already an accomplished fact. This being the case, the Savior could not have used plainer or more simple language to convey to the minds of an intelligent inquirer, the necessity of a second birth. "Ye (implying all persons) must be born again."

Again, Brother W. says: "But the Savior explained that the second birth was something higher than the natural—the first—birth, which was a birth of water and spirit, and would culminate in an unending existence in God's kingdom."

Now, I respectfully ask Brother W. if he was born of spirit at his baptism? If so, then his nature was changed, for there cannot be a new birth, and the old nature still retained. Birth means to be brought forth or come into life. Then the thing brought into life, partakes of the nature of that which gave it birth. This is a fact that cannot be refuted, and a fact that we see daily demonstrated before our eyes. "To every seed its own body." The experience of every one who is begotten by the Spirit, if similar to that of the writer is, that though our aims and purposes, and our relation to Christ is changed, when we believe the gospel and are baptized, yet our natures are wholly unchanged.

Whatever sin most easily beset us before our baptism, clings to us after, and it often, yea, very often, requires a whole life time to gain the mastery over these besetments. Now, with these stern facts staring each one of us right in the face, which of us, I ask, can look up to heaven and say, I have experienced spirit birth, or a change of nature?

But, says one, you do not believe in "the washing of regeneration." Yes, dear reader, I do. But I believe the regeneration future, and the salvation also. In the regeneration "The Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory," and the saints will each be given their reward. But Peter says: "Baptism doth also now save us .... by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." True, when we believe and are baptized, we are in the way of salvation; but we are as Peter was when walking on the water, when our faith fails us, we begin to sink. Were we regenerated there would be no danger, no need of watchfulness, no continual conflict as at present. No, no! "We stand by faith."

Again, in THE RESTITUTION of July 30th, Brother H. J. Kendall, says: "That the above text—'Ye must be born again'—refers to a resurrection, is evident. But that it is a spirit birth, I cannot concede for this reason, viz.: Jesus says, John iii. 6: "That which is born of the spirit is spirit." Again, in Luke xiii. 28: "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out." If only those having a spirit birth can see the kingdom, these wicked will be spirit beings. This Scripture, thus applied, proves too much. I understand the expression, "born again," simply to teach a bringing back again into the same life, as at the first birth, only through a different process. "Man came from dust, and goes back to dust; and he will come back, be born again from dust. .... The righteous have two births differing from this as taught in John iii. 5, ... and are prerequisite to entering the kingdom; not to see it only and be left out."

As to Brother K's understanding of "born again," I will simply say, that the Scriptures no where calls mortal life restored, a birth. It is not recorded of Lazarus, nor of the widow's son of Nain, that they were born again, because they were only reanimated, but their natures in no way changed: therefore, it could not be called a birth. As to the correctness of his position on this point, the readers of THE RESTITUTION must decide for themselves.

From his language above on "See the kingdom of God," and his proof text, I understand him to accept "see" in the sense of, to look at, or behold. And he argues that, in order to do that, a person must be raised from the dead. How does this view harmonize with the teachings of the prophets? "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in paths; for out of Zion will go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Isa. ii. 2, 3, also chaps. xi., xxxv.; Jer. xxxiii. 7-26; Ezek. xxxiv. 22-31; xxxvii. 25-28; Micah iv. 1-4.

I might multiply texts to fill the entire paper in proof that mortal men and women will see in the kingdom of God, in the sense of beholding it. But I cannot find a single text that teaches that mortal men in the flesh will inherit it, by right of heirship, therefore, I conclude, the sense in which the Savior used the word "see" is in the sense of to inherit.

Again, Brother K. says: "Now they are new born babes, and can be fed with milk." .... But could not prior to birth. Peter's illustration was drawn from a child that had been born, not in gestation. Now, they are in the same life with their father Paul, and got there in the same way that he did, viz.: By being begotten of the gospel and born of water. .... Now they are sons of God in Christ Jesus. And because they are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying, Abba, Father. In this we have the begetting of the spirit, by the spirit, not the word; for they had believed the word prior to this, and were members of the body of Christ; for this reason God sent forth the spirit of his Son .... And as the scion draws life from the tree into which it is grafted, so they draw life from Christ; and by sowing to the spirit, they develop for the spirit birth, and of the spirit, shall reap life everlasting."

Surely, Brother, this is strange logic! First, a word begetting, after which a water birth, which brings them into filial relationship both to Paul and Jehovah. And then when they sustain the relation of sons, to Jehovah, they are begotten again by the spirit, and after this spirit begetting, they draw life from Christ. How do they draw this life from Christ, brother? They are now only begotten by the spirit, and you say they have to be born before they can be fed with the "milk of the word." Now, what but following the teachings of the word, prepares us for that everlasting life that we shall reap? Deprive these spirit begotten beings of the guidance of the word and you stop their spirit development. Feed them with the "milk of the word" and they continue to grow, daily bringing forth the fruits of the spirit, "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering," and so forth. Gal. v. 22.

Brother K's exposition of 1 Cor. xv. 46, 47, might be admitted if a 40th verse did not follow. But, in this verse Paul emphatically tells his brethren that, "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." If these verses do not teach that believers are first children of the first Adam, having the impress and characteristics of their earthly origin, but having been born of the spirit (either by resurrection or translation) they shall then bear the image and characteristics of the second Adam; it teaches nothing. Yes, yes; we will then, in very truth, be the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Luke xx. 36.

I will notice just one more item and then pass on. He says: "No child in natural birth was ever born of water unless it had two mothers. For they are born of woman, which would be one mother, and if born of water, it would make another mother." If this mode of reasoning is correct, then they who will be born of the spirit, will have two mothers also. For the resurrected spirit body is born of (out of) the earth, just as literally as the child at natural birth, is born of woman.

To Brother Pierce I say, respected brother, you have not answered my questions at all. You simply assert, "And when he comes out of it—the water—it is a birth of, or out of, water into the womb of time for a development of character, for the birth out of death and the grave by the power of the Holy Spirit of God."

Brother, your position necessitates three births in order to an inheritance in the kingdom. Words being signs of ideas, the word birth suggests to the mind the idea of parentage. Now, it is a fact established beyond dispute, that the offspring partakes of the nature of the parent stock. This fact admitted, then the following questions present themselves: If, in order to the obtaining of eternal life, three births are necessary, how do we originate? From whom do we spring? The Bible and reason concur in teaching that two births are necessary. And the Bible is very plain in its teachings, as to the change that must take place in all those who will be so infinitely happy as to experience the second birth. They shall be "made partakers of the divine nature," and "mortality shall be swallowed up of life." But the Bible is entirely silent as to a third parentage, a third birth, or a third nature. Take the simple teachings of the word, and all is plain and clear.

1. We are born of the flesh and are children of the first Adam, and by reason of our relation to him, we are of the earth, earthy.

2. If we hear, believe, and obey the gospel, we are by this means begotten of the spirit, for the word is only the instrumentality employed by the spirit.

Next, this begettal will culminate in spirit birth, to all who prove faithful, till death or translation. "And whosoever liveth, and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" John xi. 26.

It is very true that baptism symbolizes both Adamic death and resurrection life Rom. vi. 4, 5. But it is not in fact a birth, nor do the Scriptures teach any such theory. The Roman Catholic church and several of its Protestant off-shoots do. I was brought up in the Episcopalian church and according to its teachings was told that when I was sprinkled in infancy, I thereby became a "member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven." I believe that by baptism we put on Christ, but we only remain branches of him, the true vine, as long as we bring forth the fruits of the spirit. For "every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away." John xv. 2.

And now, brethren, I respectfully submit the above thoughts for your consideration, and close in the words of brother Wilson, "Let us not be guilty, in taking away the force of God's word." MRS. M. ROCK.

What! What! Has Mrs. E. P. White Turned Age to Come?

In one of her recent communications in The Signs of the Times, we find the following plain and emphatic age to come doctrine: "He (Paul) declared that Christ would come a second time in power and great glory, and establish his kingdom upon the earth, subduing all authority, and ruling over all nations." Vol. v., No. 21.

Stronger age to come doctrine would surely be hard to find, even among its most radical advocates. But what does she mean? What on earth can she mean? Will some of her most skillful expositors explain for her, for, surely, if plain, unvarnished language means anything, they will have a hard task indeed? However, let us in the meantime analyze a little and see if we can understand the natural import of her words: "Christ comes the second time in power and great glory." Now, this can only be at the last trump, at the resurrection of the just, when he comes to gather his jewels, and begin the work of restitution.

Proof: "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Now, this is the very identical "second coming" referred to in the above extract, and cannot possibly apply at the last end of the millennium, as his people will not be looking for him at that time. And more, that would not be the "second," but the "third coming," if you please. Jesus taught, in the most forcible language, the same great and fundamental truth. Please listen to his most solemn and impressive words: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him," Having found, as we trust, the right time for the application of this most singular but true sentiment, we enquire in regard to the object of his coming, she continues thus, "and establish his kingdom upon the earth."

This work of our King is in close connection with his second coming, as he has declared in connection with the above, "then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." As Isaiah declares, "Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Chap. xl. 10. Good old Daniel has it the same way, and at the same time,—"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed."

Now, "this kingdom of God which our faith lays hold on, can only be set up on the earth at his second coming," when there is given to him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages shall serve him "in the days of these kings," while earthly kings are ruling on the earth. Not at the expiration of the millennium, for your theory admits of no earthly rulers at that time, unless it be by a resurrection and reinstatement of wicked dead to former honors, which, to say the least, "is tremendous Orthodoxy." His kingdom, thus established on the earth at his second coming in the near future when his people are looking and expecting him, "he excludes all authority, and rules over all nations." To subdue all human authority, he being seated on his glorious throne at Mount Zion in Jerusalem, the overcomers with him, he sends forth his law and his word therefrom, to the nations of earth, demanding obedience to his righteous mandates. Thus he rules in righteousness the world to come whereof we speak. The same is the day of judgment, for the world, for the nations on the right and on the left; he thus rules over them. In that day men "will learn righteousness." Isa. xxvi. 9; see Micah iv.

The angel message goes forth to all nations, being the age-lasting gospel, saying, "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come, and worship him that made heaven and earth; and the sea, and the fountains of waters." While the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee, shall perish, "be utterly wasted;" shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, as proclaimed in the third message. Thus the most grand and heaven-born doctrine of the age to come shines out most gloriously, being abundantly taught, both in and out of the Bible. The same will be an age (the crowning age) of mercy and judgment for the nations of earth, which forms the ground work of the gospel as preached by the great God to father Abraham. Do you believe the gospel? Look well, as it is God's power or plan of salvation. He that believeth not shall be damned. "Christ sets up his kingdom on the earth, at his second coming, subdues all authority, and rules over all nations." Hail, happy day; may it soon dawn on our dark and wicked world. Poor sinner, will you believe and obey? Look and live, for why will you die?

The Western North Carolina Conference.

It is not my place or purpose to write a report, but simply give it a passing notice in connection with the good work that is being done in this section of the country; the conference was a success, was well attended and harmonious throughout. Brother Salts, the secretary, will give a succinct report of the doings of the conference. The truth is spreading, the word is preached, men and women hear the good news; believe and obey it, and are added to the One Body, and are endeavoring to walk in newness of life before God and the world. The good work that has been so far accomplished and is still in progress is to us a matter of thanksgiving with humble gratitude to our heavenly Father, through his Son our Savior, Advocate, and Redeemer. The administration of the word has been plain and pointed and emphatic, no lowering down the truth to please the fancies of men; the result so far is very satisfactory, and indeed gratifying. Five or six preachers from the Baptist Church, one from the Methodist, all with the harness on, doing battle for the truth; several congregations have been set in order, two houses for worship have been built, another in course of erection. Brother Anderson, our evangelist is doing good and efficient work. Brother Lyda is an able proclaimer of the truth, a workman that need not be ashamed. Among the other good things we still have strong opposition; this was in the programme when we enlisted under the banner of our soon coming Lord and King. What an age we are living in; do we realize it, as one writer very forcibly expresses it, viz. I had rather be a proclaimer of the truth now than at other times in the world's history; how the evidences accumulate and the signs multiply, they all center in one grand focal point, the kingdom and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. This was the motive the Apostles held out to induce men to repent. This is the only Scriptural inducement we can offer to the dying children of men in these last moments of Gentile time. What mighty interests crowd upon the present and the immediate future! do we realize our present position; happy indeed is such a people, watching and waiting for the coming of the Just One. Dearly beloved of like precious faith, a few more trials and the conflict will be ended, and an abundant entrance will be administered into the everlasting kingdom. May we be found unto the praise and honor and glory at the Revelation of Jesus Christ, is the prayer of an humble servant of Jesus Christ. NEWELL BOND.

Editor Restitution: Friends, through the kindness of Bro. D. T. Halstead, I have been favored with the perusal of THE RESTITUTION for the last eight or nine months, and it has become so dear a visitor that we cannot get along without it. Cotton is our chief dependence for money, and until that comes into market, this section is short of currency, hence I have not been able to send you any money before, and not enough now, but all that circumstances will allow. I hope to extend its circulation, but it has mountain barriers of prejudice to overcome ere success in arousing anything like a general awakening to the truth in this quarter. I have been a Bible reader for thirty years, but it is a new book to me now. Many scales have fallen from my eyes, and I see now not as before; what I saw darkly, appears a stream of living light. O that all my friends and acquaintances would read THE RESTITUTION and hearken to the "still small voice."

Let it go forth to the world a beacon light, till the coming of our King and Savior, Jesus of Nazareth, is the hope and prayer of Your's,

J. F. SLADE.

P. S. Give our love to Bro. Halstead if you meet. We would have written to him, but were looking for him all summer. He ought to write to us.

POETRY.

Beginning Again.

When sometimes our feet grow weary
On the rugged hills of life—
The path stretching long and dreary
With trial and labor rife—
We pause on the toilsome journey,
Glancing backward in vain'y and glee,
And sigh with an infinite longing
To return and begin again.

For behind is the dew of the morning,
In all its freshness and light,
And before are the doubts and shadows,
And the chill and gloom of the night.
We remember the sunny places
We passed so carelessly then,
And ask, with a passionate longing,
To return and begin again.

Ah, vain indeed is the asking!
Life's duties press all of us on.
And who dare shrink from the labor,
Or sigh for the sunshine that's gone?
And if may be, not far on before us,
Wait fairer places than them,
Life's paths may yet lead by still waters,
Though we may not begin again.

For evermore upward and onward
Be our paths on the hills of life,
And soon with a radiant dawning
Transfiguring the toil and the strife,
And our Father's hand will lead us
Tenderly upward then;
In the joy and peace of a fairer world
He'll let us begin again.

SELECTIONS.

[Bible Banner.]

Love.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." 1 Cor. 13: 13.

Charity, or love, is that disposition of heart which inclines man to think favorably of his fellowmen, and to seek to do them good. In presenting this subject, I will observe the following order:

1. The love of the Father.
2. The love of the Son.
3. The love of the Brethren.
1. The law of the Father.

The greatest exhibition of love the world has ever witnessed was manifested by God in the gift of His Son. "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Jno. 3: 16. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. 5: 8. "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." 1 John 4: 9, 10; Rom. 8: 32. God is the embodiment of love. "God is love," 1 John 4: 16. All His acts are acts of love. God's love "is free as the air, full as the ocean, boundless as eternity, immutable as His throne, and unchangeable as His nature." This love seeks not for immaterial and imperishable men, (for such do not exist,) but for material (Gen. 2: 7; 3: 17-19; Job 34: 14, 15; Psa. 103: 14) and perishable beings; (John 3: 14-16; Luke 13: 1-5;) and, with the beneficence of its Author, strives to win them to a life of purity and self-denial, culminating in "eternal life." The priceless boon of "eternal life" is now offered the "mortal man" (Job 4: 17) upon conditions of faith and obedience. Rom. 2: 4-7; 6: 21-23. And all this, too, through the Father's "great love wherewith He loved us." Eph. 2: 4. His love is "an everlasting love." Jer. 31: 3. Nothing can separate us from the changeless love of God. "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Rom. 8: 38, 39. O, boundless Love! Who can measure thy unfathomable depth, or ascend to thy lofty height? The heart throbs with gratitude as we contemplate God's love, in its plenitude, embracing the race.

"Were the whole earth a parchment made,
And every man a scribe by trade;
Should we with ink the ocean fill,
And every stick turn to a quill;
To write the love of God to man,
Would drain the ocean dry;
Nor could the scroll contain the whole,
Though stretched from sky to sky."

2. The love of the Son.

The love of the Son is as fervent and constant as that of the Father. "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you." John 15: 9. "The love of Christ...passeth knowledge." Eph. 3: 19. It is a constraining love. "For the love of Christ constraineth us." 2 Cor. 5: 14. "Having loved His own ....He loved them unto the end." John 13: 1. Nothing can separate us from the indissoluble love of Christ. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" Rom. 8: 35. Christ manifested his love by praying for his enemies. For those who persecuted and crucified him, he prayed: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Luke 23: 34. Oh! what a heart of sympathy and forgiveness is here brought to view. No wonder that God selected His Son as earth's moral hero for mankind to emulate. We behold love exhibited in the mission of Christ to earth. He came "to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke 19: 10. He "loved me, and gave himself for me." Gal. 2: 20, 1: 4. Eph. 5: 2. Titus 2: 14. "Christ died for the ungodly." "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. 5: 6, 8. He "loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." Rev. 1: 5. Christ's love was exemplified at the grave of Lazarus. When told to "come and see" where they had laid him, "Jesus wept." John 11: 35. Tears of love and sympathy fell from his face as he approached the grave. "Behold how he loved him!" was the exclamation of the Jews. Not only at the grave of Lazarus, but also as he approached Jerusalem he "wept over it," in view of its destined calamities. Luke 19: 41-44. His mission was a mission of love and mercy. Love was the underlying current of all his actions. His healing the sick, unstopping deaf ears, restoring sight to the blind, and life to the dead, were but continued exhibitions of his love and miraculous power.

3. The love of the brethren.

Having now contemplated "the love of God," and also "the love of Christ," let us inquire if there is not a duty incumbent upon us who are the recipients of such munificent love. Such demonstrations of unmerited love are well calculated to excite love in return. It should be reciprocated with hearts fired with zeal for him who "first loved us." The first and great commandment is this: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Matt. 22: 37-39. Such love is better than "burnt offerings and sacrifices." Mark. 12: 30-33. Love is "the fruit of the Spirit," as well as "joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Gal. 5: 22, 23. How necessary then, that we manifest love, both to God and man, since it holds such a prominent place in the constellation of Christian graces that secure for us the approval of "the God of love." 2 Cor. 13: 11. Love holds no second place in the cluster of cardinal virtues. There is not a brighter ornament to the youthful or the aged than a loving disposition, "even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." 1 Pet. 3: 4. This love produces joy. "Let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice, because thou defendest them; let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee." Psa. 5: 11. It produces hatred to evil. "Ye that love the Lord, hate evil." Psa. 97: 10. Love to God and and His Son should be supreme. Matt. 10: 37; 22: 37. Obedience is the test of love. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." John 14: 15, 21, 23. Not "the commandments of men," (Matt. 15: 9,) but of Christ. "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." 1 Sam. 15: 22. The Lord has promised "the crown of life" to them that love Him. James 1: 12. If we would obtain this glorious boon we must be "faithful unto death." Rev. 2: 10. Love is perfected through obedience. "Whoso keepeth His word, in him verily is the love of God perfected." 1 John 2: 4, 5; 4: 17, 18. God will then preserve us, when the wicked are destroyed. "The Lord preserveth all them that love Him; but all the wicked will he destroy." Psa. 145: 20. "All things work together for good to to them that love God." Rom. 8: 28. We should not only love God and His Son, but we should also "love one another with a pure heart fervently." 1 Pet. 1: 22. We "are taught of God to love one another." 1 Thess. 4: 9. Love to the brethren is as necessary as love to God. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth His brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not His brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from Him, that he who loveth God love his brother also. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love," 1 John 4: 8, 11, 20, 21. "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother. For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. Let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." 1 John 3: 10, 11, 15, 18. This love is manifested by deeds of kindness. Verse 17. Love to self should be the measure of love to others. Mark 12: 33. Rom. 13: 9. "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Rom. 13: 10. Gal. 5: 14. James 2: 8. Love is not only "good and pleasant," it is a "bond of perfectness" and union. Psa. 133: 1, 2. Col. 2: 2; 3: 14. Love is necessary to happiness. "Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith." Prov. 15: 17; 17: 1. Supernatural gifts, or the greatest sacrifices, are nothing without love. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." 1 Cor. 13: 1-3. We should "follow after charity" in view of its excellency. "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." 1 Cor. 13: 4-7. "And above all things have a fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover a multitude of sins." 1 Pet. 4: 8. Though prophecies fail, tongues cease, and knowledge vanish away, "Charity never faileth," 1 Cor. 13: 8. Though faith shall give place to reality, and hope be turned to sight, love will continue through the endless cycles of a blissful eternity, for "God is love." 1 John 4: 8. As Christ is our "example," let us emulate him in the "labor of love" assigned us now, so "that when he shall appear" we may "be like him" in incorruptibility and spotless purity. 1 John 3: 2, 3. We may then bask in the shoreless ocean of God's love, and behold the crowning glories of earth redeemed.

"Could I command with voice or pen,
The tongues of angels and of men;
A tinkling cymbal, sounding brass,
My speech and preaching would surpass;
Vain were such eloquence to me
Without the grace of charity.

"Could I the martyr's flame endure,
Give all my goods to feed the poor—
Had I the faith from Alpine steep
To hurl the mountain to the deep—
What were such zeal, such power to me
Without the grace of charity?

"Could I behold with prescient eye
Things future, as the things gone by—
Could I all earthly knowledge scan,
And mete out heaven with a span—
Poor were the child of grits to me
Without the choicest—charity.

"Charity suffers long, is kind—
Charity bears a humble mind—
Rejoices not when ill befall,
But glories in in the weal of all;
She hopes, believes, and envies not,
Nor vaunts, nor murmurs o'er her lot.

"The tongues of teachers shall be dumb,
Prophets discern not things to come;
Knowledge shall vanish out of thought,
And miracles no more be wrought;
But charity shall never fail—
Her anchor is within the veil.

Ravages of the Plague—What Mankind Suffered in the Fourteenth Century.

If we glance at the history of the frightful devastations that have marked the visits of the plague to the earth, mankind has reason to tremble before the dread specter whose appearance the Russians evoked on their pleasure trip to Constantinople, and which now threatens all Europe. Plague epidemics are recorded of almost every century. In the first year of the Peloponnesian war the plague raged with terrible violence in Athens, and Greece's greatest statesman at that time, Pericles, was one of its victims.

But not until the fourteenth century did it become a scourge to the entire world, traveling as it did then from the eastern boundaries of Asia through China, India, and Russia, and punishing with equal severity the inhabitants of the Pyrenean peninsula and the hardened people of Scandinavia and Iceland. And if the western hemisphere had been discovered at that time, and active communication and traffic with it had existed, there can be no doubt that the grim destroyer would have visited America also. It is, indeed, by no means certain but that the plague did reach this continent, since there are Indian legends which speak of a time of great mortality long before the advent of Europeans.

It is estimated that not less than 52,000,000 persons fell victims to the black death in Asia and Europe toward the middle of the fourteenth century. Of these, 15,000,000 are supposed to have perished in Europe, 24,000,000 in Asia Minor, India, and the adjacent countries, and 13,000,000 in China. One historian writes concerning the appearance of the plague in Europe: "Terrible omens in the heavens overwhelmed the nations with dread. In 1337 a large comet appeared; in following years came immense multitudes of locusts; but in 1348 the end of the world seemed at hand. An earthquake devastated Cyprus. Greece, Italy and the Alpine valleys. Mountains cayed in. In the province of Carnithen, in Austria, thirty villages and a town were utterly destroyed. The atmosphere became thick, fetid, and confusing. Wine became turbid in the barrels. Fiery meteors illuminated the sky. A pillar of fame was seen over the papal palace at Avignon. These terrors were followed by a murderous plague. It originated in China, was carried through the whole of Asia, and in Germany received the name of the "Black Death," because it covered its victims suddenly with black pustules, and often killed them instantaneously. It spread over the whole of Europe, and it is said that it did not rage most virulently in Germany. Nevertheless 13,000 persons died in Basle, 16,000 in Strasburg, and the same number in Erfurt; and they perished in all other places in similar proportions. In Osnabruck only seven families are said to have survived.

For twenty-five years the awful epidemic maintained its annihilating sway, while at the same time droughts, famines, floods, and earthquakes destroyed city and country, and vast swarms of locusts everywhere indicted the direst ravages. Meantime the whole order of nature seemed reversed. In midwinter the severest rains were experienced, and in summer long-continued and severe frosts, and volcanoes that had been long thought extinct opened their craters anew.—Baltimore Correspondent.

NEWS ITEMS.

MEMPHIS, Ten., Aug. 30.—Thirty-eight cases in all—twenty-one white, and seventeen colored—were reported by the board of health. Ten deaths have occurred. The number of new cases reported for the week was 171—white 87; colored 84. Total to date 848. Total number of deaths from yellow fever for the week, 61; total number to date 228.

Aug. 31.—Twenty new cases—seven white and thirteen colored—were reported to the board of health to-day.

Sept. 1.—Eight new cases—seven white and one colored—were reported to the board of health this morning.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 31.—Lydia Hood died last night. The other child is very sick. It has been raining since noon. General Hood was buried yesterday afternoon. Only a few friends of the family and a delegation of the Association of the Army of the Tennessee attended the funeral. At the cemetery, however, the cortege was received by a detachment of the Continental Guards, under Captain Pearce, who fired a salute over the grave. One case of fever was reported by the board of health to-day—George Cotton, aged 4, taken sick August 27.

MADRID, Aug. 26.—The Spanish government has announced that all vessels arriving at Spanish ports, after Aug. 28, from the Southern States of North America, must undergo quarantine.

There is likely to be serious trouble between Spain and England. At last accounts England was moving to get a foothold in Morocco, with the design as is believed, of annexing it to her dominions. British troops had landed at Tangiers, and were fortifying. This occasions great excitement in Spain, which is exceedingly jealous of England's power in the Mediterranean.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Lloyd's agent at Yokohama telegraphed, under date of Aug. 25, that the steamship Nordenskjold, supposed to be the storeship for the Nordenskjold arctic expedition, has been totally lost. The crew were saved.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—A renewal of the floods is reported from various parts of England and Wales. Reports of the harvest are daily more deplorable. At several places there has been thirty hours' steady and continuous rain.

Editor Restitution: Since my last report to the paper, I have visited Remington, Wolcott and Burnetsville. While at Remington three obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered, and were immersed into the Christ, one of them was a lady from Elkhart county and from the town of Goshen. She was on a visit at her sister's, and while there she and sister Lucilda visited Brother Ball, and she was taught the way of the Lord by Brother Ball, and concluded to stay until my meeting, and did so. Then after the meeting was over went on her way rejoicing, to tell the good news to her friends at home. May the Lord bless her and save her in his everlasting kingdom. I had a good meeting at Wolcott on last there. We have a few faithful ones in that place. I also had a good meeting near Burnetsville. There is a good field there to sow the good seed of the kingdom. I visit them some time this fall again. Dear brethren, let us all be up and doing, and let us keep ourselves from the world. I greatly fear there is too much mixing up with the world by some of the dear ones. O let us come out and stay out. The Lord is at hand.

DIED.

PERRY—Of typhoid fever, at Galesburg, Michigan, Aug. 16, sister Martha E. Perry, wife of brother Horace L. Perry, and daughter of brother and sister W. H. Knapp, aged twenty-five years.

Sister Perry was a faithful daughter, a loving wife and an affectionate friend, and was very much esteemed by relatives and acquaintances, and her early death is deeply lamented. The writer attended the funeral and spoke to a good audience of sympathizing friends and neighbors. The subject was the consolation offered by the gospel to those who mourn the death of Christian friends. The text was 1 Thess. iv. 18: "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." These words refer to verses 13-17, from which we extracted the blessed consolation that those who die in the Lord shall live again when he shall come, and shall be forever with him.

R. MILLER.

LLOYD—Aug. 15, 1878, at Belsano, Cambria county, Pa., of consumption, sister Kate K. Lloyd, aged twenty-eight years and twenty-four days.

Our dear sister was a member of the little band of believers at Dixon, Ill., and had failing health for a few years previous to her death. In this condition she was advised by her physicians to go east for her health. She started about two months ago, hoping to regain a part of her health at least, as she had been largely benefited on two similar visits. The dear letters that once in a while found their way to the waiting hearts at home did not betray her real condition, for her unselfish heart did not wish to distress the friends at home. A telegram came at last telling that our absent one was very low, and desiring the immediate presence of her only brother, who had but just started, when another telegram came announcing her death. By the blessing of God the brother was assisted to meet the beloved remains at Pittsburg. Here the body was embalmed, so that her friends were permitted to look again upon the dear familiar face ere we laid it away to await the touch of a divine hand. Our sister sleeps in Jesus, and all such we are assured will God bring with him. Let us comfort one another with this thought while we wait and watch and pray, that we may meet our loved one then.

Dixon, Ill. ALICE J. KERR.

POETRY.

Eternally.

L. M. BURGESS.

Dear Lord, if I could be
More worthy Thee!
If I could only come
And find my home
Within Thy smile
A little while.
Only a little while,
I could,—oh, purer roam,—
But closer come,
And clearer live to Thee
Eternally.

Dear Lord, if it might be
That I for Thee
Something might do to prove
My faith and love,
Then at the evening gate
Of heaven I'd wait,
For Thy dear footsteps wait
And watch, nor ever rove;
With perfect love
Filled I would be Eternally.

Dear Lord, oh, let me be Faithful to Thee!
Lift me and place me where
In grief or care—
In sorrow's darkest night
I'll feel the light,
And feel Thy love is bright—
Thy presence ever near
And ever dear,
And loyal be to Thee
Eternally.

LETTER IX.

Reasons which prevent me from returning to the Papal Church continued.—Purgatory.—Transubstantiation.

My Dear Sir,—I will proceed with the statement of the reasons which prevent me from returning to the pale of your church. I have reached my fifth reason, your teaching for doctrines of divine authority the commandments of men. I entered upon the illustration of the way in which you do this in my last, and, without ending my illustrations, ended my letter. Permit me to state a few more for your candid consideration.

The doctrine of Purgatory is one of the peculiar doctrines of your church. You teach that nearly all Christians, when they die, are "neither so perfectly pure and clean as to exempt them from the least spot or stain, nor yet so unhappy as to die under the guilt of unrepented deadly sin." It is for these middling Christians that you make a Purgatory, where they remain until they make full satisfaction for sin, and then they go to heaven. And the "Profession of Faith" of Pius IV. tells us that "the souls therein detained are helped by the suffrages of the faithful—that is, by the prayers and the alms offered for them, and principally by the holy sacrifice of the Mass." And the doctrine of your church is so expounded upon this matter, that but few, if any, die, however good, without needing purgatorial purification; and that but few are so bad but that they may be there fitted for heaven. This, you will admit, is a fair statement. The more you get into Purgatory, the more you will receive of the "suffrages of the faithful"—that is, of their money.

I have already told you my estimate of this doctrine. It is that by which your church trades in the souls of men, and an amazingly profitable trade it makes of it. It has placed in your possession riches far exceeding in value the mines of Peru; and because of the value of this doctrine, you seek in all possible ways to sustain it. With me the authority of your popes and councils is not worth a penny. I would rather have one text of Scripture bearing upon the point than the testimony of as many such as you could string between here and Jupiter. Let us, then, look at the chief texts adduced to sustain a Purgatory.

One of these texts in Matt. xii. 32: "Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come." In Matt. v. 26, is another: "Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing." Both these, you say, refer to Purgatory. From the one you conclude that sins may be forgiven in the next world; from the other, that none can get out of Purgatory till the last farthing is paid. Now, dear sir, let me ask you how you put these texts together? If sins are forgiven, how or why is payment also required to the last farthing? Can I forgive a debt, and yet require its payment? Look at the first text again; you find Purgatory idea to know? In this way: because there is a sin which will not be forgiven in this world nor in the world to come, therefore there is a sin that will Such is the in the world to come! Because a certain infallible Rome! given here or hereafter not to be forgiven will be forgiven before many because "this world" and "the and to come" is inclusive of all time and place, popery builds up a place which usage of the words to this world nor to the world to come, and fills it with fire, and calls it Purgatory! Like Mohammed's coffin, it floats somewhere between heaven and hell. Into this world of fire you drive the souls of men as they leave the body, and let them out only on the reception of "the suffrages of the faithful"—that is, their money! Now, sir, what do you say to all this? Is it not too bad?

But, you ask, are there not other texts quoted by our writers to sustain Purgatory as a Scriptural institution? Oh, yes; they are as far from the point as the most vivid imagination can well conceive. They are by the diameter of the heavens farther from the point than those just quoted. Let any intelligent man read chapter xiv., of Challoner's "Catholic Christian," and he will rise from it with amazement that God could ever leave men to the folly of so perverting Scripture, or that even the devil could permit them so absurdly to misapply it, as absurdity does not always suit his purpose. Permit me to quote an instance by way of illustration. We are taught in Matt. xii. 36, that we must give an account for every idle word in the day of judgment. Now, how does this text prove a Purgatory? In this wise: "No one can think that God will condemn a soul to hell for every idle word; therefore there must be a Purgatory to punish those guilty of these little transgressions." If you or any mortal man think I am joking, turn to the chapter. Let me quote the answer in full to the question, "Are not souls in Purgatory capable of relief in that state?" "Yes, they are, but not for anything that they can do for themselves, but from the prayers, alms, and other suffrages offered to God for them by the faithful upon earth, which God in his mercy is pleased to accept of by reason of that communion which we have with them by being fellow-members of the same body of the church, under the same head, which is Jesus Christ." Now, sir, if in this answer you substitute the word "priest" for "God," then we come to the facts in the case. The "alms" and the other "suffrages of the faithful" are pocketed by the priest; and Purgatory was invented for the special purpose of securing these alms and other suffrages of the faithful to Pope, prelates, and priests.

Now sir let me ask you a few questions. Perhaps I have asked you too many already, but you will bear with a fellow-countryman, anxious, not so much to embarrass you, as to bring out the truth. What has the blood of Christ, which cleanses from all sin, to do with the venial sins of those middling Christians who die, not good enough to go to heaven, nor bad enough to go to hell? What has the blood of Christ, his atonement, his finished work, at all to do, on your plan, with the saving of the sinner? If my child should die and go to Purgatory, would a thousand dollars given to you at once have the same effect as a hundred dollars a year for ten years? How can you tell when enough is given to get the soul out, or has your purse no bottom? As souls are spirits without bodies, how can you tell one soul from another as they issue from the gates of Purgatory? In the prayer "Hail Mary!" we are made to utter at its conclusion the following petition: "Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now and at the hour of our death." Why not solicit her to pray for us after our death, to get us out of Purgatory? Is it because you are afraid the good woman would get us out before the priests had gotten enough of the "alms and suffrages of the faithful?"

My dear sir, the absurdities connected with your doctrine of Purgatory are sickening. It is based on the love of money. The Bishop of Air candidly confesses that it is not revealed in the Scriptures. It came into the church in the seventh century, it was affirmed in the twelfth, it was stereotyped at Trent, and fearful anathemas are hurled at all who deny it. It puts away the work of Jesus Christ, and sends the sinner not to "the blood of sprinkling," but to the fire of Purgatory, in order to secure a meetness for heaven. And why this parody—this caricature of the religion of God? Simply to put "the alms and suffrages of the faithful" in the pockets of your priests! What an outrage upon the common sense of the world to have men, dressed up in canonicals, teaching things as true of which the beast that Balaam rode might well be ashamed, and all, all for the sake of money!

I entreat you, my dear sir, to review this doctrine of your church. You surely must see its absurdity. Neither in the word of God, nor in the common reason of man, is there the shadow of an argument to sustain it; nor is there a class of men upon the face of the earth who deserve a Purgatory more richly than those for whom you have made one. Let them out only on the reception of "the suffrages of the faithful"—that is, their money! Now, sir, what do you say to all this? Is it not too bad?

But, you ask, are there not other texts quoted by our writers to sustain Purgatory as a Scriptural institution? Oh, yes; they are as far from the point as the most vivid imagination can well conceive. They are by the diameter of the heavens farther from the point than those just quoted. TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

And Examine the Label on Your Paper.

A word to those persons who have been receiving the paper right along and have sent no money for it, for 12, 18, or 24 months: You are delinquent, in all probability, and by looking at the label on your paper you can see just how much behind you are. For instance, if your date is 1 Jun 9, that means your subscription expired June 1, 1879, in that case you are delinquent three months, and so any date can be understood, Jny. means January, Feb. February, Mar. March, and so on through. We are acquainted with perhaps one out of every twenty-five persons who take the paper, the other twenty-four we are obliged to trust with our eyes shut. Now if you wish the paper and it is inconvenient for you to pay for it at present, send a postal card stating so, and you can have more time. If you do not want the paper longer please pay for the time you have had it and have it discontinued, but if you do not pay for it just spend one cent for a postal card and tell us to discontinue. You will receive this paper and one more, and if you do not answer, your name will be removed from the list.

To those who have asked for further time, your request shall be complied with, but we hope you will be as prompt as possible, as THE RESTITUTION needs the money.

To those who have upheld the paper during its stay at Plymouth and for years before, we would say, the Editor tenders you his heartiest thanks, as do also all who are connected with the paper, and may Christ reward you at his coming is the wish of Renderings Somewhat Changed from the King James Translation of the Sacred Writings.

Phil. i. 23: "Depart." The original is analuo, and signifies returning.

Isa. xiii. 21: "Satyr," or demons shall dance. The Hebrew word, here rendered "satyr," in our version, signifies a goat; it was a vulgar opinion that demons or evil spirits, were used of old times to appear in the shape of goats, or in the form of some hairy creature, and that they were wont to have their haunts in forlorn and desolate places. This may account for the vulgar representation of a personal devil with horns, and hoofs, and hair, but with a tail quite unlike a goat!

Matt. v. 22: "Without a cause" is wanting in the Vulgate, Arabic and Ethiopic.

Mark viii. 24: I see men whom I distinguish from trees, only by their walking.

Eccl. viii. 8: No man hath power over the wind, to retain or shut up the wind; neither is there power in the day of death, (viz., to prevent it), come when it will. Neither is there dismission in war, because no one knows when it will be ended. Neither shall wickedness deliver its masters, because the success of wicked men is absolutely precarious, and their unjust acquisitions are oftentimes taken from them. The design of the royal preacher here, is plainly to represent the uncertainty of all things; and our translators have quite mistaken the sense of the verse.

Rev. xix. 10: "The spirit of prophecy is the testimony concerning Jesus."

1 Thess. v. 23: "Spirit, soul and body." This is an allusion to Greek philosophy, and it was the belief, or opinion of most of the sects, that spirit, soul and body, were the constituent parts of man; and this opinion was familiar to the Thessalonians.

Heb. vi. 2: "The doctrine of Immersions," i. e., the Jewish washings. Laying on of hands, i. e., on beasts: such as were offered in sacrifice. Raising of dead persons, e.g. The Shunamites son and others. And of ancient punishment, i. e., the deluge, etc.

The following passages are altered by a different punctuation, and, to my mind, enforce with greater emphasis:

Matt. vi. 28: How do they grow?

Matt. xxvi. 45: Do ye sleep on now and take your rest?

Matt. xxvii. 42: He saved others, cannot he save himself?

Mark vii. 9: Do ye well to reject the commandments of God?

Luke xvii. 18: Are there none found who returned to give glory to God except this stranger?

Luke xix. 22: Didst thou know I were an austere man?

Luke viii. 15: But by the good soil are meant those, who, having heard the word, retain it in good and honest hearts, and persevere in bringing forth fruit.

John vii. 28: Do ye know me, and whence I am?

John viii. 45: Is it because ye cannot give ear to my word?

John xi. 49, 50: Are ye so entirely ignorant, and do ye not consider, that it is expedient, etc.?

John xi. 56: What think ye? will he not come to the feast?

John ix. 27: He answered them, I have told you already, did ye not hear?

Acts xi. 17: What was I, could I withstand God?

Acts xii. 15: And they said unto her, art thou mad?

Matt. xix. 28: Verily, I say unto you, that ye who have followed me, shall, in the renovation, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, also sit upon twelve thrones.

Eph. i. 5: Having predestinated in love, to the adoption of children, etc. The pointing of this passage, by connecting the phrase "in love," with the 5th verse, avoids the ambiguity of the collocation adopted by our translators, and is supported by the punctuation of Griesbach. Beza also has a note on this.

Matt. xix. 4: He who made (or created) at the beginning, made a male and a female, (i. e., only one of each sex), to show that adultery and polygamy are contrary to his intention in creating man. See Mal. ii. 15.

These punctuations are made by Thomas Wemyss, published in England in a book titled "Biblical Cleanings."

Editor Restitution:—I have copied the foregoing from notes, in an old and highly valued Bible of mine which I have with me; and, to-day, being on the Mississippi, between St. Louis and St. Paul, and being away from home, and having its happy associations crowd themselves upon me, being deprived of Christian fellowship, etc., I present you my loving regards, and if you consider them (the quotations) worth publishing, they may aid some learner as they did me many years ago, thus, by the press, well styled "the art preservative of all art," we are enabled to pass the lighted torch from one to the other.

Thus far "up stream" I have greatly enjoyed myself in various ways, sometimes reading, then talking, then writing, then looking forth on this ancient river—our Nile—and then having suggested to me by the quiet flow thereof, of the peace that flows as a river—such as this. How delightful it is to have God ever before us, not simply as a Power, but as One who delights to dwell with those who love and tremble at his word! And what a sweet peace there is in the witnessing spirit that we are his—his by the adoption of love! "We know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." This brings a thought to me! How many there are who forsake the assembling with God's people, when they can, and should, who have no idea of the loss every way, until deprived as I am this day; it is even so in the matter of health; how unprized this boon is until deprived thereof. I once heard it remarked of one who was forever finding fault with this world, and doing nothing to improve it, "Did you ever see a better?" "No," was the answer, to which was added, "and I don't think such as you deserve to!" Unconsciously it may be, some persons are constantly making whips by which they shall be whipped, and they go through life only sowing thorns, and being goaded therewith, because of a lack of appreciation of the numberless blessings with which their daily lives are crowded.

Mr. Talmage, the man after whom so many run, uttered a thought which has done me good. The occasion was a Thanksgiving discourse; his tabernacle was admirably and harmoniously adorned with the fruits of this earth, and, to illustrate, among other things, what we should be thankful for, he held up an apple, tinged with the flush of beauty, as the sun had kissed it; and holding this up to an admiring five thousand, said: "Did you ever thank God for apples?"

In passing through the fields, some of which are ready for harvest—the waving corn, the delicately hued peach, the abundant hay crop,—one blade of which man is incompetent to make!—abundant cause, surely, for gratitude to him who not only paints the lily and all flowers, but who causes them to grow, that our senses may all find gratification. "Consider the lilies of the valley, how do they grow?"

These questionings, and want of information, will all be met some day, and that which is now mysterious, shall no longer be so. Lord, hasten this day! Let the sun of righteousness soon beam forth in all the effulgent glory, that shall know no diminution, but increase, until earth shall no longer lie under the curse of thorns and thistles, but shine forever as the home of the redeemed from one end of earth, even to the other end.

Thoughts.—A few in a Thousand.

I see in THE RESTITUTION many good things. Many articles may be too long, although in rare cases, extraordinary length may be tolerated, as in the interesting dissertation from the Rainbow on the "Spirits in Prison." But readers who have access to various papers, and cannot read everything and are obliged to discriminate, when they see a six or eight column article, are apt to throw it entirely aside, with the mental ejaculation, "this is too large to tackle," unless a glance at the topic and the course of treatment discloses something of special interest. Having once transgressed myself in lengthiness I cannot fling a pebble out of my glass house.

We frequently see exhortations from good brethren to incessant activity, because the kingdom is near, and time is, if possible, even more precious from its brevity. I presume conscientious persons feel fully the force of this kind of well-meant counsel, and are exceedingly sorry that they are not more usefully and actively employed. They suffer severely in their sensitive hearts on account of deeply realized inefficiency as it appears to them. But let us look at this very thing closely. In the first place, all activity is not judicious. This is an established conclusion in the minds of some who have learned from observation and experience both. Wisdom is as necessary as activity. Knowledge is as important as zeal. How much apparently injudicious activity have we known! Is not this true? People painfully taught, desire to walk with double caution. If there is one special moderate developed bump in their moral phrenology, it is the bump of caution. A quickened conscience deprecates the liability to do harm. For example, take the case of baptism of persons shown in the sequel to have been unfit because of unsound conversion. An administrator who has been led into such mistakes from a want of care, (allowing for some errors that no caution or foresight could avoid,) will, if conscientious and God-fearing, be, or desire to be, careful, careful, careful, and save himself from future mortification and self-reproach.

Again, (and I will run the hazard of being criticised in the suggestion,) a conscientious man, taught by experience, will beware of a tendency to dogmatism in teaching. He will see, too, that not merely naked doctrine is necessary to edification in preaching; especially in doing or attempting a reformers work, but that as a general rule, what is properly enough understood as practical preaching, is of constant importance and never to be overlooked. Rectitude of the heart and life, true repentance, that is, abandonment of all evil courses and of every vicious spirit must certainly be enforced. The proportion of Jesus' teaching that relates to right behavior, to righteousness of life, to all moral virtues and to all salvation from things hateful in heart in the sight of God, is exceedingly great, as compared with other topics. Jesus is emphatic in these things. While we inculcate reformation of vitiated doctrines with respect to human nature and destiny, we are to remember constantly the need of godly living, and striving after God, and obedience to all moral duties.

Now, while anxious to be more active than I am; I am equally anxious to unite actively with wisdom. One act rightly performed, God can make ten times as useful, as ten acts done with defective judgment. Hence, when sorely oppressed with a feeling of inefficiency what must I do? I must spend much time in prayer, in earnest striving and intercession with God, that He will keep me in everything. I can present to Him interests infinite in importance and infinite in number. Is one hour a day thus spent, unprofitably spent? What if two or four hours a day are thus spent! Did not Jesus continue all night in prayer to God? There are some persons constitutionally restless, that is, longing for greater activity. But what if this restlessness is sinful! What if God sees that the present need of such persons, is to "rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him!" If I go to God in prayer I go to headquarters, that is, to the fountain-head of all power.

See how the way is blocked against the truth, by the force of tradition and the all but universal notion of soul-immortal life in man. There are teachers almost in heaps—perhaps half a dozen to a dozen ministers in a single village. Some are under pay, and some are retired. What is a man to do? We shall be told—"go into the highways and hedges" and work, and that is true, if we go God sent, and with a pure heart and a wise mind. How greatly emphatic are the words of Jesus in just exactly such a case as this' "Be wise as serpents and harmless as doves," because of going forth as sheep among wolves, (more or less.) But some are neither as wise as serpents nor as harmless as doves.

What is really the highest type of wisdom? Is it to criticise prevalent errors with energy and abruptness, and so provoke almost inevitable hostility and rejection, or is it to study meekness of wisdom, and wait on God with the most importunate prayer? Why do God's elect cry day and night unto Him, when faith in the coming kingdom is small on the earth? Is it not because the truth is so much under foot, and so much despised, and doors are shut, and the teaching of christendom is so sorely confused and the need of the returning Christ is so urgent? Yet even in such a case, christian kindness and sympathy and as far as conscience will permit, even cooperation, may be best and wisest. In this peculiar and difficult case, I do not dogmatize, or make positive assertions. It is a case and time of trial, and surely do we need deliverance. Opinions multiply, yet even then, if love dominates, there need be no contention. There may be unity even in diversity, at least peace and brotherly kindness. I merely jot a few thoughts, and whether right or wrong, good or bad, they are not without some relation to varied experience and persistent prayer.

I have read the arguments for the non-resurrection of the wicked, and I think many of them have force. But the subject is not free from difficulties with me. True, there is this that strikes my mind with force, to-wit, the language of Jesus in Luke xii. 5. "Fear him who after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell." This is one of those remarkable passages, which non-indicates the thrusting of living creatures into burning fire, though the beast and false prophet as conspicuous instances, are thus cast alive into it. (And the case is parallel in Jeremiah xxix., where Ahab and Zedekiah, false prophets are slain by Nebuchadnezzar, and perhaps afterward roasted in the fire.) Yet even the passage in Luke does not clearly indicate a non-resurrection, but might be interpreted by some to denote the opposite, as the expression "he hath killed" might be doubtfully understood of natural death.

It seems to me, (and I am now desirous of arguing the case,) that the ordinary honest reader will be very slow to understand the Lord's reference to the resurrection of those "who have done good and those who have done evil" in John v. as denoting a moral resurrection only. It may be true, but how am I to know it? I must understand it literally, unless there is strong reason for a different interpretation. It is true, one may honestly ask, if the resurrection of the wicked is not a re-aggregation without a resuscitation? That is a question I am not disposed to treat lightly. It may be like the galvanism of a dead body with some automatic action and no consciousness. Such things we read of. May it not be a kind of spurious resurrection, a mere imitation designed to show the incapability of the wicked to receive life—a form of living again without the reality, only showing more powerfully the glory of the true, and more painfully the inconsequence of that which is in appearance only, and not in fact? Is it to re-gather the lost atoms of a condemned body and organism, in order by a special and irrevocable act of the divine will to put forever beyond recall or repair, the extinction of a wicked man? Is it a partial resurrection followed by such an act of decision as shall make no further resurrection forever after, possible? Is it something like that action of the South American earthquake that thrust up hundreds of dead bodies from their tombs, while a lightning flash of terrible intensity might be supposed to annihilate every once organized atom? More might be added, but not now.

The difficulties in this whole matter, are in great degree, of another kind. For example, here, "every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Matt. xii. 36. What men? Righteous men? Is a forgiven and justified man to be arraigned for sins in the judgment? If not, it must be the wicked. How can this be unless they are raised to life? Surely the unrepented and unforgiven wicked world of wicked men in the Pharisees' days were to be accounted of. How?

"Again," every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him." How is this? Those who thrust the spear were converted, or else the wicked, or they as wicked, rise to life so far as to see Jesus in power. Is their conversion provable?

So also in Matt. vii., "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not done (this and that) in thy name?" They are openly rejected nevertheless. Can it be proved that they are only such wicked persons as are living at the oncoming of that day? Yet they claimed to have cast out devils, a claim not denied, and demon-ejection belongs not to our day. Hence how can we fairly get them to that day without a resurrection? But I pause. These are only hints, without seeking to revive discussion. A short answer may suffice, if it is to the point. Lord direct.

O. COLEGROVE.

Fredonia, N. Y.

The spread of Christianity in Japan during the last seven years has been remarkable. There are now forty-three Protestant churches in that country, with a membership of 1,500. There are fifty-four Sunday-schools, with 2,000 scholars; three theological schools, with 175 students; eighty-one missionaries, ninety-three native assistant preachers, ten native pastors and 160 preaching places. In addition to the distinctively religious work, a large number of secular schools are carried on by Christian teachers.

BREVITIES.

Red snow, which is usually found only in Arctic latitudes, is seen on a lofty summit near Mount Stanford in the Sierra Nevadas. For several acres the vast drifts are of a beautiful pink-ish tint to the depth of three or four inches. It is a beautiful spectacle. One explanation of it is that myriads of minute organisms cover the surface.

The Official Journal of St. Petersburg says that in Russia, in the month of June, there were altogether 3,600 fires, which caused a loss of property to the extent of over twelve millions of roubles: 508 of the fires were from incendiarism, 930 from neglect, 310 from lightning, and in 1,762 cases the cause was unknown.

According to the "Annuaire Catholique" for 1879, there were on the 1st of July, 1,143 Bishops or Archbishops in the Catholic Church. The senior of those prelates was Mgr. MacHale, Archbishop of Tuam, in Ireland, who was appointed "in partibus infidelium" by Pope Leo XII, on March 8, 1825. Of those dignitaries sixty-one were named by Gregory XVI, 998 by Pius IX., and 82 by Leo XII.

Mr. Penders, the director of one of the largest submarine cable companies, has communicated to the members of the International Telegraphic Conference, held at London, the information that the length of the terrestrial telegraph lines of the world is about one million two hundred and fifty thousand miles, that the total cost of them was over $200,000,000, and that the length of all the submarine cables is sixty-six thousand miles, representing a capital of $125,000,000.

It is announced that the English New Testament Revision Company have made such progress in their work that the New Testament is likely to be published by the University presses early in 1880. It is intended to issue in the first instance a handsome octavo, and a small cheaper volume for more general use. The English and American companies are now busy with the final revision of passages in which the same Greek works are found, so as to bring the translation into greater harmony.

THE CHILDREN OF RUM DRINKERS.

Dr. Martin, of the Salpetriere, Paris, has made a series of interesting observations on nervous affections among the offspring of alcoholic parents. His results may be summed up as follows: In eighty-three families in which one or more members showed nervous excitability with a history of alcoholic origin, there were 410 children. Of these, 108—more than a quarter—had convulsions, and in the year 1874, 100 were dead; 241 were still alive, but eighty-three, i. e., more than one-third of the survivors, were epileptic.

An unusual scene for Europe—that of the sun not setting, but shining through the whole night—is to be witnessed from the summit of Mount Avyx, in Finland, near Torneo, at sixty-six degrees northern latitude. Every year, on June 23, a multitude of people of different nations visit that mountain to witness the interesting spectacle. According to the reports of the Finn journals, this year there were on Mount Avyx about 300 travellers; three of these were Englishmen, two Frenchmen, one was a Russian; there were several Germans, Danes, and Swedes, and the rest were Finns. The Government of Finland is now erecting on Mount Avyx a hotel for the accommodation of the visitors.

John Bunyan died, 1688. He has been rendered famous by his book, the "Pilgrim's Progress." Born in England in 1628, he was originally a traveling tinker, unable to read or write, and led a profane life for a number of years. His attention was at length drawn to serious subjects, he learned to read, then studied the Scriptures, fought on the side of the Parliament in the civil war, at its close joined a congregation of Baptists, became one of its leaders and preachers and was imprisoned on that account. He lay in jail for twelve years supporting himself and family by tagging laces, and in the interval wrote his religious allegory, the "Pilgrim's Progress," which became one of the two or three most popular works in the English language, and was translated into various other languages. After his release Bunyan became a teacher of the Baptists and traveled through England in that capacity.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. GUARLEY, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPT. 10, 1879.

BROTHER MAURUDER'S article on the destiny of the finally impenitent appears in this number. We judge best to waive any further consideration of this question for awhile, excepting that we may give an exegete on Dan. xii. 2 in a week or two.

OUR thanks to some more kind friends who are aiding the Relief Fund of THE RESTITUTION. Our subscribers, too, have, for the last two or three weeks been sending in dues quite encouragingly. If all will be prompt we shall get along without embarrassment.

WILL you please tell us, through THE RESTITUTION, where "Dr. Seiss' work on the Great Pyramid," can be obtained, and its price? and oblige

L. J. K.

Answer: Dr. J. A Seiss' work, entitled "A Miracle in Stone: or—The Great Pyramid of Egypt," can be had of F. H. Revell, 145 and 150 Madison street, Chicago, Ill. Price $2.25.

BROTHER H. HEYES sends us the Manchester Guardian of August 26, from which we extract the following statement in regard to the gloomy prospects of the agricultural portion of the English community. The condition of the poorer classes is pitiable indeed: "There is unfortunately no room now to hope that the farmers will this year escape with moderate losses. For the bulk of them it will be a disastrous season. Mr. Thomas G. Scott—a well-known writer on agricultural subjects—puts the probable outcome of the corn crops at one-third less than an average yield; and this deficiency, he states, means a loss of £26,000,000 to the cultivator. Against this there is no set-off. On the contrary, wherever the farmer may turn he finds himself the victim of an adverse fortune. As in cereals, so also in pulses, serious damage has been done, the money loss under this latter head being estimated at £3,660,000. Potatoes are another bad crop, and the calculation is that the blight cannot cost the growers less than £15,000,000. The partial failure of the hop crop may involve a further sum of £1,250,000, while the loss on the areas under artificial and natural grasses will be heavy, probably as much as £15,000,000. Mr. Scott describes the mangel, turnip, and other root crops as late in growth and small in size and everywhere mastered by weeds, and in his opinion 'it will require a long and specially fine autumn to bring them up to half average crops.' Finally, 'on grass, though abundant, no live stock—except dairy cows—has this season made profitable returns,' and 'there appears nothing wanting,' observes Mr. Scott, 'to complete the ruin of the poorer class of tenant farmers, especially in England and Scotland.' We may be permitted to hope that the case is not quite so serious as it is here pictured; but there can be no question that it will be a trying year for all connected with the agricultural interest. A single bad season is a sufficient strain upon the resources of the average farmer, but the present is the fifth successive year in which the working of the land has proved a most unprofitable occupation."

WE clip the following item from the Chicago Tribune, which may prove of some interest to our readers:

CURSING THE REMOVERS OF HIS BONES.

Shakespeare was not the first who pronounced a curse upon those who should move his bones. M. Roller has deciphered the inscription on the sarcophagus of Ashmenezer, King of Sidon, now deposited at the Louvre. Part of it runs thus: "A curse is pronounced against Royal persons or others who should open this tomb, or lift the tomb which contains me or transport me in this tomb. They shall not be buried with the dead, they shall not lie in a tomb, they shall not leave any descendants, and the holy gods will deliver them into the hands of their enemies, who will chase them from their country." The Jewish World notes, as a curious coincidence in regard to this curse, that the Duke de Luynes bought the sarcophagus, and presented it to the French Government. He and his only son met their death in the Papal war, in Italy, in 1860. Again, it was through the instrumentality of the Emperor Napoleon III., that it was brought to Paris and deposited in the Louvre. He was routed at Sedan, and his body reposes on foreign soil. His son met with an untimely death, far away from his home and at the hands of his enemies. There is not a descendant left of Napoleon III., or the Duke de Luynes.

We may add that a very singular fate marked the end of each of the renowned Napoleons. Napoleon I, the founder of the dynasty, after one of the most distinguished careers died a prisoner on the island of St. Helena, May 5, 1821, after passing nearly six years in bondage. His son, Napoleon II, died in Schoenbrun, July 22, 1832, in the same room in which his father had dictated peace to Austria, and was buried in Vienna in the vaults of the Austrian imperial family, without ever being actually seated on the throne of France. Napoleon III, nephew to the first Napoleon, was born April 24, 1808, and his birth was announced by demonstrations of honor conferred only on those who were of the imperial family. After an eventful career he attained the summit of his ambition by being elevated to the imperial throne of France Dec. 2, 1852, the anniversary of the coronation of Napoleon I, and also of the battle of Austerlitz. His subsequent reign was remarkably successful, till the year 1870, when he declared war against Prussia, a war that ended in the signal defeat of his armies, and finally in his own exile to England where he took up his abode at Chiselhurst in Kent, at which place he died Jan. 9, 1873, and where he now sleeps in a foreign grave.

His son, Prince Louis Napoleon, was born March 16, 1856, and after the unfortunate battle at Sedan, which cost his father the crown, he went with his imperial parents to reside in England. A desire to participate with his military comrads with whom he had been instructed in the art of war at Woolwich, led him to embark for South Africa, to take part in the Zulu war, and there he was killed by a sudden attack of the Zulus upon himself and others of a reconnoitering party on Saturday, May 31, 1879. His body was brought to England on the ship Orontes, and on reaching Chiselhurst, was placed in the same chapel in which the body of his father, Napoleon III, had lain. On July 12, 1879, he too was placed in his last resting place on foreign soil. As a matter of some interest it is stated that a man named Henry Weathers was present at the funeral of the young prince, who had been present at the funeral of Napoleon I, at St. Helena in 1821, and also at the funeral of Napoleon III, at Chiselhurst in 1873. Sic transit gloria mundi. Thus worldly glory passes away, would be an appropriate and expressive epitaph on the tombs that cover these forms of departed ambition.

The reputed head of the Napoleon dynasty is Prince Jerome Napoleon, second son of Jerome Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon I, who was born at Fricste, Sept. 9, 1822. He is the legal successor to any rights that the Bonapartists may claim to have in France. Whether any contingencies in the future may bring him to the throne of his great uncle is for time to disclose. Some prophetic expositors have specified him as possibly designed to be the final great head of the Roman Empire, who is to perish at the battle of Armageddon at the second coming of Christ. It is for the future to show whether such anticipations will ever be realized. There is one other member of the Bonaparte family that perhaps demands a passing notice. This is Lucien Bonaparte, a grandson of Lucien, a brother of Napoleon I. In the course of human events this descendant of the original Carlo Bonaparte of Corsica has been elevated to the rank of Cardinal of the Church of Rome. He was born at Rome Nov. 14, 1828, and created a Cardinal March 13, 1868, and was subsequently a member of the vatican council, and was one of the number voting for the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope. He may possibly among the contingencies of the future be chosen Pope of Rome, and thus become an actor in some of the last scenes attendant upon the closing of Gentile times. Names that have been honored in this world, will be forgotten in the ages to come or be only remembered to be covered with everlasting shame and contempt, while the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance, and shine as the stars, and as the brightness of the firmament for ever and ever. Let us seek the imperishable glories of the world to come and be ambitious that our names be found in the Lamb's book of life.

SELECTIONS.

The Six Texts Supposed to Teach Eternal Torment.

There are some half dozen texts which to many readers of the Bible appear to teach as plainly an eternity of torment that they must perforce believe it. The whole of the rest of the Bible is made to conform to them. Its plainest words are interpreted to mean the reverse of what they say. Life and death, immortality, living for ever, are tortured and twisted, and a non-natural sense is put upon them in order to force them into subjection to these few single texts. But in the first place, before examining these six texts, is it likely that a view shall be set forward on almost every page of Scripture in plain language, to be denied by a few figurative passages? Is the whole tenor and tone of Scripture to be set aside in this manner? There is not another doctrine which is taken from the Bible in this way? On no other subjects have the many and plain Scriptures to bow to the figurative and the few. Then, why so in regard of future punishment?

But about these six texts. Two of them have nothing to do with future punishment; three prove our side of the question; and the other passage is entirely symbolic in its character. Let us briefly run over these six texts.

The first is in Isaiah: "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" Bishop Lowth's translation of this verse is this: "Who among us can abide this consuming fire? Who among us can abide these continued burnings?" And a glance at the context, both before and after, will convince any one that it refers exclusively to temporal judgments, which were inflicted or threatened. The people say, "Who can endure this?" And the answer is given in the following verses: "Walk righteously, and you will have no cause to fear; your bread shall be given, and your water shall not fail." It is present earthly prosperity and adversity that are contrasted,—not heaven and hell.

The next passage is the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. It has nothing to do with future punishment in Gehenna. The story is located in hades, a different place to Gehenna. It is remorse of conscience for a misspent life.

The third passage is the prediction of Daniel: "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." This is interpreted to mean that they will both awake to everlasting life, some to an everlasting life of honor, and some to an everlasting life of shame. Whereas the prophet says that some will awake to everlasting life, and some not to everlasting shame, but—to shame, and to be held in everlasting contempt. The last word is the same that is rendered "abhorring" in Isa. lxvi. 24, which is applied to dead bodies. Men will abhor the sight of them while they are being consumed, and their memory when consumed.

The next is our Lord's words in Mark ix. "If thy hand [also foot and eye] offend thee, cut it off; it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into Gehenna, into the fire that never shall be quenched; where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Gehenna was a place outside Jerusalem, in the valley of Hinnom, where the refuse of the city and carcasses were cast to be destroyed. Fires were kept alight to put out of existence instead of preserve. The worm seems to be suggested by the burial of dead bodies, when the flesh is all eaten away so that nothing but a skeleton remains.

The next passage, and what is considered the strongest, is that in Matt. xxv. 46, in our Lord's parable of the sheep and goats: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal." "Eternal" and "everlasting" are both translated from the same Greek word. A contrast is made between "life" and "punishment." There can be no misery without life; but the wicked do not go into life eternal. "The wages of sin is death"—and not penal servitude; "everlasting destruction," not everlasting preservation. Sodom and Gomorrah are an example of the wicked suffering the vengeance of eternal fire (Jude 7). But the flame is gone out; and the cities are destroyed. The effect however remains. So, those who die for ever will suffer "the vengeance of eternal fire."

Lastly, there are the apocalyptic visions, in which a wild beast, a false prophet, and a dragon are represented as tormented for ever and ever. But why is one part of a sentence to be understood literally and another figuratively? As the things said to be tormented are figures, the torment is probably also a figure. I believe that the beast, the false prophet, and the dragon, represent certain great systems and principles of evil: and that their being tormented for ever and ever represents universal execration in which they will be eventually held by the ransomed universe. Whether this view be correct or not, it is idle to insist that the vision must predict the eternal torment of some sentient beings. But whatever view may be taken of those visions, it is impossible to believe that they can be intended to upturn the whole previous teaching of the Scripture, from the very beginning, on life and death.

And this is the whole case for a dogma that has woven itself into the literature of all Christendom, repelled countless multitudes from the very portals of Christianity, and done incalculable injury to those who have been able to believe it.

The time will come when the righteous shall alone live, the wicked having been destroyed from off the face of the earth; and in that day "God shall be All in All."

What a contrast between the unnatural, exaggerated representation of sin's desert, given by popular theology, and the plain, simple, intelligible, yet tremendous declaration of God's Word—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die!" How the one violates all our moral instincts; how the other commends itself to the universal conscience of mankind! How impossible really to feel that the sins of a finite being, during a limited period, can deserve an eternity of suffering; how easy to recognize "the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death?" Every moral creature is indebted solely to the good pleasure of God for calling him into existence, and is dependent upon him each moment for the continuance of his life. If, therefore, he refuses to use that life in his Maker's service, is it likely that he will be able to retain possession of it? Life is the all-comprehensive trust committed to him by the Creator. If he abuses it, the trust is withdrawn. What can be the more righteous, more God-like? What can be farther removed weakness or from cruelty? How perfectly every object is attained by this act of justice! What possible gain could accrue from leaving him in possession of the life that he has misused, and allowing him to continue in sin and misery for ever? Absolutely none. But the loss would be enormous; for it would keep the universe in eternal discord. What amount of suffering the sinner may have to undergo while life remains to him is another question. On that point we only know, and only need to know, that in every case the stripes will be exactly proportioned to the heinousness of the offence, which the Judge of all the earth is alone competent to estimate. When, however, God resolves to spare the rebel no longer, but to inflict upon him the extreme penalty of the law, the righteousness of the sentence will be patent to all. The conscience of the universe will be satisfied, and all creation will say, "Amen."—Samuel Minton.

The Apostle John.

Notwithstanding the inspiration of the Apostles, the intellectual peculiarities by which they were severally distinguished are distinctly noticeable in their writings. The most marked among them was John. There is about him a pathos which distinguishes him from all his associations in the mighty work of propagating the gospel. We have a key to this distinguishing feature in the remarkable fact that he was an object of special love even to the Savior himself; and he appears to have been a man by nature in the highest degree lovable as well as loving. Only a great and most feeling heart could have written, even under plenary inspiration, the gospel by John. There are many things contained in that wondrous book by which it is distinguishable from the other three. In them we have histories simply, grave and matter-of-fact; there is but little sentiment, no vigor, and no passion. John, on the contrary, writes as a poet of the highest order, and as an orator. Although he has been singled out as a "son of consolation," he was not less remarkable for his power and pungency than for his affection. None of the Apostles appear, in this respect, to have come up to him. He wonderfully resembles the Lord himself in the cast of his thoughts and in his moral temperament. It is, therefore, no marvel if John was selected for what may be called special service. It was reserved for him to set forth things great and wondrous which were interdicted to the other Apostles. The great and sublime discourse of our Lord, and his wonderful intercessory prayer just before he suffered, are altogether peculiar to himself. This was work for which he was, as a man, incalculably more fit than any other of the Apostles. Peter, with all his heroism, was hard and dry compared with John. Harder and drier still was the faithful James. Paul, while differing much from John, has yet not a little in common with him. But his fire was less pure, and his style was not marked by the same divine simplicity; his writings, however, are everywhere distinguished by force and fervor, argument and eloquence. In consolation he is exquisite, in reproof terrible; at times his pathos exceeded all his compeers, and all the prophets except Jeremiah.

Not only was John singled out for the special work of a supplementary and perfecting gospel, but for the exhibition of the most experimental portions of the New Testament. His great epistle is a thing quite by itself; it is nowhere equaled for its development of the work of grace in the human soul. While soothing, it is searching in the extreme, full of holiness, and full of severest rebuke of false professors. It is in the book of Revelation that the true characteristics of John are displayed to the full. Inspiration apart, the highest poetry is low, mean and groveling compared with the marvelous magnificence of the Apostle's visions. Such grandeur was never reached by any other mind. There is, moreover, a power at times of language which surges and swells and carries everything before it as a river of the mightiest current.

But our concern at present is with the first General Epistle, which has been, is and will ever be in peculiar favor with the people of God. There are few portions of Scripture from which more texts have been taken; but it is a fact worthy of observation, that for purposes of authorship, it has been much less attractive than many other portions of inspiration. Accounting for this is not easy; it may be, however, that the purity and the spirituality of the epistle are such that most writers feel themselves in point of spiritual attainments inferior to the undertaking.

The Resurrection.

And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, some to shame and everlasting contempt. Dan. xii. 2.

Great and awful has been the reign of death! Who can tell the associations of grief and pain, of dismay and agony, of streaming tears and broken hearts, of blasted hopes and ruined plans, of speechless misery and shattered reason, of desolate homes and bleeding affections, of darkness, misery and gloom, which throng around that chilling word—death!

Everywhere and in everything is death—resistless, gloomy, all-levelling death. Its subjects mingle with the soil of every clime and crowd the hidden depths of every sea. Nearly two hundred generations, with all their power, have gone down under its dark dominion, without a single representative left. And every tick of the clock, through all the hours and days and nights and weeks and months and years, without cessation, is the death knell of scores of mortals, swept from friends and homes to the silent world of them that sleep in the dust of the earth.

But those sleeping myriads shall not sleep forever. There yet shall come a trumpet-voice before which even death shall cower and all his bands dissolve. Rocky vaults and sepulchres, though sealed for ages and to the living lost, and all the deep incisions in "God's Acre," as all the hidden places whither the dead have been borne or laid away by loving hands, shall open to set their tenants free. All the dingy doors of the grave shall be lifted from their hinges, and all within be called to bid farewell for ever to all the mould and dampness of that sombre realm. For thus saith the holy apostle: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. . . . For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. iv. 13-18.—Dr. J. A. Seiss' Voices from Babylon.

BRIEVITIES.

Representative Israelites from all parts of the world are to meet in Paris on or about the 10th of this month, in an international convention, under the auspices of the "Universal Alliance of Israelites." The deliberations of the convention will embrace the discussion of a plan for industrial and secular education to be submitted by the Palestine Commission. Other subjects important to the Jews will also be considered.

A Wesleyan missionary in Sierra Leone, Africa, recently made a trip into the interior, and found when only seventy miles from Sierra Leone a cool healthy climate. He also discovered an unsuspected, if rather rude, civilization, for he found a people who understand how to melt iron, which they manufacture into spear heads and other weapons and implements. The people are said to be comparitively few, inoffensive, with no particular ideas about religion, but quite willing to receive Christian teachers.

The 250th anniversary of the First Congregational church at Salem, Mass., which was the first Protestant church organized on the continent of America, was celebrated on Saturday August 16. The town was settled in September, 1629, but the church was not organized until the following year, August 6, Old Style, which is August 16, New Style. The church elected and ordained Samuel Skelton as pastor and Frances Higginson as teacher, each taking part in the ordination of the other. At the anniversary on Saturday last all the surviving pastors, with one exception, were present.

Mrs. Margaret Turney, a resident of Flushing, who is the oldest person on Long Island, celebrated her one hundred and tenth birthday on Friday, August 15, receiving the congratulations of a large number of visitors. She was born in the County of Roscommon, Ireland, on the 15th day of August, 1769, and has lived in Flushing for over twenty-five years. In reading she does not need glasses, as she has had her second sight for a number of years. She spends a considerable portion of her time in knitting.

An international convention of Hebrews from all portions of the world will be held at Paris, Sept. 10, under the auspices of the Alliance Israelite Universelle. Matters affecting the interests of the whole Hebrew race will be discussed. Delegates have been appointed from ten countries, the Rev. Myer S. Israel, the Rev. H. S. Jacob, Myer Stern, William Seligman, and Simon Wolff being the delegates from the United States. Among the subjects to be discussed are the amelioration of the Hebrews in Palestine and the promotion of emigration to that country, the promotion of Hebrew literature and education, and the persecution of Hebrews in Roumania and elsewhere.

The plague of rats in the Deccan, Bombay, for the second season in succession is occasioning serious alarm. These animals overspread the country like locusts, destroy the crops almost as thoroughly, and are even more difficult to keep down. So grave had become the aspect of affairs that a "Rat Committee" was appointed to inquire into the best means of disposing of these creatures. They have advised the people to turn out en masse and face the enemy. Rewards are to be offered for dead rats, and, in fact, the invasion is to be treated as a matter to be dealt with vigorously by the whole community. In the mean time the question has arisen as to how the rats have multiplied.

On the 31st of December, 1877, there were 58,404 post offices in Europe, with 223,547 persons employed, or one postal establishment for every 6,134 inhabitants. These post offices are most thickly planted in Switzerland, and after Switzerland in Great Britain and Ireland. A striking contrast to these two countries is afforded by Russia and Turkey, there being in the former only one post office to every 5,788, and in the latter one to every 1,165 square miles. Altogether, 5,682,009,009 letters, papers, &c., were sent by post in Europe in 1877, 3,507,000,000 being letters or post cards, 1,522,000,000 newspapers, and 563,000,000 patterns and the like; and the greatest number of letters, papers, &c., were sent in Great Britain and Ireland, the total number dispatched being 1,183,075,000, or at the rate of 31.7 letters and 9.4 newspapers for every inhabitant.

Russia has another sect, composed of a "prophetess," a young and handsome Polish peasant—Xenia Ivanowna Kusmin—and twelve Apostles. The woman preaches austerity of life, abstinence from wine, meat, and marriage, permitting tea only, for the use of her followers. But this is merely a new patent upon an earlier production, with slight alterations. The "Khlysti," an old sect, permit men and women to act as prophets and teachers; they lead an ascetic life and denounce marriage: they are fanatical in their extravagances, and tax the endurance of boasted graces by unexpected and lusty blows on the cheek; and only to those meekly turning the other for a repetition is accorded the reputation of unusual sanctity.

Talk at Home.

Endeavor always to talk your best before your children. They hunger perpetually for new ideas. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they deem it drudgery to learn from books, and, even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of many of the advantages, they will grow up intelligent if they enjoy in childhood the privilege of listening daily to the conversation of intelligent people. We sometimes see parents who are the life of every company which they enter, dull, silent and uninteresting at home among their children. If they have not mental activity and mental store sufficient for both, let them first use what they have for their own household. A silent home is a dull place for young people, a place from which they will escape if they can. How much useful information, on the hand, is often given in pleasant conversation and what unconscious, but excellent, mental training in lively social argument. Cultivate to the utmost the graces of conversation.

POETRY.

The Poor Man's Grave.

No sable pall, no waving plume,
No thousand torchlights to illume;
No parting glance, no heavy tear,
To rest to fall upon the bier.
There is not one of kindred clay,
To watch the coffin on its way;
No mortal form, no human breast,
Cares where the pauper's bones may rest.

But one deep mourner follows there,
Whose grief outlives the funeral prayer;
He does not sigh—he does not weep,
But will not leave the fresh-piled heap.
'Tis he who was the poor man's mate,
And made him peace content with fate;
The mongrel dog that shared his crust,
In all that stands beside his dust.

He heeds his listening head, or though
He thought to hear a voice behind;
He pines to miss that voice so kind.
And wonders why he's left behind.
The sun goes down, the night is come,
He needs no food—he seeks no home;
But, stretch'd upon the dreamless bed
With doleful howl waits back the dead.

The passing race may coldly dwell
On all that pell-mell marbles tell;
For temples built on church-yard earth,
Are claim'd by riches more than worth.
But who would mark with undimm'd eye
The mourning dog that starves and dies?
Who would not ask, who would not crave,
Such love and faith to guard his grave?

COMMUNICATIONS.

Report of the California Conference.

The annual conference of the church of God of the State of California was held at Willow Slough, Yolo county commencing on the 14th of August, and continuing over Sunday the 17th.

The conference was called to order by Bro. C. M. Hiddleson the moderator of the last annual conference. The first business being the election of a moderator, Bro. Orrin Stone of Stockton, was nominated and elected to fill that position.

After the election of a secretary, Bro. Dresser moved that the chair appoint a committee upon order of business, which being adopted, the chair appointed Bro's. L. J. Kimball, of Stockton, J. J. Corbaley, of Bangor, and C. M. Hiddleson, of Willow Slough, as that committee. After a short intermission the committee made its report on the order of business to be pursued and the conference was duly organized. At eleven we listened to an interesting discourse delivered by Bro. R. Corbaley and then adjourned to meet in the evening at which time the same brother delivered a discourse upon the Lord's Prayer in an able and effectual manner. Friday August 15. Conference assembled at 10 o'clock a. m. Moderator Orrin Stone presiding.

Minutes of the last annual conference read and accepted.

Bro. C. M. Hiddleson, treasurer of the last conference, gave his reports for the year past which was accepted, after which Bro. R. Corbaley submitted his report as Evangelist which with much matter of interest also stated that he had delivered during the year one hundred and eighty discourses and traveled over four thousand five hundred miles in the performance of his Evangelical labors.

A motion was made and adopted, that each of the church organizations represented at the conference report concerning their condition on to-morrow.

After a few minutes recess we were entertained by Bro. Dresser who delivered a discourse upon the Lord's prayer in continuation of the one delivered yesterday upon the same subject.

In the evening we were profitably entertained by listening to a discourse delived by Bro. H. B. Rice from John xvii. 3.

Saturday Aug 16. Conference called to order by Bro. Orrin Stone at 10 o'clock a. m. Minutes of previous meeting read and accepted.

The election of officers being next in order, Rev. L. J. Kimball, of Stockton, was elected to fill the position of financial secretary and Rev. C. M. Hiddleson was re-elected to fill the office of treasurer.

By motion the chair was authorized to appoint a committee of four on general business and future conference. Revs. C. W. Russell of Healdsburg, L. J. Kimball of Stockton, J. J. Corbaley of Bangor, and W. H. Ludden of Willow Slough, were appointed as that committee.

The next business being the report from each of the organizations represented at the conference. Bro. R. Corbaley made a verbal report of the organization situated at Healdsburg; he reported a small but sincere organization with a feeling of considerable interest that might lead to a greater interest in the future.

Bro. L. J. Kimball next reported a flourishing organization at Stockton, of nineteen members and that the brethren at Lockford contemplate uniting with them.

Bro. W. H. Ludden next reported concerning the organization at Willow Slough, that it was in good order and abundant hope for the future.

Bro. J. J. Corbaley, next reported about the church at Bangor; that it was small but trying to do their duty and that there was great hope of increasing their numbers during the next year. By motion Bro. Richard Corbaley was elected as Evangelist for the ensuing year. At eleven o'clock we were instructed by a discourse delivered by Bro. R. Corbaley, on the relation between parent and child, husband and wife, lovers, church members, and preachers.

In the evening Bro. H. B. Rice delivered a discourse on "the key of interpreting the Scriptures," during which he dwelt at some length upon the fact that the natural always precedes the Spiritual. Sunday August 17. Conference called to order at ten o'clock a. m. Moderator Orrin Stone presiding. A communication from Bro. B. Wilson being recieved and read was accepted. He reported progress as an Evangelist and expressed regret at not being able to be present at the Conference.

By motion Bro. Wilson was re-elected as an Evangelist for the ensuing year.

At eleven o'clock we listened to an interesting discourse delivered by Bro. R. Corbaley on the subject of the "birth of the water and the birth of the Spirit," which was ably handled at some length.

After partaking of a basket dinner we assembled again and listened to a sermon on the kingdom of God; after which the Conference adjourned to meet at six o'clock p. m., at which time the business committee submitted its report which was accepted.

By motion the conference extended its thanks to Bros. Rice, Corbaley, Dresser and Wilson for the work they have done in spreading the gospel.

Bro. Dresser made a few remarks commending THE RESTITUTION as a paper that was trying to spread the true gospel. Bro. R. Corbaley also recommended it as a valuable paper.

By motion the conference returned its thanks to Br. A. Panzer for the use of the grounds upon which the meeting was held.

By motion the secretary was authorized to send an abridged copy of the minutes of this Conference to THE RESTITUTION.

By motion the conference adjourned until called together again at some future time.

After listening to short but interesting discourses by Bros. H. B. Rice and R. Corbaly the friends and brethren proceeded to bid each other farewell and all expressed a regret that so pleasant a meeting must come to an end.

W. H. LUDDEN.
Conference Secretary.

Conference Report.

On Saturday, August 9, 1879, according to previous notice published in THE RESTITUTION, a number of the brethren and sisters, of the church of God, assembled at their new meeting house on Crab Creek, Henderson county, North Carolina.

Met on Saturday at 10 o'clock a. m. for preaching. Brother James Soper spoke, followed by Bro. E. M. Anderson. We then had a short recess, after which Bro. J. Case spoke, followed by Bro. H. W. Patterson. We then adjourned, to meet at the water on Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, a. m. for baptism, when sister J. Soper was baptized. We then repaired to the church where we had preaching by Bro. N. Bond, followed by Bro. H. W. Patterson. Adjourned for dinner, after which we had preaching by Bro. Jacob Lyda, followed by Bro. E. N. Anderson. Adjourned to meet on Monday at 10 o'clock, when it was thought proper to organize into a conference capacity, which was done by calling Bro. H. W. Patterson to the chair, and requesting the undersigned to continue to act as secretary.

Bro. E. N. Anderson, who has been acting as Evangelist for two years, made a report of his labors. He has baptized fifty, assisted in organizing two churches. The prospect is that he will soon be able to organize one or more other churches. The truth is gaining ground in this country, and our prospects are getting brighter. Bro. Anderson has labored in seven counties, traveling most of the time on foot, with very little remuneration. We tried to get up some plan to pay an evangelist for the coming year, but did not come to an agreement. Bro. Anderson being requested to continue to act as Evangelist, announced that he should do so, and trust in God for support. With him in the field the truth is bound to prosper. He is poor and we are sorry that he cannot be better supported while defending the truth.

Conference business being finished, we had preaching by Bro. J. Lyda, after which we repaired to the water where Bro. Anderson, baptized three sisters, Nancy A. Patterson, and two of Bro. A. Williams' daughters.

Thus closed a very interesting meeting, and one from which we hope much good will result. We had good congregations and close attention all the time. Within the past two years and three months, one Methodist and five Baptist preachers have left orthodoxy, and are advocating the truth.

Conference adjourned to meet on Cane Creek, Buncombe county, on Saturday before the second Sunday in August, 1880. May we all meet in the kingdom.

R. M. SALTS, Sec.

Flat Rock, N. C.

LETTER DRAWER.

Ed. Restitution:—Enclosed you will find one dollar to apply on my subscription. I should have sent it sooner but circumstances would not permit. I am one of the unlucky so far as the treasures of this world are concerned, but I thank the Lord, brethren, that God has promised us a better time in the future, if we hold out faithful. Therefore, brethren, one and all, let us put on the whole armor of God, and fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. Let us bear the cross with patience and the crown is ours. Let us all do what we can for the paper, remembering it is the great preacher of the blessed gospel on this green earth. It preaches the gospel to thousands every week. Without its weekly visit I could not live in this part of the world where sectarianism holds sway. Brethren pray for me, that I may hold out faithful. Your brother in hope of eternal life when the life-giver comes.

RUSSIAN EXPEDITION TO CENTRAL ASIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 5.—Arrangements for the expedition into Central Asia to investigate the practicability of diverting the Amu-Darya and causing it to flow into the Caspian Sea, have been completed. The expedition has been divided into three detachments, of which two will be sent to Krasnovedsk and Khiva respectively, and the third will examine the river and delta. The latter has already started, but the departure of the others has been postponed until January in consequence of the disturbed condition of the Turcoman steppes.

STORM AND FLOOD IN ST. PETERSBURG.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 5.—Violent storms in the Gulf of Finland have caused the river Neva to rise to the level of the streets. The canals in the center of St. Petersburg have overflowed, and the fauxbourgs are under water. Iron roofs have been blown from houses and churches in all directions. The guns of the citadel have been firing all Thursday night and today. Notices have been issued warning the inhabitants to take precautions against the floods.

WYBORG, Russia, Sept. 6.—A great fire is raging in the timber yards of Kotka, near this place.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 6.—A storm has been raging here since Thursday. The river Neva has reached the greatest height ever known. The suburbs are flooded.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 6.—Seventeen new cases were reported to-day, eight of whom were colored. Ten interments were reported by the undertakers. The Odd Fellows have issued an appeal for aid to the brotherhood at large.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 6.—For the week just ended there have been 152 new cases reported to the board of health, seventy-eight of whom were whites and seventy-four colored. Ten were under five years of age. The total number of new cases reported to date is 1,005. The total deaths from yellow fever for the week were forty-three—thirty-three whites and ten colored. Total deaths to date, 212.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 7.—Eleven cases in all—four white and seven colored—were reported to the board of health to-day.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 8.—Eight cases—seven white and one colored—were reported to the board of health this morning. Nine interments have been reported since last night. Among the numbers are Maggie Sullivan, Annie M. Campbell, Archie Mills, Mrs. Emma Arnold and James Houck, Jr. The latter died at Bunlyn Station.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 6.—Two cases of yellow fever were reported to the board of health to-day; Thomas Wilters, ten years, native, taken sick August 28, recovered. J. C. Matthews, aged forty-five years, first summer in the city.

Dr. Miles, of Charity Hospital, reports that Henry Wong, aged 20 years, native of France, died at the hospital, of yellow fever, this morning.

Dr. B. C. White, Sanitary Director of the Auxiliary Sanitary Association, reports the mortality for the week ending on Friday as follows: Total deaths, not including Coroner's report, seventy-two. Of these, seven were from malarial fever and three from yellow fever.

NEW ORLEANS, September 7.—J. C. Matthews died at 3 o'clock this morning, of yellow fever, at No. 102 Louret street.

Two other cases of yellow fever have occurred at No. 81 Louisiana avenue.

MARTIN, Tenn., September 6.—Information has been received here from Arlington, Ky., that two yellow fever cases have developed in that town. The Kentucky State Board of Health has been notified of the Arlington cases, and an immediate quarantine is asked for by the surrounding towns.

WASHINGTON, September 7.—Dr. Chaille, Chairman of the United States Sanitary Commission now in Havana, reports to the National Board of Health that during the week ending August 30 the deaths by yellow fever were 100; by all diseases, 252. The numbers for the preceding weeks were, respectively, ninety-three and 265.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

True courage is unassuming; true piety serious and humble.

There is but one place of rest for the human mind, and that is on the Rock, Christ.

Resignation to God's sovereign will in trying times displays wisdom and secures comfort.

Have enough regard for yourself to treat your greatest enemy with quiet politeness. All petty spites are mere meannesses, and hurt yourself more than any one else.

The violet grows low and covers itself with its own leaves, and yet of all flowers yields the most delicious and fragrant smell. Such is humility.

No humble flower is born to blush unseen
And waste its sweetness on the desert air;
Although it blooms where man has never been—
Its Maker loves to see its beauty there.

Heaven sends us ten thousand trials; but because our doors and windows are shut to them, they sit and sing awhile upon the roof and then fly away.

God renders earth desolate to induce you to seek a better country. He strikes away every human prop, and puts failure and vexation into every worldly scheme, that you may turn from your idols unto him.

Matthew Henry: God led the Israelites to and fro, forward and backward, as in a maze or labyrinth, and yet all the while under the direction of the pillar of the cloud. He led them about, and yet he led them by a right way. His way in bringing his people home is always the best, though it may not be the nearest.

Though clouds and darkness encircle God's dispensations, yet faith believes the assurance that all his procedures are uniformally regulated by unerring wisdom and infinite goodness.

"Lift your heads ye sorrowing pilgrims,
Lo! your journey's end draws nigh—
See the signs of living glory
Loom as morning rays on high."

Activity is essential to healthy life, and especially to healthy Christian life. The Christian life is like the bicycle that hurries along our roads—while it is in motion you are borne onward safe and upright, but when it pauses you fall helpless to the earth.

M'Ilvaine: We should feel that the religion of the Bible stands alone, not only as to the wisdom and grandeur of her communications, but equally so as to the boldness of her evidences, the sublimity of her credentials and the god-like dignity with which she cometh to the light, that her deeds "may be made manifest that they are wrought in God."

Archbishop Leighton returning home one morning, was asked by his sister, "Have you been hearing a sermon?" "I've met a sermon," was the answer. The sermon he had met was a corpse on its way to the grave; the preacher was Death. Great street preacher! No laws nor penalties can silence him. No tramp of horses, nor rattling of carriages, nor rush and din of crowded streets can drown his voice. In heathen, pagan and Protestant countries, monarchies and free states, in town and country, the solemn pomp of his discourse is going on.

Owen: Labor to grow better under all your afflictions, lest your afflictions grow worse, lest God mingle them with more darkness, bitterness and terror. Follow after that which he calls you into, and you will find light arising in the midst of darkness. Hath he a cup of affliction in one hand?—lift up your eyes and you will see a cup of consolation in another. And if all stars withdraw their light, whilst you are in the way of God, assure yourselves that the sun is ready to shine.

Look up! see now where thro'
All is radiant with the light;
Darkest clouds are lined with silver—
Day is breaking on the night.
The sheltering wing is o'er thee,
The eternal arms below;
For thee God's manna falleth,
And the living waters flow.

Expectation of Christ's Advent Among the Turks.

We quote the following from the Springfield Republican of June 20, 1879:—

"The Turks," says a correspondent of the Observer, writing from their midst, "are believers in the second advent of Christ. It is a common remark among them now that the prophetic indications of his coming, as given in their books, are being manifested. These signs are general distress and suffering, disorder, war, rebellion, and decline of the true faith, general corruption, oppression, etc. He is to descend at Damascus, become a genuine Moslem, and during the forty years of his earthly career he is to secure great prosperity, and peace shall be so complete as to extend even to the lower orders of creation, as described in Isaiah. The advent of Christ is to be succeeded by other wonders in rapid succession, and then the end of the world is to come.

"This is the belief of all orthodox Mohammedans, and, considering this belief, it is not strange that the devout among them are looking for the end of the world. During no period of their recent history have the signs above mentioned been so fully realized as at present."

The following are the heights of the principle monuments, domes, &c., in the world: St Antoine column at Rome, 136 feet; principal tower of the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, 145; Trajan's column at Rome, 146; Napoleon's column at Paris, 150; Washington monument at Baltimore, 180; the great obelisk at Thebes, 200; Bunker Hill monument at Boston, 223; column of Delhi, 262; Trinity church steeple at New York, 284; the contemplated new dome of the Capitol, 300; dome of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, 320; tower of Manlius, 350; tower of the Cathedral at Strasburg, 460; dome of St. Peter's Cathedral, Rome, 485; Great Pyramid, 481.

POETRY.

Abide With Me.

"Abide with me, fast falls the even tide;
The darkness thickens, Lord with me abide.
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O, abide with me!

"Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away,
Change and decay in all around I see;
O thou who changest not, abide with me.

"Come not in terrors as the King of kings,
But kind and good with healing in thy wings;
Tears for all woes, a heart for every plea;
Come, Friend of sinners, and abide with me.

"Thou on my head in early youth did smile;
And though rebellious and perverse meanwhile,
Thou hast not left me, oft as I left thee;
On to the close, O Lord, abide with me.

"I need thy presence every passing hour;
What but thy grace can foil the tempter's power?
Who like thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, O, abide with me!

"I fear no foe with thee at hand to bless
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness.
Where is Death's sting? where, Grave, thy victory?
I triumph still if thou abide with me.

"Hold thou thy cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom and point me to the skies;
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee;
In life, in death, O Lord, abide with me."

COMMUNICATIONS.

HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY TO DIVINE JUDGMENT.

Will the Wicked be Raised from the Dead?—Will they Suffer the Second Death?

A. B. MAGRUDER.

A negative answer is given to both these questions by certain of THE RESTITUTION'S correspondents for reasons already assigned by them. To these I am permitted by the editor to reply.

As "two cannot walk together except they be agreed," it may conduce to a better understanding of the subject, and will save time and simplify the argument to lay down, in advance, certain general statements to which we can agree and which may thus form the basis on which we may proceed to reason together more satisfactorily, and, perhaps, reach a common conclusion at last. We may fairly hope to do so if we obey the divine lesson which bids us to "speak according to the oracles of God."

I think we shall all concede the following propositions to be true:

In the light of God and in the light of his word, the whole human race is divided, in respect to their responsibility and their future destiny, into three classes. These are, the righteous, the wicked and the irresponsible.

The first are those who believe and obey God's word.

The second are those who, having that word, disbelieve and disobey it.

The third are those who, living, in "times of ignorance" (Acts xvii. 30,) never hear the divine word, and, therefore, cannot be said to accept or reject it, and hence are not responsible to it.

Now, as it is written (Rom. ii. 6,) that "God will render to every man according to his deeds .... in the day when he shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ," and in 2 Tim. iv. 1, that he "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom," we learn that an appropriate destiny must belong and be appointed to each of these classes, and we hold that the same is disclosed in God's word. Without controversy, this testimony shows that, to the first class, God will render "glory, honor, immortality and eternal life;" to the second, he will render "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, to the Jew first and also to the Gentile, for there is no respect of persons with God." Rom. ii. 6-12. As to the third class it is also written that, "as many as have sinned without (i. e., in ignorance of) law, shall also perish without law; such are a law unto themselves," ib. 12; that "sin is not imputed when there is no law,—where no law is, there is no transgression, and, consequently, no punishment,—for sin is the transgression of the law," Rom. v. 13; 1 John xxiii. 4, and, hence, that being irresponsible to the law, simple death the penalty of Adam's sin, is their final destiny.

This conclusion as to the third class necessarily results from the circumstances that surround them in life. They cannot justly be held accountable to a law of which they are wholly ignorant. Reason and the Bible concur in this conclusion, for our responsibility is measured by our opportunity, and our relations to light and knowledge. We do not expect a blind man to distinguish colors. Men do not gather figs of thistles. Our Lord said to the Jews: "If ye were blind (that is ignorant), ye should have no sin, but now ye say we see, therefore your sin remaineth." John ix. 41; see Acts xvii. 30; Rom. iv. 15; Psa. xlix. 20; John iii. 19. Hence, in the absence of light, men are not amenable to punishment. Human laws do not judge or punish the irresponsible. Is God less wise or merciful than man? Hence, minors, imbeciles, idiots and Pagans being all in a state, or "in times, of ignorance," will not appear in the resurrection and judgment, being irresponsible. Of them the Scriptures affirm, they shall "never see light, death hath perpetual dominion over them, like sheep they are laid in the grave, they shall not rise," etc. Of them we may safely say, they shall not live again, and shall not be the subjects of the second death. But the case is widely different with the wicked—our second class—who sin against light and knowledge, and whose "sin remaineth" and calls for the penalty of death.

As our contention does not extend to the first or third class, but is confined to the second only, we proceed to consider the conclusion propounded and argued by our opponents who have taken the negative of the questions contained in our caption.

We accept the obligation always incumbent on the affirmant to prove his position, and, hence, make our appeal "to the law and the testimony" as our final arbiter and the end of controversy. When, therefore, I cite from John v. 28, 29, —the words of the Great Teacher sent from God—that "the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation," and when I supplement these words by Paul's declaration before Felix, the governor, in Acts xxiv. 15, "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust," and Dan. xii. 2, "and many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt," and then add a citation from Revelation xx. 12-14, "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God .... and they were judged, and whosoever was not found written in the book of life were cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death." I may well rest my cause here, and taking refuge behind the strong defence of God's word, calmly abide the judgment of all candid unprejudiced minds.

It seems obvious that there is no escape from the conclusive force of this testimony to prove the future resurrection, "both of the just and the unjust," and the consignment of the latter to the second death, unless some meaning can be logically attached to the language widely different from its obvious import, which, so far as I have read and heard, though suggested, has not been yet established.

Leaving in abeyance all consideration, for the present, of any such arguments, I point attention to the conceded fact that "God will, assuredly, render to wicked men the indignation and wrath," etc., threatened in Rom. ii.; and, further, that this retribution must overtake them, either in their lifetime or after death—i. e., at the resurrection—(for we are all agreed that there is no knowledge or consciousness in the grave or in any intermediate state). If it be contended that this retribution is visited upon them in their present life—a necessary result in order to dispense with their future resurrection from the dead—then our logicians must show this fact of retribution in their present life from our experience and observation, as well as from Scripture. Such a result, I admit, would dispense with accountability for them in a future state. How do they attempt to do so? I answer, in view of their published and private efforts, by two mistaken methods of proceeding. First, by quoting texts of Scripture which declare the non-resurrection of the third class above, and misapplying them to the destiny of the second class; and, secondly, by citing cases of wicked Jews who suffered condign punishment in this life under the law of Moses, and thence, inferring, that all other men receive all their punishment in, or during the present life. Let us fairly consider these, taking the last point first.

Those who stand opposed to us know the importance of "rightly dividing the word of truth." Now, to suppose or even to prove that wicked Jews, living under the law of Moses, received the due reward of their deeds in their lifetime, then and there, under a code which imposed temporal and present penalties, and without any threat or hint to them of future punishment, would, by no means, prove that those not under that law but under a different system—the gospel—which looks to future penalties and under which men do not meet the due reward of their evil deeds, here, and now, must be equally exempt from future accountability. The circumstances attending the two cases are widely different, and hence, the law is not the same, yet the articles in THE RESTITUTION to which I am now replying specially, are made up mainly of texts and inferences to prove or imply what is not now denied, and what, if admitted, does not help that cause in the least, viz.: that, under the law, "every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward," does it thence follow that the same must be true under the gospel? Do they indeed contend that wicked men here, and now, receive the just recompense of reward in spite of our almost universal experience to the contrary? If not, and if there be no resurrection of the wicked class, do they not go unpunished altogether? How, then, is God's word to be fulfilled which expressly says they shall be rewarded according to their deeds? Surely they discern and will admit the wide difference—the broad contrast—between the law of Moses and the gospel of Christ. Compare Deuteronomy xxviii. with the sermon on the Mount. The former contained promises of blessings and threats of curses to be visited on the Jews in the present life; the latter contains blessings and punishments respectively in the kingdom of God and at the day of judgment—both in the future. I can admit what our opponents have labored to prove, that, when those under Moses had received their "just recompense of reward" they will not undergo a second judgment or a second death, if they have met and paid the due reward of their deeds. But that conclusion is far from proving that sinners against the light and knowledge of the gospel of Christ, are to be equally exempt from future accountability, for that would effect their escape "from their evil deeds" altogether. Indeed quite the contrary is the teaching of Paul, who, in Heb. x., points to "certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries," adding, "He that despiseth Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God," etc?. Yet they say there is no future punishment for these offenders! Those certainly err—"not knowing the Scriptures and the power of God"—who do not recognize this wide difference between the two covenants made with Abraham, the one relating to the Jewish people and restricted to them, the other, embracing in its offers of grace and mercy, "all nations." Paul, in Romans and in Hebrews viii., ix. and xi., contrasts them, saying, that the law was faulty in that it could not make the comers thereto perfect, which the bringing in of a better covenant—the gospel—founded on better promises of good things to come, did, and hence we cannot conclude, with these promises before us, that, because individual wicked Jews, living under Moses' law, may have suffered the penalty of death, after, or as the full end of their punishment, and without a future retribution, the same reasoning holds good and can justify us in promising sinners against Christ's law that they shall escape punishment, both here and hereafter!

Had your correspondents who maintain non-resurrection and no future punishment to any of the wicked class, confined their denial to Jews who had been already adjudged "a just recompense of reward" and to all of our third class of the human race, they would have stood on defensible ground. They would have expended their zeal and ability in the worthy cause of combatting the orthodox but mistaken assumption that all human creatures, however brutalized by vice, ignorance and crime, and however incompetent and irresponsible, by reason of their surroundings, must live again, and even defile and mar God's redeemed fair world by their baneful presence forever. It is against the unscriptural and illogical dogma that the wicked are to go unpunished, and are never to be confronted in a future judgment-day, that I enter my protest. Is there no ground to fear that in their zeal to overturn the popular theological fallacies of universal resurrection and the eternal torment of wicked men in a future life, our opponents have themselves gone to the opposite extreme of denying any resurrection to the wicked, and thereby exempting them from all accountability for the deeds done in the body! It has been well said that, in our haste to escape from Babylon, let us not run past Jerusalem! Will not our correspondents accept the friendly caution?

I submit to our opponents in this argument that there is one cardinal oracle of God that they either ignore or disparage, and which is the key to a satisfactory solution of the difficulties which they imagine to environ this subject. It is the plain declaration of Rom. vi. 23: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." Death is the penalty of all sin against God, Adam's sin in Eden hath that scope and extent to this day. Hence all his race—good and bad—suffer that penality for his sin. We die because Adam sinned. The nursery rhyme is true—

"In Adam's fall,
We sinned all."

Death, however, pays that penalty in full. But how is it as to our own personal, individual sins against God's law, after we become acquainted with, and are amenable to it? Is not death still the wages due for this personal sin? Who will deny it? Now, I ask, must not that penalty be paid? Yes, undoubtedly, unless the law-giver pardon the sin and remit the penalty. There is no other escape from this penalty. Does not this show the necessity of another life and another death to those who are not pardoned in order to fulfill the conditions and inflict on them the penalty of the violated law? We know that all—good and bad—die in consequence of Adam's sin. Is it not equally true, that all who have committed personal sin which is not condoned and forgiven, must die for that sin also, seeing that the "wages of sin is death?" Does not this fact create the necessity for the resurrection of the dead sinner, his judgment and ultimate consignment to the second death, in which he pays the penalty for his own sins? Does not this logic—this "reasoning out of the Scriptures"—establish, without contradiction, the great Bible truth, that, as in the first death we pay the penalty or "wages" of Adam's sin, so in the second death, the unrepentant and unpardoned sinner pays the penalty of his own personal sins against God? This second death, the saint, who is a pardoned sinner, escapes, because, in believing and obeying the gospel of the Son of God, he obtains, from the gracious and merciful law-giver, the forgiveness of his sins and the remission of the penalty of the second death, and of him it is written, "he shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. ii. 11.

Perfectly harmonious with this view we can understand why "John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, and that all Jerusalem and the region round about, were baptized of John, in Jordan, confessing their sins," and in Acts ii. 37, that Peter, at the feast of Pentecost, taught his believing and sorrowing countrymen, in reply to their anxious inquiry what to do, to "repent and be baptized for the remission of sins," thus carrying out and illustrating the commission he received from the Master in Luke xxiv., to "preach repentance and remission of sins among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem," and thereby they "saved themselves from that untoward generation," and if they continued faithful to the end, they will escape the second death, which, otherwise, inevitably overtakes all the unpunished and unpardoned wicked, both living and dead.

It is not intended in disparagement of your intelligent correspondents and of others, whose opposing views have been kindly made known to me, besides the published arguments in THE RESTITUTION of Brethren Myers, Simonds, ——, and perhaps others, I have enjoyed the advantage of hearing, by private correspondence, maturely considering the views of Brethren Crighton and Lithgow, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, in support of no future life for wicked men, that I say I think I discover the real source of their fallacies:

I. In confounding the penalty due to man's personal sins with the death penalty due to Adam's sin and contending that both are satisfied by one death, whilst the Scriptures distinctly declare that the first death is due for Adam's sin, and the second death is demanded by God's law for our individual, personal sin, for "the wages of sin is death" in the last case, as well as in the first. We are all born under sentence of death—our birth—sin consigns us to the grave, and if we die before becoming capable of personal sin, we escape the second death. But, if we do wilfully and knowingly commit personal sin, we must pay the penalty of that offence in the second death, unless, by seeking and accepting the proffered pardon, we escape it. The unpardoned wicked reject this offer and hence suffer the penalty.

II. In confounding the penalty of wilful sin under the gospel code with that under the Mosaic law. In the latter, the penalty was, as we have seen, to be inflicted in the present life, (as we see now, in part and in a national sense, in the dispersion, and the disabilities of the Jews and their long exile from their native land) whilst the retribution under Christ to the wicked is future—is another life. This is abundantly proved by the Bible in its denunciation of "the wrath to come, of the judgment of the great day, of the denial to the wicked of any part in the first resurrection, and of their resurrection and perdition in the second death," all in the future. It is also illustrated to us by the Master himself in the parable of Lazarus and the rich man, Luke xvi., in which in the final scene, and in the future state, Lazarus is comforted and the rich man is tormented. "The rich man died." His punishment is represented as occurring after death.

If our premises be correct and the foregoing reasoning be sound, it would seem to follow, inevitably, that our conclusion must be true, which, happily, we can embody and express in the very words of divine inspiration, namely:

In Daniel xii. 2.
In John v. 28, 29.
In Acts xxiv. 14, 15.
In Rev. ii. 11 and xx. 13, 14. All herein cited in full. But I would not even seem to be wanting in respect and deference to those from whom we dissent, and hence, I proceed to consider, briefly, the prominent objections to our conclusions which they present, and which have not yet been replied to or disposed of.

1. It is urged that the penalty of the second death was not announced to Adam in Eden. The answer is obvious. There was no such penalty to him or his race, for, as yet, there was no promise of a future state in which alone a second death is possible. There was then no personal sin or personal sinner among his descendants, for as yet he was childless. Simple death paid the penalty of the only sin, as far as we know, that he committed, and if he and Eve be in the resurrection at all, they will doubtless be in the first resurrection among "the blessed and holy," and I agree that they will not be the subjects of the second death if they never had any opportunity of knowing of it, neither will any of their children be its victims, for the same reason and in like circumstances. But the case is widely different with those of Adam's posterity who fall under the jurisdiction of the second Adam and become amenable to the penalties of his law, among which we find future resurrection, judgment and the second death to be enumerated.

2. That "it is only in Revelation"—a book of symbols and figures—that the second death is taught. Is not this very dangerous ground? Let us see. It is only in Revelations we learn that Christ is to reign on earth, with his saints, for one thousand years, and that the gracious and glowing promises of future blessedness "to him that overcometh" are made, through the messages to the seven churches of Asia. Must we give up or relax our faith in these because they are found in a book of symbols? Is not the Bible itself largely a book of symbols? Does not Paul say (Heb. ix. and x.) that the law was a shadow, a figure, a symbol, a pattern and sign of good things to come, adding, "almost all things are by the law purged with blood" to typify the blood of "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world?" Can we not be taught literal facts and truths by comparison and illustration which are symbols? Are we taught nothing by the Parables of Jesus? But the last book in the Bible is a prophecy. It so declares, being a revelation of things (substantial realities) which must shortly come to pass, inclusive of the future judgment day and of the second death. Shall we ignore the blessing pronounced in the very frontispiece of this book, in the 3d verse, "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words and keep the things that are written therein," and shut our ears and close our eyes to the solemn warning in the end of it, that "if any man shall take away from the words of this book, God shall take away his part out of the book of life," etc? If we discard the resurrection and the second death of the wicked dead, do we not to that extent, like Hymeneus and Philetus, deny the resurrection? But, in point of fact, is it true that the second death is only to be found in Revelations? I think not. Our Lord said of the resurrection of the righteous, "Neither can they die any more," Luke xx. 36, implying that the contrary class should die again. Paul, in 2 Cor. ii. 16, says that he was to the wicked "a Savior of death ending in death," (Campbell's Translation,) which implies a second death, and Jude declares of "the ungodly," verse 12, that they are (shall be) "twice dead," in allusion to their coming doom.

3. "Future punishment," saith our correspondent, "is always punishment on living men, not on men raised from the dead." Indeed? Doth not our Lord say, John xii. 48, "He that rejecteth me hath one that judgeth him—the word shall judge him at the last day?" Again, in Matt xxvi. 64, he said to Caiaphas and his colleagues of the Sanhedrim, "Hereafter you shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power," etc., and to the scribes and Pharisees, he says, "You shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and yourselves cast out." Is it possible that all this has been fulfilled "on living men!" Are Abraham, etc., yet in the kingdom of God? Must not these unrepentant murderers of Christ be brought to life by a resurrection in order to the fulfillment of these threats of punishment?

4. "There is not a passage in the Bible where 'punish' or 'punishment' is connected with a future life"—an assertion as unsupported, I submit, as the last. Doth not Peter say, in 2 Pet. ii. 9, "The Lord knoweth how to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished?" and in 2 Thess. i. 9, we read of the wicked who "obey not the gospel"—(whether dead or alive, is not stated,) as follows: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," etc., "when (i. e., after) he shall come," etc. Are not the second death, the wrath to come, tribulation and anguish, destruction, "burnt up root and branch," etc., all punishments on the wicked? Are they not always spoken of in the Bible as future events? Are they not associated as to time with the resurrection of the dead, the coming or presence of the Lord, the judgment scene, etc., all of which are in the future life, and are never spoken of as already past? Who can deny it?

5. It is urged that the wicked dead having all been punished already in this life, the future judgment and second death—whatever that may be—for they do not define it, intelligibly—are reserved, exclusively, for living sinners on earth when, or after, Christ comes. To the first branch of this statement, the reply is already furnished in what has been submitted herein. As to the second death for living sinners, who have never died at all—even once—it is for our logicians to work out that puzzle. It is above our ken. It is true they seek refuge from this obvious difficulty by pointing to the "blessed and holy" living who have not died, having part in the first resurrection of Rev. xx. 6. But the difficulty in that case is wholly removed by the explanation furnished elsewhere in Scripture, as in 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52, and in 2 Thess. iv. 17, that the living saints shall be changed—transfigured—in a moment and share in the immortality of the righteous dead, and thus, by "rightly dividing the word of truth," all confusion and inconsistency is avoided. But where, I ask, does the Bible contain any explanation which enables them to escape the impossibility of exposing men to a second death who have never experienced the first death? The living wicked can share in the second death to the once dead but now raised wicked, although they may be severally punished, one thousand years apart. But our contention, we must remember, is as to the resurrection and second death of the dead wicked. Rev. xx. 6, is explicit that it is "the rest of the dead (the wicked dead) who lived not again until the one thousand years are past," which we know, logically, proves that then they will live again, by a resurrection. This we affirm, and our opponents venture to deny. Let the word of God judge between us.

Is it needful to pursue the argument further, or to cite additional testimony? May we not paraphrase the words of the "Greater than Moses," and say, "If they hear not," these sayings from the Divine Record, "neither would they be persuaded though one arose from the dead."

The time and space forbid a further notice in detail of the objections urged to what seems to me to be the clear Bible conclusion we have reached. Let all "good and honest hearts" obey the divine command to "examine yourselves and see if ye be in the faith," and receive with meekness the engrafted word which is always able to make us wise unto salvation.

Sometime.

It is a sweet song warbled to and fro among the topmost boughs of the heart, and filling the whole air with joy and gladness as the songs of birds do when the Summer morning comes out of darkness, and day is born on the mountains. We have all our possessions in the future which we call "sometime." Beautiful flowers and singing birds are there, only our hands seldom grasp the one or our ears hear the other. But, oh, reader, be of good cheer, for all the good there is a golden "sometime;" when the hills and valleys of time are passed; when the wear and fever, the disappointment and the sorrow of life is over, then there is the place and the rest appointed of God. Oh, homestead, over whose roofs fall no shadows or even clouds; and over whose threshold the voice of sorrow is never heard; built upon the eternal hills and standing with thy spires and pinnacles of celestial beauty among the palm trees of the city of God, those who love him shall rest under thy shadows, where is no sorrow nor pain, nor the sound of weeping "sometime."—Bel.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His Holy Prophets since the world began." It also points out, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortalized saints as joint rulers with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also maintains the very belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

"Beyond the Grave."

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Bishop Foster's Lecture at the M. E. Church, May 5th.

The Bishop affirmed that man's senses can only follow him to the grave. Beyond that they cannot go. All is dark and obscure beyond as far as knowledge of future life is concerned. It is only through faith in the words of Christ, who was authorized to reveal a future life, that we may have hope of future life. All of which we can readily accept as true, but when he asserts that Christ declared that man is immortal, we take issue and would ask, Where in all the sayings of Christ do we find such a declaration? We feel safe, perfectly so, in answering, Nowhere! The young man who acknowledged Christ as a good teacher, did not so understand him. If he had thus understood him, he would not have asked the question relative to what he must do to inherit eternal life, if he had believed he already had it, any more than a man who believed he was not sick would ask what he must do to be healed. Christ in his declaration to Martha predicated all hope of future life upon the resurrection of the dead, and not on an immortal spirit, as the Bishop did. He said, "I am the resurrection and the life," thus making resurrection the cause and the promised life the result. But the Bishop ignored the resurrection entirely, not having mentioned it in his entire lecture. According to the Bishop's logic he had six or seven future lives, or he never will have a future life,—because he affirmed the immortality of the soul, so there can be no future life of the soul, and he has already killed or worn out six or seven bodies. If the soul never loses the present life it can never have a future life, unless it shall be affirmed that future life only relates to future time. If so, both soul and body are entering upon future life every moment. The Bishop's lecture was not germain to his published subject. It should read, The life of the soul after the death of each successive body or through an eternal succession of worn-out bodies; because he neither taught the existence of abstract spirits without material bodies, nor incorruptible bodies that cannot be worn out, He did, however, launch into the unlimited future and boldly affirmed the necessity of material mediums through which these "spirit men" are to communicate with material beings. Thus he combined the philosophy of Pythagoras and Davis, the high-priest of modern Spiritism, to-wit: the pre-existence and transmigration of souls and materialized bodies made by spirit mechanics, the same as houses composed of brick or wood are made.

Thus, Mr. Foster is as rank a materialist as those whom he denounces as infidels, for according to the fixed laws governing matter, nothing but matter can operate on matter, and the Bishop declares that all bodies and all the machinery that moves the world are made by spirit which moves the arm that swings the sledge, strikes with the hammer or moves the plane; that the spirit guides with so much precision the brush that paints the beautiful tints and colors of the grand pictures in the galleries of the world; that the spirit creates and moves the heart which whirls the blood through the thousand veins and arteries; that the spirit creates the fine net-work of the brain, and touches it at will and thought, feeling and emotion respond. But according to the laws of matter the surface of two physical bodies must come in contact before any physical result can be produced. The spirit must be material to move matter. Can that which has no hand swing a hammer or create an arm to swing it? No matter how much matter may be sublimated it is matter still. The Bishop exemplifies his theory by practice, that is, if we accept his philosophy. His soul has created and worn out six or seven bodies, and from present appearances it must soon migrate into another body. If this is what he calls death, he has certainly got used to dying. In his theory there is no such thing as death, for the soul is the life of the body, and as far as it is concerned, what is called death is only a change of the mode of life. According to the Bishop's lecture he has been living in close communion with several animals, which he has worked to death; for he declares that the body is an animal the same as a horse. He compared his bodies to so many horses which he had harnessed for work; as soon as one horse would give out, he would take the harness off the old horse and put it on the new horse. From his parity of reasoning, availing myself of the Bishop's dates, he never could have a horse more than about ten years old. If this, simile of the Bishop is an appropriate one, then, unless he is an exception to his own rule, he cannot possibly be more than a ten-year-old boy, I would say, judging from his appearance, that he is on the shady side of three score and ten. The Bishop is a living confutation of his own theory. Suppose every piece of material in a wagon should be superseded by a new piece made out of new material every ten years, then it would be impossible that any part of the wagon, much less the whole wagon, should be more than ten years old. If this theory were true, all marriages, debts and obligations would be outlawed as null and void at the end of every ten years, because the contracting parties would all be dead. This philosophy is false. The framework of the man,—that which has form,—never passes away until the man is dead and dissolved to dust. If, as the Bishop affirmed the eye cannot see, the ear hear, the nerves feel or the brain think, these being only the organs upon which the soul plays, then let us consider a few facts: I am sitting in a room looking out through a window upon external objects. Remove the glass and I can see through the hole; but remove my eyes and my soul is perfectly blind; destroy the auditory nerve and the soul cannot hear; sever the nerves from the brain and the soul cannot feel; destroy the brain and the soul cannot think. If a master musician cannot play a good tune upon a poor instrument, how can he play without any instrument at all? There are examples of men whose brains have been obstructed by wounds, being unconscious for several years. But when the fractured part was raised with surgical instruments, thought would be resumed just where it had been intercepted—the soul having been oblivious to all that had occurred during the interregnum. Now, one of two things is true, either memory is an attribute of the soul or the body. If an attribute of the soul, then it is absolutely dependent upon the body for its intelligence, for if the soul could not remember anything that had occurred while its organ was diseased, then if that organ had remained diseased two, ten or any number of years longer, the same cause would have produced the same effect, or if the brain, the organ of thought, had been utterly destroyed, then all consciousness together with all power to reproduce consciousness would cease. The same cause which would make the soul unconscious for one year would make it eternally unconscious, if the cause should exist eternally. Or if memory is an attribute of the body then intelligence inheres in the body as an inherent quality of matter, for it is the function of a group of intellectual organs to call to mind what the mind had once known. It is the function of the brain to think. It performs no other function in the economy of man.

The Bishop's appeal to the platonic argument to prove the immortality of the soul was a signal failure. If great intellect evidences immortal existence, then but few of earth's millions can hope to obtain the priceless boon. If uninterrupted progression up the ascending scale of knowledge proves immortal powers, then the Bishop with his fine physical organization and acknowledged intellectual powers, is an exception to his own rule. Perhaps no one who heard Bishop Foster thirty years ago, but would be forced to acknowledge an abatement in intellectual power and vigor. His analogy is against himself. The rule under the most favorable circumstances is a gradual ascent up the rugged hill of knowledge until he reaches the full vigor of manhood, when the order is reversed and he commences a retrograde movement, descending to the base of a second childhood,—living over his childhood and forgetting the events of yesterday or the passing hour. Such is the brief history of man. The bones, muscles, brain shrink; the elasticity of youth is gone; the fires of intellect burn dimly; memory, the great conservator of all wisdom and knowledge, lets go its intellectual grasp, and he, the splendor of whose colossal intellect was the pride and glory of the world, drops back into the bosom of mother earth; and unless God shall interpose he will be to all eternity as though he never had been. If great intellectual powers prove immortality, then weak intellectual powers prove mortality, and before the last-named test the millions must fall. If progression proves immortality, then retrogression proves mortality. The advocates of this dangerous theory must be very careful where they draw the dividing line in this ascending and descending scale, separating between mortality and immortality. They must not raise it too high or some men will fall below, nor too low or some beasts will rise above. Where in the ascending scale from the gorilla, the Kaffre and the Hottentot shall we commence our upward march? This theory is perfectly suicidal to all ordinary intellects. The Bishop's three arguments to prove the immortality of man, prove the same for the beast. Do not the higher order of beasts possess consciousness, knowledge and will? These the Bishop affirmed were not attributes of matter, but of spirit. These inhere in the higher order of beasts, therefore they are immortal too, if the possession of these attributes proves immortality. Will the Bishop inform us whether instinct is a quality of matter or spirit? According to his theory instinct must be an attribute of spirit. All beasts have instinct, therefore all beasts have immortal spirits. The Bishop assumed everything and proved nothing.

A person would suppose from his reference to the Bible that it sustained his assumptions. Its teachings, however, from Genesis to Revelation are just the opposite from all his assevverations. The Bible affirms that man was made of dust; not spirit (Gen. ii. 7); that man is mortal, not immortal (Job iv. 20); that man dies and must be raised from the dead to live again (Job xiv. 10, 14; John xi. 25, 44). The word immortal occurs but once in the Bible, and is applied to God alone. Immortality occurs but five times, and is never applied to man during the present life, but as something to be sought for and given to the righteous only at the resurrection and appearance of Christ (Rom. ii. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 52, 53). The only well-founded hope of life beyond the grave is offered to us in the Scriptures, and that only by a resurrection from the dead. If there be no resurrection, the Apostle Paul concludes, "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished" (1 Cor. xv. 18). "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave" (Psa. xlix. 15) "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise" (Isa. xxvi. 19). "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrections of the dead; for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. xv. 21, 22). These are some of the blessed assurances the Scriptures give us of life beyond the grave.

Everybody knows good counsel except him that hath need of it.

The Church—Its Founder and Builder.

And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Matt. xvi. 18.

1. There are many so-called churches in this world; and such a number in some cities as to give those cities the pious appellation of "City of Churches," and they all have their various names to designate them one from the other. Some are founded by this so-called eminent divine, some by another, just as it happens; and but few trace their foundation and origin back to the true source. They all bolster up a foundation, though it be "wood, hay, stubble," which is all destined to go by the board, (1 Cor. iii. 11-15,) but "the foundation of God standeth sure," etc., (2 Tim. ii. 19); and this is the foundation which will alone be able to cope with the combined powers of earth and hell, and they will not be able to prevail against it. These powers may assault it, may meet it in terrible conflict, but may not triumph. The triumph will be on the side of Christ and those who are with him. Rev. xvii. 14.

2. This church, founded upon a rock, is a unit; it is not susceptible of division or sub-division; it is one body, composed of many members. (Cant. vi. 9; Rom. xii. 5; 1 Cor. xii. 12, 14, 25); the last reference, take the marginal reading—"division." The apostle has warned us against such a thing as proving calamitous. 1 Cor. i. 10-13. We see the indivisibility of the church—its impossibility shown by the most striking illustration, Christ's body—and from the fact that the power of the gospel is to concentrate and cement, not scatter or divide. The prayers of Christ, the prayers of the apostles, the work of the ministry of the New Testament, is to gather, build up, consolidate into one holy, consecrated unity, (John xvii. 11, 21-23; Eph. iv. 11-13,) preparatory to the crowning consummation when the great head shall come in the splendors of his Epiphany and be united visibly to his "body which is the church," on the event of "the marriage of the Lamb."

3. Like the city of which we read, "which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Heb. xi. 10. So, here, in this case, its founder and maker is God, or Christ, as they are all one in purpose, aim and end. Observe, upon this rock I will build—the personal pronoun—I will build my—a personal pronoun in the possessive case—church. This gives us the founder, builder and owner. Emphasize the words, if you please, so that you may get the full force and meaning of them, and carry along with you the idea as in contradistinction to all others of the thousand and one churches, and the more in number—builders—"I will build my church." Blessed thought, to have such a wise designer and architect. Such a master builder! Now, if this church was the contrivance, or work of men, we might have some fears of its coming to naught; but, it being the work of God, we need have no fears of its ultimate success and completion, that the capstone will finally be placed upon it with shoutings of "grace, grace unto it."

4. If Christ laid the foundation stone of this glorious structure, and will finally finish it, though it may have other names to designate it in Scripture, such as "the church of God," "the church of the living God," "the church of the first-born," etc., yet how appropriate—even as he not only founded it, but "gave himself for it," etc., to adorn it with the trite and simple inscription—"CHRIST'S CHURCH"—and, moreso, as he designs to "present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." Eph. v. 25-27. Here its splendid destiny is clearly pointed out for the encouragement of its "many mansions."

5. The nature of its foundation. What does its materials consist of? In Isa. xliv. 11, 12, the prophet, speaking of Zion, which, doubtless, in this case, means the church, says: "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted! behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones," etc. The language is sybolical; the beautiful and valuable images used prove how precious are the truths employed as the foundation of the church. In Isa. xxviii. 16, we have another reference to this: "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation," etc. Compare 1 Pet. ii. 6, 7, 8. In Eph. ii. 19-22, Paul, speaking of "the saints and of the household of God," which is the church, says: "And thou art built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; in whom all the building being fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord, in whom ye also are builded together, for a habitation of God through the spirit." Compare 1 Pet. ii. 5. The truths that the apostles and prophets uttered are here personified, and these precious truths, together with those that Jesus declared form the foundation upon which the church is erected, and upon these premises we may return to the text, confident that the difficulty, if there is any, will, at once be removed as to what Jesus meant in regard to what was the true basis of his church, whether he designed that we should understand that he would found it upon Peter or upon the confession Peter made there and then, which brings us to consider.

6. The circumstances which prompted this declaration of our Lord, which certainly was the bold confession that Peter, as regards the divinity of our Lord which was inspired of God, as we find, "But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, 'Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God.' And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon Bar Jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock (surely not, Peter,) but this grand central truth, that I am the Christ; upon this fundamental truth I will build my church." This is the plain English of this great controverted text. Of this glorious institution, the architect and builder is divine, as every stone that is laid in its superstructure is a "lively stone," hence, "partakers of the divine nature;" and the "cap-stone" will be divine, all "of God's building;" and, hence, I take it that the foundation is divine, and, hence, it could not have been poor, weak and frail humanity in the person of Peter, he his intentions ever so good.

I think that those who claim Peter as the foundation of their church have but a sandy foundation for that church, that the coming and the gates of hell will prevail against and sweep asunder. Matt. vii. 27.

Again, taking the foundation stone to mean Peter, does it not prove more for its advocates than they care to accept or carry with it? Let us look for a moment. It was in this interview, or a little subsequent to it, that Peter is found rebuking his Lord from the circumstance of his declaring "how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders .... and be killed," etc. But he turned and said unto Peter, "Get thee behind me Satan; thou art an offence unto me; for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." Now, if Peter is the first pope and the head of the church, this is rather a heavy charge against him. It does not seem likely that our Lord would have chosen a man for so high and holy a position as the foundation and head of his church one moment, and in the next moment call him Satan, and as one that savored not of the things of God. It is not likely he, knowing all men, and what was in their hearts, that he would have called a person to so high a position as this who is a little while after found, not only following "him afar off," fearing, if seen in the company of Jesus, that he would be arrested too, but actually denying that he knew him; but more, when charged by the little damsel that he was a confederate, "he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not of whom ye speak." Mark xiv. 66-71. The circumstances and facts of the case are all against such an interpretation, as given by the papists, and prove the exposition, here given,—as is generally received by Protestants—to be the correct one, with the exception of the clause—"the gates of hell shall not prevail," etc.

My exposition of this—which will be given in a few words—it is not believed, will be received by either Protestants or Catholics, which is this: The language, as the preceding, upon which we have already discoursed, is figurative; hell here, means hades, the grave, or place of the departed, or state of the dead, or place. Hence, gate is a metaphor, employed here to designate the entrance to this receptacle to the place of the dead; hence, it is said to Job, "Have the gates of death been opened to thee?" Job xxxviii. 17; and the Psalmist, "Thou that liftest me up from the gates of death." Psa. ix. 13. And speaking "fools," he says, "Their soul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they draw near unto the gates of death." Psa. cvii. 18. Now, our Lord descended into this grave, or hell, if you please; "for he that ascended,.... also descended, ... that he might fill all things." Eph. iv. 9, 10. And, as it is said, "Thou wilt not leave my soul (or me) in hell, (hades); neither wilt thou suffer the holy one (Jesus) to see corruption." Psa. xxi. 10. "Hell is moved from beneath to meet thee at thy coming," etc. Isa. xiv. 9. Now, it is said that the devil hath the power in some way of death, and that he holds them in some mysterious way in his grasp. Heb. ii. 14. Why the enemy here ever had the power of death, we do not know, but it is here plainly stated, and inferred in other places. The fact of Michael having a dispute "with the devil .... about the body of Moses," is proof, (Jude verse 9), and the triumphant song of the resurrected ones is another proof. It plainly shows that these saints were held in hades by some power, or some one, and when delivered, they shout over "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, (or hell, margin), where is thy victory?" 1 Cor. xv. 55. Taking this view, we suppose that Satan, having the power of hades, hence, over all the sleeping saints for all the ages anterior to the coming of Christ, that he wonderfully exulted in the thought of Christ's death; that now he certainly would hold them forever in his grasp; but how was he disappointed when he found that the death of Christ was the very event that invested the Son of God with all power over death and the dominions of hell, and placed him in possession of the keys to open the gates of the receptacle of the dead at his pleasure, affording him, when the time comes, which will be heralded afar and near by the shrill soundings of the last trump! Looking at the matter in this light, we shall better appreciate the force of the thrilling announcement of our Lord immediately subsequent to his coming up triumphant from death's domains,—"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. i. 18. Hallelujah! Amen!

The Palm Tree.

The Scripture says: "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree." Let us see what this comparison means: "The palm grows not in the depths of the forest or in a fertile loam, but in the desert. Its verdure often springs apparently from the scorching dust. 'It is a friendly lighthouse, guiding the traveler to the spot where water is to be found.' The tree is remarkable for its beauty, its erect aspiring growth, its leafy canopy, its waving plumes, the emblem of praise in all ages. Its very foliage is the symbol of joy and exultation. It never fades, and the dust never settles upon it. It was, therefore, twisted into the booths of the feast of tabernacles, was borne aloft by the multitude that accompanied the Messiah to Jerusalem, and it is represented as in the hands of the redeemed in heaven. For usefulness, the tree is unrivalled. Gibbon says that the natives of Syria speak of 360 uses to which the palm is applied. Its shade refreshes the traveller. Its fruit restores his strength. When his soul faints for thirst, it announces water. Its stones are ground for his camels. Its leaves are made into couches, its boughs into fences and walls, and its fibres into ropes and rigging. Its best fruit, moreover, is borne in old age; the finest dates being often gathered when the tree has reached a hundred years. It sends too from the same root a large number of suckers, which, in time, form a forest by their growth. What an emblem of the righteous in the desert of a guilty world! It is not uninstructive to add that this tree, once the symbol of Palestine, is now rarely seen in that country."—Joseph Angus.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPT. 24, 1879.

To Brother H. Heyes we are again indebted for a late number of the London Times with full details of news concerning eastern affairs.

A COPY of the Christian World has been sent to us from London by Brother W. Kellaway, containing the addresses of different members of "The Conditional Immortality Association." These addresses are of an able and instructive character, some of which we propose to transfer to the columns of our paper in future numbers.

OUR subscribers are responding quite encouragingly to the notice in one of our last papers. Numbers are renewing, and others, not quite ready, have written that they are pleased with the paper, and will renew soon. Probably some mistakes have been made in the figures on the mailing list which will most cheerfully be corrected when pointed out.

THANKS to the Indianapolis Journal Company, for a copy of the Indiana Official Railway Guide for September. From this we learn that the meeting of the Pioneer Association of persons over seventy years of age, and who have been in the state upwards of forty years, will take place at Indianapolis, Wednesday, October 1, 1879. Free transportation on railroads for all such persons.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Guilty!

Guilty? Yes, you are guilty before God. You are sinning every day. You are wasting the time that God has given you; you are throwing your talents away in vain and frivolous pursuits. Spending your money for that which is not bread.

You are aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise. You have no Father in heaven, you are not God's child, because you have refused the term of adoption. You have no blessed, everlasting inheritance in the future, because you will not take the steps to become an heir of God and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ.

You would rather bear the weight of guilt, rather remain indifferent and ignorant in regard to God's plan, than take the trouble of seeking for his hidden treasures; of knocking, that it may be opened; of digging, that you may find. It is so easy to drift on, and on, vaguely dreaming, that sometime and somehow you will be saved without any effort on your part.

But it is those who believe, that enter into rest, those who entering the race, run to the goal, who receive the prize. It is the victors, who are crowned. It is those who fight, that come off conquerors; those who have and keep the faith who overcome the world.

To be saved, without being a soldier redeemed without having a Savior; become one of God's elect, without being called, spotless, without being cleansed, virtuous, without striving, seek for an inheritance, while an alien, for rulership without being qualified! How vain! How delusive! Oh the guilt! who shall wash it away? Who purge out your old sins? Who make you white as snow? Who give you a conscience void of offense? Who make you fit for an inheritance with the saints in light? None but Jesus. You must come to him if you would be saved. There is none other name given under heaven whereby you can be saved. You must come to him if you would live. You must come to him if you would be made free from the dominion of sin, if you would no longer be its servants, no longer have it your master.

But at no mourner's bench, can you, as believing, repentant sinners, hear the blessed words of pardon; on no sacrificial altar can you lay the burden of your guilt and be assured of forgiveness; in no vestry can the healing stream be poured upon your heads. In vain you stand before confirming priest. God will not meet you there. Drops of water from consecrated bowl, will not cleanse your souls from sin. It is in vain to "teach for doctrines the commandments of men." "Obedience is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams." Alien waters will not heal. It must be the pool of Siloom and the waters of Jordan, if the blind would see and the leper rejoice.

Without shedding of blood, there is no remission. You, must yourselves, picture the death of the Son of God. As he died, you must in semblance, die; as he was buried, you must be buried; as he rose, you must rise, be immersed in the name of Jesus for the remission of your sins. At no other spot, has God promised to meet you with the blessed words of pardon, in no other act, will he grant you remission. No where else can you approach the cross, no where else can you come to the blood, or make the death of Christ of any avail in your salvation. Quiet your consciences if you can, flatter yourselves with the delusive thought that you can be saved anyhow, but remember "there is none other name given under heaven among men whereby you can be saved," that it is only in obedience in baptism that you can get the name, that the wrath of God cometh upon the children of disobedience. And then with the awakened consciences, seek for the truth, believe, obey and live.

Report of the Conference of the Church of God at Wolf Creek, Cloud County, Kansas.

According to previous notice the conference met at the Union Star school house. Conference called to order by Brother Nos. Brother Lott Clover, elected chairman, Brother A. Kesinger, president, and T. E. Cunningham, secretary. Brother J. M. Stephenson delivered an able address; convened, on motion, to appoint a committee on arrangements. Brothers Kesinger, Potter, Noe and Barnhill were appointed. Brother Potter delivered an address on the necessity of having an annual and quarterly conference. On motion, the annual conference is to be held at the Union Star school house, Cloud county, Kansas, on Oct. 1, 1880. The time of holding the first quarterly conference has been changed to Fairview school house, Mitchell county, Kansas. On motion, the first quarterly conference is to be held at Pleasant Ridge school house, Jewell county, Kansas, November 21, 1879. On motion, adjourned. Brother J. M. Stephenson and Soper spoke Saturday night and Sunday to a large and attentive congregation. There was a great interest manifested during the whole meeting by all present.

THE MELANCHOLY CZAR.

His Coat of Mail and His "Splendid Prison of State."

PARIS, August 30.—I have come to the conclusion that Russia wants a new Peter the Great. I may have taken this conclusion to St. Petersburg with me, but at any rate I came away with it, as a result of the little I saw and of a great deal that I heard. The country is ready for a new departure, and as willing as ever to be led by its Czars, but it must be led in a new way. Alexander now wants to lead the old way, and hence all the troubles of this part of his reign. Yet no man has such an opportunity, for he still has morally speaking, a kind of absolute power. The great mass of the people worship him as their priest and father not less than as their lord. It is touching, I am told, to see them prostrating themselves before him on the streets, and even kissing the ground on which he walks. This only intensifies the awful solitude of his position—a solitude which they say is driving him mad. He meets no man on a footing of intimacy, not even in his sports. I have lately looked over hundreds of sketches of his daily life at court, preserved in the albums of DeNichy, who was for some time painter to the Imperial family. Whatever the Czar may be doing—hunting, dancing, dining or idling—it is always under conditions which remind him that he has no true fellowship with his kind. When he kills a boar he stands well ahead of his suite, to meet the monster, the rest being so disposed indeed as to help him in case the boar should show himself unduly forgetful of the distinctions of etiquette.

The very Winter Palace, which is the Czar's ordinary residence at St. Petersburg, is but a splendid prison of state, where 6,000 titled jailers stand between him and the outer world. If I had time I should like to describe that palace, at the risk of traveling over ground already covered by the guide books. It is a town within a town. Its inmates are a veritable population, duly graded in the minutest subdivisions of official rank. The Czar, to do him justice, often breaks bounds, and, indeed, up to a late date he continued the habit of all his predecessors of going out on foot every day. But the recent attempt on his life has changed all that, and made him more lonely than ever. He has now fallen completely into the hands of his advisers, and their advice, in default of better, is that he shall increase the distance between him and human nature. Before that unlucky pistol-shot he went out afoot to pay his regular morning visit to a person in whom he took particular interest, and to two or three laughing children, who were perhaps the only "subjects" who could venture to treat him with the familiarity for which his heart must sometimes yearn. He was returning to the palace from such a visit when that madman, with the method of Nihilism in his madness, meeting him face to face, began to make him a target for ball practice with a revolver. It has been a mystery to me—it was a mystery to every one—how the Czar escaped with his life. The Nihilist meant to kill him; he fired point-blank, and shot after shot. It was given out that Alexander was not once hit—no doubt to make his preservation appear something in the nature of a miracle. This was only true in the sense that he was hit more than once, although not wounded. He wore a shirt of very fine strong chain mail under his coat. It was made for him by Leblanc, of the Boulevard Magenta, a well-known Paris armorer, who supplies the theaters for their mimic wars, but who also knows how to turn out work that would bear the brunt of a real one. Leblanc's first Imperial customer was the Emperor Napoleon III., and it was probably through the recommendation of some friend of the Emperor that Alexander, at the beginning of the present troubles, was led to apply to Leblanc for one of his patent safety suits. The armorer's own story is that a gentleman sought him out, and with some mystery asked if he could make a coat of mail that would turn a revolver bullet. He was doubtful himself of his own powers in this respect, though he had already provided Napoleon with an undershirt warranted to turn the edge of a knife. But an experiment was made with one of his best suits, and it was found that even a Colt's army revolver made no impression on its serried rings of steel. This explains the miracle of the Emperor's preservation. Leblanc has other illustrious customers, among them Prince Bismarck, and the confidential distribution of his business cards seems to be a common courtesy among the potentates of Europe. But the wearing of a coat of mail can hardly be conducive to unalloyed cheerfulness of disposition. The Emperor has a troubled look; there is unrest in the very fixity of his gaze. He stares at you when he meets you in the street as though he were wondering with what weapon you were going for him this time—the one-shooter, the six-shooter, the bomb or the knife.

RICHARD WHITELEG.

The Soul.

Will some one please give a definite and clear exposition of the word soul? Is it a distinct entity? Can it know anything of itself, without the body? If the soul is the life, where is it at death? for it cannot be either in the ground or in heaven. God breathed into man the "breath of life." Does that breath at death go back to God? or is it wasted in space, or reserved in some secret spot? Wherever the soul is, must there not exist life? Can man be called man without the soul? Is he not called so in Gen. ii. 7.

G. FRED. STEVENS.

The question asked by Mr. Stevens is a very important one. It is perplexing many minds, and will continue to perplex inquirers until the word is accurately defined and understood and used in one uniform sense. Different persons attach different ideas to the word, and it is often employed by the same person to express different ideas.

The word "soul" in the Scriptures, (or the Hebrew word nephesh, and the Greek word psuche, which is translated "soul") evidently means that vital, living principle which all animals have in common. It is applied indiscriminately to all animals. As this seems to reside in the blood and to be visibly represented by the blood, it is often made to stand for the blood. And when the blood of a man or an animal is poured out, his soul is said to be poured out. It is used most usually to designate the entire person, and hence is often translated by the personal pronoun I, me, he, him, etc., and it would have been better if it had been more frequently so translated.

Now if this were all of man, we should have the same reason to believe that he becomes extinct at death, as we have to believe that the brutes are entirely extinct when they die. But the Scriptures ascribe to man, especially the regenerate man, another and higher principle, which we translate spirit. It is expressed in the Greek New Testament by pneuma, and somewhat more vaguely in the Old Testament by the Hebrew words ruach or neshamah. This spirit is said to be given to man, or quickened into life, at the new birth, and then he is said to possess a tripartite nature—body, soul, and spirit.

Those who hold to this three-fold division in the nature of the regenerate man, are not all agreed as to whether this spirit was actually given to Adam when he was created, or, if given, to what degree it was given. But if given, it was in the germ, as it were; in an undeveloped state, and when he fell it was deadened—its development was arrested, and so men remain spiritually dead till they are renewed.

Now it is through the spirit that men live after death. It is not of the soul but of the spirit that eternal life is predicated. If men who are said to be spiritually dead live again, it is on account of their spiritual faculty, and not simply because they have an animal soul. It is this spiritual nature that makes them moral and responsible creatures. When it is alive, it unites them to God; indeed, it is the life of God in the soul of man. Though it be dead, or inoperative, yet the faculty is still there; but unless it be quickened into life they can have no hope of eternal life. They may, indeed, be raised and judged, but only to be condemned and to perish in the second death. They have no eternal life abiding in them.

If this distinction between the soul and spirit were to be kept in mind, as it ought to be, there would be no difficulty in understanding the teaching of the Bible on this question, nor would we have any difficulty in discussing it with others. But the word "soul" is not now understood by the great mass of people in this lower sense. It has taken on a higher meaning. It is made to include the spirit also, and, indeed, these two words, soul and spirit, are used interchangably, as though they meant the same thing. All our dictionaries define these two words in nearly the same terms, and not one person in a thousand can tell the difference between them. Our commentaries rarely throw any light on the subject.

If, now, we were to take the word "soul" according to its biblical sense, we should answer the question, or questions, propounded, in one way; but if we must use the word in its popular sense, we should answer in another way. Our inquirer must first tell us what he means by the word soul, before we can satisfy him.

Miracles of Bible Times.

If miracles were so plentiful in Bible times, why are they not of common occurrence still? Let us consider for a moment: "Plentiful in Bible times." What are Bible times? One would like to know within a few thousand years, or, a trifle like that, what times are meant. If you think miracles were abundant during all the centuries and millenniums of Bible times, you are greatly mistaken. There is a general impression that the Bible is a book full of miracles which come in at random as they do in the old heathen mythologies; but those who pay any attention to Bible perspective know better. Have you ever considered that in the book of Genesis, covering more than 2,000 years at the lowest computation, there is not a single miracle wrought by human agency? Adam works no miracle; Abel works no miracle; Enoch works no miracle; even Abraham works no miracle. Nor one of all the patriarchs. How different from all the old mythologies, and how different from what it would have been if this book had come to us merely from some dim mythological past. Even when God himself is represented as doing things out of the general course of nature, it is only at long intervals, and very rarely, as in the translation of Enoch, the judgment of the flood, the confusion of tongues, the birth of Isaac.

Remember that these events were centuries apart from each other. Even if there had been a miracle for every century, which there is not, you could scarcely say that they were "very plentiful." If you look at the history perspectively, you will learn that, all through Bible times, miracles were not the rule, but the exception; and more particularly, that the miracles cluster around particular epochs, when there was special need for such signs of divine presence and power; as at the time of the Exodus, after the long, dark interval of Egyptian bondage; at the time of Israel's deepest declension, when the prophets Elijah and Elisha were called in a special way to witness for the Lord; and above all in the times of Christ and the founding of the church, after the long and silent interval from the restoration to the Advent. Does not this way of looking at the sacred history put the Bible miracles in a very different and altogether reasonable light?—Rev. Dr. J. M. Gibson's "Ages Before Moses."

During the past six years ninety-three monasteries and forty-one convents have been suppressed in Rome, and their inmates 2,883 in number, cast adrift. The net proceeds of the confiscations and sale of the church property in the city were only five millions of dollars—a mere trifle in comparison to the great expectation entertained by the authorities.

NEWS ITEMS.

CETYWAYO CAPTURED.—THE ZULU KING TAKEN PRISONER BY LORD GIFFORD'S FIRST DRAGOONS.

LONDON, Sept. 17—1.30 p. m.—A dispatch has just been received from Cape Town, August 29, by way of Aden saying, "Marter captured Cetywayo yesterday." Marter was in command of a squad of dragoons.

The agent of the Eastern Telegraph Company at Aden confirms the report of the capture of the Zulu King, Cetywayo, by Major Marter with a detachment of the First Dragoons serving under Lord Gifford, in northeast Zululand, on August 28.

Some days before his capture Cetywayo disbanded his followers and secreted himself in the bush. The British, under Col. Barrow, have pursued him from kraal to kraal, burning the kraals as Cetywayo and a few followers fled before them. The capture was made by surrounding him in the bush with a detachment of troops and threatening to shoot him if he refused to surrender at once. He was alone and made no resistance.

HOW THE CABUL MASSACRE WAS BEGUN—A CHANCE FOR THE BRITISH OFFICERS TO ESCAPE.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—Indian officials telegraph further details of the attack on the British Residency at Cabul. It is related by a trooper who escaped, that when the mutinous troops were making an outcry for their pay, a soldier cried, "Let us kill the Envoy, and then the Ameer!" The mutineers then rushed upon the embassy, and stoned some of the servants. The troops composing the escort of the embassy fired upon the mutineers without orders from the British officers. The mutineers then went for their weapons. They were absent about a quarter of an hour, during which time the British officers might have escaped. The Residency was defended from the windows, and from a trench made on the mud roof. The letter sent by the escaped trooper was from Lieut. Hamilton promising the mutineers six months' pay. It was sent at 3 o'clock in the afternoon when the mutineers were already on the roof of the Residency, which was just being set on fire. The bearer of the letter was thrown from the roof and rendered insensible. When he recovered he was taken before Gen. Kerim Kahn, the commander of the mutinous brigade, who said he was powerless against the mutineers, and ordered the trooper to be imprisoned. On revisiting the Residency, when he escaped, the trooper saw the bodies of Lieut. Hamilton and Mr. Jenkyns. They were stripped and cut to pieces.

SOUTH AFRICA.

LONDON, Sept. 22.—Advices from Capetown to the 2d instant report that King Cetywayo was to embark at Port Dunford for Capetown. Sir Garnet Wolseley was expected at Utrecht on the 6th instant.

LONDON, September 21.—Constantinople dispatches say that the insurrection in Kurdistan has not been quelled. Two powerful tribes have joined Abdallah with 12,000 men.

YOKOHAMA, September 21.—Rumors of trouble between China and Japan continue to augment. It is reported that both countries are making warlike preparations.

LONDON, September 21.—The Russian Gazette reports that the city of Serpuchoff was nearly destroyed by fire the 15th instant. There have also been conflagrations in Toreok and the surrounding districts.

YELLOW FEVER.—SATURDAY'S REPORT.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., September 21.—Evening—Seven cases in all, six white and one colored, were reported to the board of health to-day. No additional deaths were reported.

THE WEEK.

The total number of new cases officially reported for the week is eighty; whites, forty-eight; colored, thirty-two; total to date, 1,316; total deaths from yellow fever in the city during the week, thirty-one; total to date, 340.

SUNDAY.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., September 21.—Eight new cases, four white and four colored, were reported to the board of health to-day. But one death has occurred since last night, Archie B. Kehoe, son of the late Captain P. M. Kehoe, who died beyond the city limits.

The arrival of General Grant at San Francisco, from his tour around the world, on Saturday evening, was the occasion of a great and enthusiastic popular demonstration of welcome. The General will travel through the regions of the Pacific coast and the Rocky mountains, and expects to reach Galena, Ill., some time in November, his intention being to spend the winter there.

BREVITIES.

The Liverpool Post says that the enormous richness of the old gold fields on the Guinea coast has not been exaggerated in the reports received of late. Sir John Glover's statement, that he had travelled over districts where one might dig up gold like potatoes, is all but literally realized in recent discoveries, which give $600 per ton of quartz at a depth of 50 feet, and $45 on the surface. Their extent is practically unlimited.

The great Irish pilgrimage is to Lough Derg Island. The penitential exercises are very severe and repeated thrice a day, and the pilgrims spend the night in what is known as "the prison." When morning has fairly dawned, they leave the prison, and wash head and feet in the lake, and are allowed to take a little water in the hollow of the hand. This refreshment is stated to be much needed, in view of the heat of the prison, watching all night, and reciting so many prayers. Formerly in the night an exhortation was given on the great truths of eternity, but the cries of the contrite disturbed the neighborhood so sorely that the practise was abandoned. The priests hear confessions day and night.

"The earth inhabited by men," says the Singhalese version of the "System of the Universe," "with the various continents connected with it, is subject alternately to destruction and renovation in a series of revolutions to which no beginning, no end, can be discovered. Thus it was; thus it will be ever. There are three modes of destruction. The world is destroyed seven times by fire and the eighth time by water. Every thirty-fourth destruction is by wind." Such is the orthodox Buddhist belief in the destructibility of the earth—a belief that elaborates and intensifies in a most unpleasant manner the idea commonly pictured in most other creeds of the way our world must perish some day.

The decay of Turkey appears to be inevitable. Dr. Washburn's account of the present condition of that unhappy country is especially valuable, being the report of an eye witness. He writes: "The English consuls in Asia Minor report a state of things which even Mr. Bourke, the Under-Secretary of State, declared to be more horrible than anything he had ever heard of. Almost within sight of Constantinople, the district of Adabazar is held by 40,000 Circassians, who have robbed the people of all their horses, cattle, and everything movable, prevented the cultivation of the fields, and have murdered in cold blood hundreds of Christians. Nothing is done to put an end to this reign of terror, which has continued for months. The same story of absolute anarchy comes from all parts of Asia Minor, and the condition of Macedonia is equally bad. "The condition of Turkey is well nigh hopeless; the progress of decay and disintegration has been more rapid during the past year than ever before; the time will probably soon come when the British must either abandon the Sultan altogether or interfere actively in the government of the country. They evidently intend to take the latter course, and they have already sent a large number of their best army officers into Asia Minor as consuls, to prepare the way for an occupation." Surely this betokens nothing else than the predicted drying up of the Euphrates Valley.

RUSSIANS AND TURKS AT KARS.

The Russian Government is making ineffectual endeavors to check the migration of the Turks from Kars, which is daily assuming larger proportions. Writing to the semi-official Tiflis Vestnik, a correspondent says that "hundreds of Mussulman families quit Kars every week for the frontier, preferring a long and dangerous journey and the probability of starvation at Erzeroum than to residence in the conquered Russian province and the acceptance of Russian rule." Governor Komaroff, of Batoum, has suggested, we are informed, to the Grand Duke Michael that the conscription laws should be temporarily suspended in favor of the Mussulmans, but the Czar's brother declares that the Turks "must either become Russian subjects at once and submit to military service, or else betake themselves to the frontier."—The Levant Herald, Constantinople, Turkey.

Notice.

We have received a letter with $400, ordering some books and subscriptions, and bidding us to change the address of the sender to Morrillton, Conway county, Ark., but having no name signed nor the present place of sending. If the person sending the same will please send his name and address we will know what to do with it.

A Free-Will Offering.

We, the undersigned, hearing the good of the cause of truth at heart, and believing that it is our duty to sustain the gospel with our means as well as our tongues, and believing that God will bless us for all the offering we make in behalf of the truth, have paid the sum set opposite our names for the purpose of freeing THE RESTITUTION from debt, and sending it out as a messenger of truth to those sitting in darkness, and to comfort those who are waiting in the light of life.

"An High Mountain Apart."

H. L. HASTINGS.

Mark iv. 2.

On the proud heights where Honor plants his throne.
And Grandeur holds his solitary sway,
'Mid clouds and mists, exiled and all alone,
A million spends his cold and troubled day.

To that chill summit, ah, how few attain,
Afar from man, and farther still from God;
From it, like lightning, many fall again,—
Shivered like clay beneath the iron rod.

From those lone peaks my cautious steps I turn,
On the dark mountains I no longer trust;
I seek those heights where milder glories burn,
Where peace her mantle o'er the hills hath spread.

I seek no fame, no glory or renown;
I follow Him who bore for me the cross,
I bind at-out my brows His thorny crown,
And journey upward, counting all but loss.

To the high mountain, lonely and apart,
I follow where my Je-us led the way,
I watch with yearning, longing, loving heart,
My Lord transfigured, as he kneels to pray.

Here where his glory shines would I abide,
A tabernacle build, that He may stay;
And dwell aloof from all the world beside,
Anticipating the eternal day.

Above the cloudy, slippery, stormy ways,
Through rain and tempest, hurricane and sleet,
I stand upon the heights of joy, and gaze
On seas of rainbows floating at my feet.

O thou, that tellest joyful news of peace,
Sounding thy voice afar throughout the land,
Climb this high mount, nor from thy toiling cease,
Till thou upon its glorious summit stand.

Then shout aloud to every listening ear,—
The gospel message publish far abroad,—
Say unto Zion, Lo, thy King is near,
Say to Jerusalem, Behold thy God!

Sound the glad news, the glorious message cry,
Herald the glories of the conquering King,
Until the watchman shall see eye to eye,
And join in song when God shall Zion bring.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I have been behind for some time with my payments on the paper; the reason was that I moved from Canada to Delaware state, and have been short of money ever since till now. We have had a few peaches to sell. I have been intending to send for semelime, but did not get started till now. Enclosed I send you two dollars. We have no preaching in this state. There are not many who take the Bible in its literal reading. Some, who do, are very indifferent in regard to it. There are some very good people here as far as they know, but they have never heard a gospel sermon. The blind are leading the blind. If I was able I would like to have Brother Stephenson or some other able speaker come down here in the winter, but I am not able, at the present time, and others, that are, are too worldly-minded to do so. I see, by THE RESTITUTION, that the Jews are gathering in Palestine; the fig tree is budding. I think now is the time to look up and rejoice, but will the Lord find faith on the earth when he comes? True faith is becoming scarcer all the time. Give us all the encouragement you can, and help us to be faithful to the end.

JOHN HOGARTH.

Canterbury, Del.

Editor Restitution:—I believe I have paid up for the present year, but as I happen to have the money just now I thought I would send it for the year to come, the Lord willing it should be continued. I hope it may not fail for want of means. We have had a great many conflicting ideas in the paper the last year. It causes a great deal of thinking. The resurrection of the wicked has caused a great deal of thought in my own mind for many years past. I cannot, for my part, imagine what benefit or satisfaction can be brought about by it to the Creator, or the poor sinful creatures to bring them up to die again. The penalty for sin is death. I would that kind, honest people might be induced, by some means, to more fully realize the great loss they will sustain by neglecting to secure eternal life and an inheritance in the kingdom of God. I wish we could have some stirring articles on the love of God and his Son Jesus Christ, and more about that kingdom under a righteous government. I will enclose two dollars for THE RESTITUTION. May the Lord bless you, my dear brother, in your labors. Like myself, you are traveling the down-hill of life. If Jesus does not come soon, we shall have to sleep in the dust. May faith in the promises of God's Word be our stay.

Your sister in Christ,
MARY BUSH.

Editor Restitution:—In response to the call in THE RESTITUTION of September 10th, enclosed, please find one dollar to pay on my delinquent subscription. I am behind, and shall not stop here to explain, or go into detail. I have oftimes stated to you in regard to this matter. The remarks in THE RESTITUTION upon these points, are consistent and reasonable, and should be strictly adhered to. I can speak only for myself—and that is, I like THE RESTITUTION, and it is of intense interest to me, and should not like to be without it—because, in my judgment, it advocates the only true doctrines of the Bible, and is kin to the Bible, also; it has as good talent in its productions as the world affords. It matters not what self-constituted judges of matters of theology may think or say about it to the contrary. It is true, nevertheless. But, if I should say, all that is said or written in THE RESTITUTION, was sound and true, I should make a most fatal mistake. From the fact, I find some half a dozen positions taken, that have opposition views, and in total conflict, therefore, it is a self-evident fact, that it is not all gold that shines. That ends it. But, in view of all this, I am glad to see brotherly love manifested in their deliberations—this is as it should be. I am a great lover of truth, because it is truth that saves. There is no salvation in error. God says, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." This language of holy writ is equivalent to saying—lack of truth. Mark the phraseology! "Destroyed for lack of knowledge!" Not the acts of frail human nature? We should be careful to teach what God teaches, and then we shall make no mistakes. I am an old man, close on to sixty, and have had a practical experience in traveling (this being my business) for over twenty years, and, no doubt, I have had as much friendly litigation upon Bible questions as any man of my age. Discussion is my element, because it is my nature. Show me a man that does not act out his nature and you will show me something new under the sun. By strict observation and study upon the philosophy of human nature, and argumentive principles, also the correct standard by which we may arrive at the truth, I might suggest some thoughts upon these principles that would be of some service to the erring ones, therefore we will venture the task. Take notice. The following shall be the basis: "Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob." Isa. xli. 21. The question will naturally arise here, Have we a correct standard by which we can arrive at the truth? Certainly we have. If not, then truth is a failure. Truth and error will not mix, no more than you can mix oil and water together. God and his word, nature and reason, are the four primary principles, or basis of all truth. And there is no other? The elements that compose these cardinal principles are one harmonious whole, and you cannot separate them without producing discord and confusion. Now, by a proper adjustment of these principles to any Bible doctrine, we can arrive at the truth just as easily as we can solve any simple sum in mathematics. But, says one, you have told us nothing new; we have oftimes heard these same principles delineated to us, and parties have professed to act upon them, and have proved a failure. Let us not be too hasty in our conclusions. There is a little secret about this matter you have not discovered as yet. If you have, pray tell me why you have not divulged it a long time ago, and save this vast amount of confusion and discord? Certainly, I have never seen or heard of this secret as follows. Thus, there is not one fundamental doctrine of the Bible but what God has demonstrated it by precept and example. Also, it has become a matter of fact and history. If this be a fact, I ask, in all reason, what necessity for mankind going it blind? If our premises are wrong, our conclusions must be wrong, therefore the importance of starting right. I care not how much Scripture a man may quote in support of his theory, or how logically he may seem to reason out his theory, or how much display of words he may use in the same—if regardless of these principles—it will amount to nothing. What earthly use is there in following a man in a wrong direction? Not any. First, secure the right of way, lay a sure foundation, leave no loop holes or bars down, get at the bottom facts and then we are prepared to use all the material at our command to a good advantage and perfect safety. We are admonished in Scripture to be perfect. Perfect in what? Perfect in character? A physical impossibility? We can be perfect in faith. I appeal to the records of nature and God's dealing with the race in all past time as proof on this point.

A few thoughts in the opposite direction or line of error. Stubborn prejudice has a great deal to do in shaping men's opinions upon any subject, and oftimes leads them into trouble; it is a very costly trait to get out of the dilemma which may chance to lead the erring ones. We are very apt to get into a rut and run in it because we have no desire to get out of it. For instance, a talented and able man starts out in reply to an argument or question, and raises a great hue and cry of error. First, he lays down some grand, noble principles to govern his position and argument. We conclude from his base, that he will do a good work, and make out a clear case. But, alas! the first proposition laid down, is a bare-faced assumption without a single word of proof to sustain it, and in strict violation of his own prescribed rules. Why all this? By accident or design he may have come to believe that his theory is true, and the other is wrong. With great zeal and confident of success, he occupies a large space in some leading journal to maintain himself in that belief, because he does not study anything that is opposed to his favorite belief. This is true of men, to a large degree, in every department of life.

In conclusion, I would say, my reasons for writing this article in the manner I have, is simply this: I see so much inconsistency in mankind, and in every department of life, I am forced to these conclusions by a sense of duty. It matters not whether man approve or discard it. If the foregoing principles are not true, I fail to see it, and my life has been a failure. But, again, if these principles are true, then my advice to all is, to act in that direction. If not true, then give us a better code of principles. The world needs it. Thine for the right.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find two dollars to apply on my subscription, and fifteen cents for one tract, viz: "The Herald of Messiah's Reign," for a friend, by J. M. Stephenson. Times are very close and dull here, in a living and financial point of view. So much so, that it is almost impossible for me to spare anything in the way of money for the paper, or anything else, except the bare necessaries of this life. But, knowing that you must have your own, and not wishing to be in debt to our paper any longer, I send this, hoping for better things in the future. I value the paper more continually, and think it is the best paper I have ever seen, and have you in high esteem for your noble efforts in the cause of truth, hoping and praying that you may be well rewarded in this life and in the world to come. I am well aware that we are living in the last days of "Gentile times," when famine, pestilence and war are rife on every hand, and wickedness in high and low places. Let us be of that class of whom so much good is spoken in Psalm xci., and, also, to "lift up our heads for your redemption draweth nigh." Let us praise the name of the Lord and do good evermore, and receive an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God. Amen.

SELECTIONS.

(Prophetic Times.)

Restoration of Jewish Nationality and the Termination of Gentile Times.

In the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, after a distinct prophecy of the coming kingdom of Messiah, it is said. "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar and from Hamath and from the Island of the Sea, etc." And this recovery or restoration is the same spoken of in Isa. xxvii, 13. "And it shall come to pass in that day that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the Lord in the holy mount at Jerusalem;" which thus becomes identified with the second advent of Christ—and hence the great trumpet which shall then be blown is none else but that spoken of in Matt. xxiv, 31, and elsewhere, as announcing the commencement of the ages of restoration, and shows that the restoration of Israel and the termination of the times of the Gentiles synchronize, and will be speedily followed by the resurrection and translation of the Saints of God.

In the covenant God made with Abraham the land of Canaan is promised to him and his seed not according to natural descent; but according to a moral fitness. Abraham's faith was the ground of his election—and all that are of faith are Abraham's seed and shall be blessed with faithful Abraham. But this promise has reference to the heirship of that land as its rulers in a condition of great power and glory—and is to be fulfilled in the Saints of God who shall be made kings and priests unto God and reign with Christ.

The covenant God made with the natural seed of Abraham in the wilderness, to make them rulers in his kingdom on condition of their obedience, was by them broken in all their generations, and failed through their unfitness. But in Jeremiah xxxi, 31-34, God has declared his purpose of making a new covenant with the house of Israel as follows: "Behold the days come, said the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt (which my covenant they broke although I was a husband unto them saith the Lord). But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts; and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying know the Lord: for they shall all know me from the least of them unto the greatest of them saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

And in accordance with this new covenant they are to be restored to their own land, and to be settled therein forever in a condition of great prosperity and everlasting peace. For he says, (Jer. xxxii, 37-42). Behold I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely. And they shall be my people, and I will be their God. And I will give them one heart and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the good of them and of their children after them; and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. Yea I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul. For thus saith the Lord: Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them."

The great evil here mentioned is their rejection on account of their breaking the covenant made with them in the wilderness, and their wickedness in rejecting and crucifying the Messiah: the destruction of their city and nationality—their dispersion and being made an astonishment and a proverb and a by-word among all nations. This is the great tribulation which has now continued for 1800 years—but which is coming near its termination. During this period of their denationalization and dispersion God is taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name, to compensate for the loss of the natural seed by Israel's defection. And as a matter of course the restoration of Israel and the end of the gospel dispensation will take place at the same time. Hence Jesus said, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

When the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled the number of God's elect people will be completed—the resurrection and translation of the saints of God will take place. And the Bride of the Lamb will be prepared and ready for the marriage. The end of this dispensation then is an event of great importance; for then the Saints of God will be glorified with Christ and prepared to share in his triumph over all earthly powers and to reign with him in his kingdom. Then, too, there will be an end of the call of the gospel; and after that no more will be saved with that great salvation. The Master having risen up and shut to the door will not open to the call of the excluded ones.

The restoration of Jewish nationality will be the certain indication that the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. Hence the restoration of Israel is an event of thrilling interest to us. And we cannot be indifferent to the measures which are now being initiated to effect that object. For more than forty years past there has been a gradual immigration of Jews from other lands to Jerusalem and other places in Palestine, and they have become so involved in the eastern question, that there can be no settlement of it without first settling the status of the Jew in reference to Palestine. And the theory of distinct nationalities which has assumed a commanding influence of late in the settlement of national questions, will force the re-establishment of the Jewish nationality in a land which must be acknowledged theirs by a title of the most indisputable nature.

And now the way is being prepared for a more speedy return of the Jews to Palestine than could have been anticipated a few months ago. When God has purposes to be accomplished he is at no loss for human agencies to effect them. We sometimes wonder how certain events are to be brought about, though we never doubt that they will be effected in due time and by suitable means. But when the time comes, lo! God has a means at hand and the otherwise strange event is a natural result. Often have we heard the restoration of Israel to their own land stigmatized as an impossibility—an absurdity, a wild and utopean theory: but we never once questioned its wisdom, its practicability and its certainty; for God had said that it should be accomplished. We have wondered how it would be done. But, lo! now that the time of the restoration draws nigh, the means and instrumentalities of it are being developed, and that too in a most natural manner, and in accordance with the leading sentiments of the political powers; as a measure demanded by the interests of all nations East and West, and necessary to the peace of the World.

In this measure now looms up before us one of the most stupendous events that ever has happened—the restoration of Jewish nationality and the termination of the Gentile dispensation to be immediately succeeded by the Resurrection and translation of the saints of God. What an event! And how near it seems! A few more months or years at most and it may be accomplished. Many of us may be alive to see it. The voice of the great trumpet of Restoration—of judgment—of Christ's coming—may come sounding along the telegraphic cabel through the deep and over the land. You may hear it. I may hear it. With what emotions! If prepared for Christ's coming! How joyful the sound! How glorious the prospect! "Then lift up your heads with rejoicing for your redemption draweth nigh!"—J. G. W.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

If the Lord will, there will be a conference meeting commencing Friday evening, Oct., 3, 1873, holding over Sunday, at Simpson school house, Northeast Lawrence county, Mo., four miles northwest of Lawrenceburg, and ten miles southwest of Ash Grove, Green county, Mo. Those coming from a distance will enquire for Miles Winchester or the writer. All are invited.

A. R. ROBERTSON, Sec.

I will begin a meeting at Scott Branch, east of Fort Scott, in Bourbon county, Kansas, near Judge Chapman's, Saturday before the third Sunday in October, being the 18th of the month, to continue over Sunday. Also on Thursday before the fourth Sunday of October, near Pleasanton at Isaac and John Searight may direct. Subject: A vindication of the true character of God. God is love. Can't Bros. POETRY.

How to Live.

H. BONAR.

He liveth long who liveth well!
All other life is short and vain;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of living most for heavenly gain.

He liveth long who liveth well!
All else is being flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.

Waste not thy being; back to him
Who freely gave it, freely give;
Else is that being but a dream—
'Tis but to be, and not to live.

Be wise, and use thy wisdom well;
Who wisely speaks, must live it too;
He is the wisest who can tell
How best he lived, then spoke, the true.

Be what thou seemest; live thy creed;
Hold up to earth the torch divine;
Be what thou prayest to be made;
Let the great Master's steps be thine.

Sow truth, if thou the true wouldst reap;
Who sows the false shall reap the vain;
Erect and sound thy conscience keep;
From hollow words and deeds refrain.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage pure;
Sow peace, and reap its harvest bright;
Sow sunbeams on the rock and moor,
And find a harvest-home of light.

COMMUNICATIONS.

On the Return and Conversion of Judah and Israel. The Remnant to be Gathered From all Lands, wheresoever Scattered. A vast number of the Gentiles or Heathen World Converted in the Personal Reign of Christ.

We often hear it asserted that Judah and Israel will never return to the land of their fathers. The following will show that those of that opinion have got ahead of their Master, who has informed us by the Prophet (Ezekiel xxxvii. 21, 22,) "Thus saith the Lord, God, behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathens, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one king shall be king to them all, and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. Is it rational to suppose that God in his wisdom, goodness, and power, would inspire his prophets with the concurrent testimony of the return of Israel from captivity; and fail in the accomplishment of his purpose. Please consult the irrefragable proof, and indubitable testimony of the prophet on that important subject. Ezk. xxxix. 25, 27. Therefore thus, saith the Lord God, now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name, when I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies land, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations. Isa. xi. 12. And he shall set upon ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. Amos ix. 9. For lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a seive, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth. Jer. xxiii. 3, 4. "I will gather the remnant of my stock out of all countries, whither I have driven them, and I will bring them again to their folds and they shall be fruitful and increase." Jer. xxxiii. 7. "I will cause the captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Israel to return, and I will build them as at the first." Jer. xl. 14, 15. "Therefore behold the days come saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. But the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the North, and from all the lands whither I had driven them, and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers." The above is deemed sufficient to demonstrate the fact of the return of Israel to Palestine. By Judah is understood the two tribes, Benjamin and Judah. The other ten tribes are frequently designated by Ephraim. Sometimes by Israel, they were divided into two nations, in the days of Rehoboam son of Soloman. As many have embraced the idea that none of them will ever be converted, I will endeavor to establish the fact of their conversion after the second advent of Christ, by the infallible word of inspiration. Ezek. xxxvi. 24, 28. "For I will take you from among the heathens, and will gather you out of all countries and will bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you and ye shall be clean from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you, a new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you, and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh, and I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them."

In my estimation this passage not only demonstrates their return to Palestine, but also their conversion and fail to ascertain the obvious meaning of the word of inspiration. Again, Isa. lix. 20. "And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression, in Jacob, saith the Lord." In unison with this are the words of the Apostle to the Romans. xi. 26, 27. "There shall come out of Zion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins." Jer. xxxi. 33. "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of of Israel, after those days saith the Lord; I will put my law in their inward parts and write it in their hearts and will be their God, and they shall be my people." Jer. i. 19, 20. And I will bring Israel again to his habitation and he shall feed on carmel and basham, and his soul shall be satisfied upon Mount Ephraim and Gilead. In those days and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for and there shall be none, and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found. For I will pardon them whom I receive." See also Ezek. xxxvii. 23. "Neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions. But I will save them out of all their dwelling places wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them, so shall they be my people, and I will be their God." Ezek. xxxi. 28. "And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers', and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." Zech. xii. 10. "And I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and supplication: And they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son." See also Zech. xiii. 1. "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness." After putting his law in their inward parts, and writing it in their hearts; he says, Jer. xxxi. 34, they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them saith the Lord. If such explicit testimony from the word of inspiration does not prove the return and conversion of the remnant of Judah and Israel, at least those of them who will accept offered mercy. Will some good brother inform me what can be proved by the Scriptures of divine truth.

I will now call the attention of the reader to another subject of momentous interest, which is that a vast number of the Gentile and heathen world, will rally to the standard of Emmanuel, and obtain the remission of sin, and find redemption in his blood, by grace through faith, after his second coming, and the commencement of his personal reign. Isa. xi. 10. "And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign for the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek, and his rest shall be glorious." Should any wish to know what day, the answer is in the same chapter. When "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion, and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them." When "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

In confirmation of the same fact see also Isa. lx. 5. "The abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee; the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee." Psa. xxii. 27. "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee." Psa. lxxii. 11. "Yea all kings shall fall down before him and all nations shall serve him." Zech. ii. 10, 11. "Sing and rejoice, O Daughter of Zion! for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people." Jer. iii. 17. "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the Throne of the Lord, and all nations shall be gathered unto it. Neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart." Consult also the prophet Daniel. Dan. vii. 13, 14. "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him, and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him." Acts xv. 16, 17. "After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up; that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things." Zeph. iii. 11. "And men shall worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen."

Should it be asked when, see Zeph. iii. 9. "For then will I return to the people a pure language, that they all may call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent."

Before the organization of this glorious state, and the hidden things of darkness shall give place to the noontide blaze of the powers of light, the incorrigible of both Israel and Gentile will be cut off, and the slain of the Lord will be many. "Those mine enemies that would not that I should reign over them bring hither," etc.

That his reign will be personal, I can see no reason for the shadow of a doubt. Isa. xxxii. 1, 2. "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. And a man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Psa. cxxxii. 11. "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it, of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne." Isa. xxiv. 23. "Then shall the moon be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Ezek. xxxiv. 29, 30. "And I will raise up unto them a plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more. Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel, are my people, saith the Lord God."

It is sixty-four years since I engaged in the work of salvation by grace, through faith. Sixty of them I have devoted to the spread of the gospel. A large share of that time I have held with unwavering faith, the sentiments contained in this prediction. Not wishing to be Prolix but Laconic, I have adduced but a small part of Bible testimony, on either point under consideration. When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, may it be ours to attend the coronation, and receive a crown of undiminished luster.

Report of Annual Assembly.

The annual assembly of the church of God met according to announcement at the house of the brethren on September 2. It was truly a meeting in which the hand of God was plainly to be seen. The faith once delivered to the saints was well represented in Maryland and Virginia, both in person and by letter.

The writer opened the meeting by reasoning out of the Scriptures to show that God is a God of order, and that the object of the assembly was to carry out that part of the order which belongs to this dispensation. And first and foremost, we dwelt in the light of truth on the things of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, showing that in order to a sound faith we must understand the things of the name as well as the things of the kingdom, and this knowledge must precede obedience. We also showed that as long as a man believed that he had an immortal soul to go to heaven or hell at death, he never could attain to that knowledge.

Hence, ignorant of God's righteousness, such are going about to establish a righteousness of their own. We proved by the form of sound words that no resurrection, no future life, and that progression and restitution formed the two grand features in the economy of God, in order to a development of his eternal purposes which he had in creating this earth and placing man upon it, and that the race of man would progress on in the order of God until all the works of God would be restored back to that not only good but very good state in which it first fell from the plastic hand of Jehovah, and here stated that the high destiny alluded to in our announcement, was, and is, that the Most High is preparing a people by the gospel to be cotemporaries with the king immortal in the administration of the affairs of the nations, in order to this great development.

Then brother S. M. Shuler, from Maryland, arose and asked if these things be so, and said we would imitate the noble Bereans of old by searching the Scriptures in the hearing of the assembly to see if it could be determined or no, as they were the only infallible guide we had to go by, and began (in imitation of the great teacher) at Moses, and expounded in all the Scriptures, much to the satisfaction of the assembly and interest of the respectful congregation in attendance.

The meeting was then dismissed with prayer and gratitude to Almighty God, that we were again permitted to enjoy another annual assembly at the house of the brethren, the blessing of God being invoked on all, and especially upon the dear ones who were hindered by circumstances from being with us but wrote that their hearts would, and sent brotherly greeting to all of the one faith assembled.

My heart was made glad on considering the nature of these meetings, that the attendance are about upon an average; that there are most always some travelers to Zion like it is with the public inn, to drop in, who have never been with us before, to take the place of those whom circumstances may have hindered from coming; then next time they may not come but some of the old ones will, taking their place.

The whole day on Sunday was devoted to reasoning out of the Scriptures by brother Shuler and myself, proving thereby that human legislation by the disciples of Christ when they assembled together, is forbidden by the great law-giver, and that the holy Scriptures thoroughly furnish the man of God unto all good work. We picked up the little bunch of leaves containing the Acts of the Apostles and showed that the question was there put by believers what to do to be saved, and the answer given (in the language of the Apostle) so they are without excuse. Let us, brethren, not forget to pray, for I firmly believe that God has answered the prayers of his humble servant during the meeting.

Some three years ago I visited brother Shuler, who, with his wife some twenty years past, entered into a covenant with a goodly number of others to acknowledge no master but Christ, and to take no creed but the Bible, and having in progress of time become somewhat isolated from the school of Christ and finding that while they were steadfast in their covenant, and were growing in grace and knowledge of the truth, but had not taken what we call the advanced step, by having the saving name named on them in baptism, since the things revealed in the book of books, for faith had become faith with them, and finding that the now precious sister was afflicted with one of the slow but sure weapons of the last enemy, and knowing from a long acquaintance with the dear one that her chief aim was that after she will have submitted to the king of terrors, that she may be permitted to live again in the age to come where there will be no more pain, sickness, sorrow nor death, it has been my heart's desire and prayer to God that she might live to get on the bridal robe, so she might be a component part of the bride, the lamb's wife, whose beauty he will greatly desire at his coming. She being clothed in clean and white linen, which is the righteousness of saints, accordingly on hearing of the annual assembly she made up her mind to come if she died on the way. So she mounted her horse with one side half eaten away with cancer, like her blessed Lord who walked over fifty miles afoot, for thus it is computed from Galilee to the Jordan, to fulfill all righteousness, she, with her devoted husband, for it seems that there is no sacrifice too great in his power to make for her gratification while he has her with him, which he believes cannot be long in this life, but, oh, the inspiring hope of meeting each other in the life to come, she bravely traveled something like the same distance to follow in the steps of her Master. On meeting with the dear brethren and sisters who had assembled to bear their faithful testimony to the whole truth, most of them strangers to her in the flesh, but it was like apples of gold upon pictures of silver to see the dear ones like, so many watercourses all having been taught of God in the same school, running together. Being knit together in love they soon become one in Christ, for on reasoning together—all having something to say in giving a reason of the hope that is with them. They accompanied her on Sunday evening to the water where after an humble proclamation of the great plan of salvation to a large concourse of people who have heretofore been prejudiced against baptism by immersion, to show that baptism thus performed in the name of Jesus Christ is included in the plan, and that it is indispensible if we would attain to the glorious destiny pointed out in the Gospel, on the confession of her faith in the things of the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, she was buried in the liquid grave by the writer in the all-saving name, for the remission of sins. Then at night the cementing link in the golden chain was observed in breaking bread and drinking wine in obedience to the Master's will, which is to hold good until he comes to be admired by all them that believe, and while singing:

Oft in danger, oft in woe,
Onward, Christian! onward go;
Fight the fight, maintain the strife,
Thus secure the crown of life.

The last verse.

Onward then, to battle more!
More than conquerors ye shall prove!
Though opposed by many a foe,
Christian soldiers, onward go!

The right hand of fellowship was given to the sister and to each other, in token of that bond of love and union which is now established upon the foundation of the apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone. It was truly a feast to witness the love and attachment manifested by the sisters and brethren which was won by our much esteemed sister Shuler, by her pleasant countenance, courage and manners, which love for the whole truth had inspired her with, all struck with wonder and amazement, knowing her condition, she looked to us all, which she expressed as her convictions; as one whom the Lord, like Hezekiah of old, had lengthened her days so that she might set her house in order and fully equip herself to meet the great foe to man, and gain a final victory over him, though he cause her to sleep in the dust. She returned home fully inspired with the hope that her king, the Lord Jesus Christ, will descend with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and the dead in Christ will rise first, and then death will be swallowed up of victory, when she will, with all the redeemed, sing the victor's song, "O death! where is thy sting; O grave! where is thy victory." Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

When the dear one who has formed so much of this report took her leave of the brethren and sisters, while their hands were given as a farewell greeting, yet their very hearts and souls seemed, and I believe did, go with her, and hers remained with us. By such love exhibited, others can take knowledge that we have been with Jesus.

The meeting closed on Wednesday night, with the understanding that the next quarterly assembly be held on Timber Ridge, Frederick co., Va., in the vicinity of brother John D. Good, and brother John J. Spade, co-workers in the Lord's vineyard.

N. J. MORGAN.

Winchester, Va.

Although our meeting now is past,
We hope it will not be the last;
But humbly trust and hope and pray,
That we be spared from day to day,
To live and let our light still shine,
Until the close of Gentile times.
Then we shall all each other meet,
And worship at our Savior's feet.
According to his Holy Word,
No parting sighs will then be heard.
Oh! what a blessed promise this,
That we shall live with Christ to reign.
Oh! what a loss if we should miss,
Although we do the whole world gain.

Winchester News: The annual meeting of the Church of God, in charge of Elder N. J. Morgan, has been held at the House of the Brethren during the past week, the services being well attended, quite a number of members coming from abroad. On Sunday afternoon the Elder baptized a young lady in Hilliard's dam, near town, a large crowd witnessing the solemn ordinance. This was followed at night, after the sermon, by the administration of the Lord's Supper. The meeting closed on Wednesday night.

Russia Under a General State of Siege.

Russia is at present under a state of siege from St. Petersburg to Moscow and Warsaw, from Kieff to Kharkoff and Odessa, on account of the plots and conspiracies of the Nihilists. An army of porters, about 15,000 strong, must watch the streets of the capital, day and night, and policemen are set to watch the watchers. Under General Ghourko, the crosser of the Balkans, who is now Vice-Emperor, the last lines of legality have also been crossed—if the word "legality" applies at all to Russian institutions. He is invested with unlimited powers, in the place of the disheartened tyrant. The very Grand Dukes are under his orders. Arrests among officers of the army have been the immediate consequence of General Ghourko's satrap rule. In several cases compromising letters and prints were discovered, and executions both of officers, like Lieutenant Dubrovin, and of privates, have followed. The gallows are in permanent activety. But perhaps the most significant feature—and a promising one, too—is the order issued, under court-martial law, that in all the barracks a list of the soldiers' arms is to be drawn up, and to be handed over to the police! This is the strongest sign of a suspicion against the army itself; and on the army the whole power of Czardom reposes.

Dr. Lael Carpenter on the State of Man in Death.

On the best consideration I have been able at various times to give the subject, having as evidence nothing more than the information which Scripture affords, but taking the whole of that information, I came to the satisfied conclusion that the interval between the moment of the resurrection is to the individual a period of unconscious rest,—that consequently to him death will be followed by the solemn summons to life, when that which is sown in weakness, dishonor and corruption shall be raised in power and glory and immortality, and instead of perishing bodies we shall be clothed with those which shall be incorruptible, being fashioned like the glorious body of him to whom the Almighty Father hath given the power to subdue all things unto himself; that, consequently, the eyes that close one instant on the night of death, opens the next instant at the morning of an eternal day.—From an unpublished MS. in the hands of Mrs. Carpenter.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

It is easier to blame than to do better.

Would you be strong, conquer yourself.

To change and to be better are two different things.

A. Fuller: 'Tis one thing to have our sins worn away from the memory, and quite another thing to have them washed away at the gospel fountain.

The grandest music ear hath heard,
The deepest organ-peal,
The softest lay by singer sung,
The chords we hear and feel,
Are only echoes of the song
The angels sing above,
Faint preludes of the grand "new song,"
Whose notes are endless love.

Jeremy Taylor: The body of our prayer is the sum of our duty; and as we must ask of God whatsoever we need, we must labor for all that we ask.

Many a one is worn out in body, embarrassed financially, and discouraged in spirit, because he thought he could find another path than that which he felt persuaded the Lord wished him to take.

Courage is always greatest when blended with meekness. Intellectual ability is most admired when it sparkles in the setting of modest self-distrust. And never does the human soul appear so strong as when it foregoes revenge and dares to forgive injury.

Mason: A zealous soul without meekness is like a ship in a storm, in danger of wrecks. A meek soul without zeal is like a ship in a calm, that moves not as fast as it ought.

Earth's day dies down; Lord, lift my eyes
Unto the glories of the heavenlies.

One perfect day awaits me there,
Nightless and shadowless beyond compare.

The golden day thyself hast won;
Thy voice its music, and thy face its sun.

Spring to thy dawn, O day to be!
That I may see my Lord who loveth me.

The wind is unseen, but it cools the brow of the fevered one, sweetens the summer atmosphere, and ripples the surface of the lake into silver spangles of beauty. So goodness of heart, though invisible to the material eye, makes its presence felt; and from its effects upon surrounding things we are assured of its existence.

Men unfold their natures gradually, and their traits and peculiarities are called out by a variety of circumstances. As a feather may show which way the wind blows, and a floating twig the current of a stream, so may a little matter enable you to determine the true character of a man, and to know how far you can trust him, and what are his capabilities.

Luther: The cross of Christ is divided throughout the world. To each his portion ever comes. Thou, therefore, O my soul, cast not thy portion from thee, but rather take it to thee as thy most precious relic, and lay it up, not in gold and silver shrine, but in golden heart—a heart clothed with gentle charity, with patience and suffering submission.

"Ay! the multitude of them that believed were of one heart! and of one soul!"
"That they may all be one!" a blessed prayer,
Echoed by holy hearts, and felt within,
As answered ever more and everywhere
Among the souls redeemed from death and sin!

For by whatever name the world may care
To mock those happy ones of earth who win
The prize of our high calling; still, as one
They stand together, one in faith and kin—
Serving the Father, ransomed by the Son,
And through the Spirit made to live for heaven!
O friends! much loving, because much forgiven,
Let us be one in heart throughout the globe—
Renouncing narrow thoughts and bitter leaven—
One, without rent, like Jesus' woven robe.

Swarms of caterpillars are reported in the French papers to have recently descended upon Bordeaux and covered the alleys of Bontant in such multitudes as to form a species of curtain across them to a certain height. The insects, from one to two centimetres in length, appeared to be enveloped in a sort of spider web, from which it was most difficult, not to say impossible, to get free when once entangled in it. One courageous woman who resolved to traverse this living hedge was literally covered with the small pests, and would never have succeeded in disengaging herself from the mingled mass of web and caterpillars had not assistance been given by others. At least a dozen trees in the alleys have been stripped of their leaves, and there is strong reason to fear that if the insect plague extends the scene of its ravages all the gardens of the neighborhood will suffer enormously.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the visible advent of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Crowning Theme and the Crowning Grace.

The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ. 2 Thess. iii. 5.

So that ye come behind in no gift waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus. 1 Cor. i. 6-7.

Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and the true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus. 1 Thess. 1-10.

This great apostle makes the love of God in the gift of his Son the crowning theme of his gospel ministry, and the knowledge of this love, which prompted believers to wait for his second coming to consummate this love to the world—the crowning grace of the Christian life. This comes out "in all his epistles." 2 Pet. iii. 16. It is the sum of gospel truth. As Moses came down from the Mount to make the first covenant, and reign king in Jerusalem, and constitute the shadow of good things to come, so the Lord Jesus, having made his one offering, commissioned his apostles to fill out the good news of his coming again to reign and restore, and bless, ascended to God, as our advocate and then as the mediator of the new covenant, he will return! In his absence, the church, his bride, is being called by the good spirit in the gospel, during the times allotted the Gentiles. But, he said, I will come again, John xiv. 3. I will not leave you orphans; I will come to you! Verse 18. He will "appear the second time without sin unto salvation—deliverance and restitution of all things spoken." Heb. ix. 28; Rom. viii. 21; Acts iii. 19-21.

Our greater than Moses is still with God, but his second coming will be in the power and plenitude of new covenant blessing. He will take the gate of his enemies, and in him (will Israel be saved, Rom. xi. 26-29; Heb. viii. 8-12, and) all the nations of the earth be blessed. Gen. xxii. 17, 18; Psa. lxxii. 16-20; Luke i. 68-73; Dan. vii. 13, 14, 18; Rev. xv. 4.

Again, as the Jewish high priest went with the blood of the sacrifice within the temple veil to make the annual atonement for that nation, so he came out again in the garments of glory and beauty to bless and dismiss the pardoned people, that they might return to their homes with the smile of God on them! So, Christ has gone within the veil as our great High Priest and intercessor, but must come again to fill out the type, fulfill his promise, and take to himself his great power and reign—act as King—judge the world in righteousness and the people with his truth. Psa. xcvi. 10-13; Rev. xi. 15-18.

Thus, the primary structure of the first covenant with its offices of prophet, priest and king, foreshadowed the doctrine of our text. It directs us to the love of God in redemption, and the patient waiting for the Messiah to dispense this love in the fulness of the new covenant, which ultimates in all things made new! Rev. xxi. 1-5.

God is love. Hence, when our hearts are directed into this love, they are guided to the fountain of all good!—that we may be partakers of the divine nature. 2 Pet. i. 1-9.

In waiting for the second coming of Christ we have fellowship with God's loving will to take away the sin of the world—fulfill his promise and prayer, and make the whole earth the counterpart of heaven!

The ordinances of the gospel (as did those of the law) embody and memorialize the profoundest facts in the life of our Lord and Savior at his first advent—his death, burial and resurrection—and then direct our faith and hope forward to his second coming. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come" 1 Cor. xi. 26; Matt. xxvi. 29; Acts i. 9-11; 1 Thess. iv. 13-18; Titus ii. 11, 14.

In agreement with this unmistakable proof of the doctrine of our text, we may group together the Christian calling, to serve the living and true God, and wait for his Son from heaven. 1 Thess. i. 9, 10. The blessed hope of the glorious appearing. Titus ii. 11-14. The crowning grace; "So that ye come behind in no gift waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." The abundant entrance and the full reward. 2 Pet. i. 11-16; 2 John viii. For "when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. v. 1-4.

The pre-eminent gospel promises, which we all should appropriate to ourselves, by believing them and so making them our own, belong, by special direction of the spirit, to those who look for, and love his appearing. Heb. ix. 28; 2 Tim. iv. 1-8; Luke xii. 42, 43. It is a bold but blessed position to take!

Surely no one can count it a calamity to be the heir of promises so rich and so divine!—with such infinite and everlasting amplitude of glory, honor, and immortality. Rom. ii. 7-10.

Then, to complete and crown this galaxy of gospel glories that cluster in this pregnant text, please observe that it is but the culmination of a corresponding statement in every chapter of these two apostolic letters. Nothing could so expand and emphasize this doctrine of Christ's coming as this earnest, untiring, repetition. But this example of St. Paul is sustained by the spirit of God; for in disclosing the system of our world's deliverance, he makes it the grand theme of the closing book of the sacred Canon. It is the revelation of Jesus Christ—his actual Apocalypse, with its antecedents and results in the second Genesis! The regeneration of our world—the new heavens and earth! Paradise restored with its tree and river of life! where all material and moral glories will combine to adorn the city of the Great King!—the metropolis of the saints' everlasting kingdom!

Who can object to this blessed transformation?—a dying race and a groaning creation transfigured! The dross consumed, but all else in their order glorified! Then, alone, shall we know how good the creation will be that God, himself, can take pleasure in! "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ."

This love of God in our hearts will constrain us to see and say that "all the promises of God are in Christ, yea, and Amen, to the glory of God." 2 Cor. i. 20. Hence, the oath confirmed promises to Abraham, and to Moses, and to David, centre and culminate in him! And, hence, it follows further, that the second coming in glory is the very core of the two immutable things, that we may have our strong consolation, having fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us. Heb. vi. 18-20.

As the rivers all run into the ocean, as all the sunbeams lead up to the sun, so all the lines of light and love in the gospel converge in the second coming and reign of Christ, to deliver, restore, and bless the world!

The church of the first born is still scattered and weak as to the world's conversion. It remains for him, at his coming, to send forth his angels with the great sound of the trumpet and gather them from the four winds. Mark xiii. 27; 1 Thess. iv. 13-18; Psa. lxviii. 17-20. The head of the body—the church—is still absent. The gathering of its members and the organizing of its power to take the kingdom, awaits his coming as the captain of the Lord's hosts, to take the gate of his enemies and triumph.

Dr. Lyman Beecher, wanted, at an auxiliary meeting, in New York, on his return from the World's Christian Alliance, "to get up such a stir that the devil would take the hint and go straight down to hell!" But "Babylon, the beast and false prophet, and the old serpent—Satan"—are not amiable enough to take the hint! They will yield only to divine power, organized and directed by Immanuel—God with us! Hence, again, I say, "Lord direct our hearts into the love of God, and the patient waiting for Christ." Amen. J. B. COLE.

For You, Sinner.

While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

Yes, Christ died for you; for you my dear young friends, who are so indifferent to him. So heedless in listening to his word. So careless about your future destiny.

And he is the only one who can save you, he, by his blood opened the gates of life to you. He proffers you an eternal inheritance, he proffers immortality and glory to you and will by no means cast you out, if you will come. You have but to learn the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus, believe and obey them, to be saved.

Will you come? will you have life? You cannot escape if you neglect so great a salvation. Hear the word spoken by the Lord, take the precious name of Christ, and become of those who are rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. S. R. WINCE.

Walking.

I rejoice greatly that I am found of thy children walking in truth as we have received a command ment from the Father—John.

If there is anything that would have saddened the heart of the loving John, it would have been to find the children of the elect lady standing still or backing out of the truth. How many of us are making progress in truth? Are we going forward—walking in truth. The true Christian rejoices to see men walk in truth. John continues to say "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth." Let us not be among those who draw back or become stationary—the Lots wife in this world's plain of Sodom, but among those who walk steadily forward never looking back. We have received a commandment from the Father to walk in truth. Jesus is the light: He is the way and the truth. This world is dark. The Light shines, and reveals the way; and if we walk in him, and continue walking, always following the way, in the by, and by we will reach our home and our Father. A. J. EYCHANER.

A Request.

At our last conference convened at Rensselaer, Ind., a resolution was passed requesting me as secretary, to correspond with each congregation in the state, with a view to ascertaining the number of members composing each, and also the number of copies of THE RESTITUTION taken by each congregation. As I know but few addresses of congregations, I make this request through our paper: That the Elder, or some other member, furnish me with the proper statistics as per, request of conference. Please forward the asked for information to my address—without delay. Yours in the faith, JOHN L. WINCE.

The depth of the water in the gorge below Niagara Falls has just been measured for the first time. The swiftness of the stream had baffled all previous efforts, but a corps of government engineers accomplished the feat. They embarked in a small boat not far below the falls. An old guide accompanied the party. With great difficulty they approached within a short distance of the American falls, which darted great jets of water on them. The roar was so terrible that no voice or sound could be heard. The leadsman cast the line, which rapidly passed down eighty-three feet. This was near the shore. Passing out of the friendly eddy which had enabled them to get so near the falls, they shot rapidly down stream. The next cast of the lead told off 160 feet, deepening to 192 feet a little further down. The average depth to the Swift Drift—where the river suddenly becomes narrow, with a velocity too great to be measured—is 153 feet. Just under the lower bridge the whirlpool rapids set in, and so violently are the waters moved that they rise like ocean waves to the height of twenty feet. At this point they computed the depth at 210 feet.

CAUGHT UP.

Twin Truths—The Resurrection of the Dead and the Transformation of the Living—A Stereoscopic View—"Caught Up Together"—Mount Pella and Mount Zion—Doves Flying Home—Only they that are Ready will be Caught Up—Watch!—Story of two Sisters.

The first lesson in the International series for this month contains the great prediction of Christ's descent from heaven to raise the dead and transform the living saints (1 Thess. iv. 16, 18).

The resurrection of the dead is probably a far more familiar subject to us than the change of the living. But in the lesson the two are associated as twin truths, as, indeed, they always are throughout the Scriptures. It is no more rhetorical amplification which Christ employs when he says, "I am the resurrection and the life." The words, we believe, refer to his double office, at his coming—that of raising the dead who shall then be under the earth, and that of conferring immortal life upon the living who shall be upon the earth.

Hence he adds the correspondent saying: "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." That is, because Christ is both resurrection and life, believers in him that are dead when he comes will live again, and believers that are living will never die, but be translated, in glorified bodies, in the same company with the sainted dead in their raised bodies. We think that any one who compares this passage in the original with that in Thessalonians will be convinced that they are exactly parallel.

We said above, that resurrection and transformation are twin truths. We find them invariably associated throughout the Bible. As we put two pictures into the stereoscope, each representing the same object, but giving it at a slightly different angle, and from the two we get the complete and rounded view; so these two pictures always stand side by side in the prophecy of Christ's second advent, to give a perfect view of that sublime event.

In the transfiguration, which is a miniature prophecy of the advent, we have Christ appearing in glory, and with him Moses, representative of the dead raised up, and Elias of the living translated. And looking at the presentative through the stereoscope of hope, we have a perfect picture of the coming glory, when Christ and his raised and translated saints shall be brought into one company.

Note these two truths in the great resurrection discourse of 1 Cor. 15, and see how they stand side by side:

RESURRECTION.	TRANSFORMATION.
But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept (20).	We shall not all sleep (51).
The dead shall be raised incorruptible (52).	And we shall be changed (52)
For this corruptible must put on incorruption (53).	And this mortal must put on immortality (53)
So, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption (54).	And this mortal shall have put on immortality (54)

"Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory" (54).

Bengel, with that true insight which characterizes his expositions, sees in these balanced antitheses a clear reference to the two classes—the dead who are to be raised, and the living who are to be changed.

Now, translation is the act in which both these events culminate. The raised dead and the changed living are "caught up together to meet the Lord in the air." And thus death is swallowed up in victory for each; the dead are forever rescued out of the grave; the living are forever saved from entering the grave. The corruptible dead put on incorruptible bodies; the mortal living put on immortal bodies.

This scene of Christ's rapture of his church is the most startling and sublime on which we can meditate. Just before the last great judgments are poured forth, the bride of Christ is caught away to himself. So suddenly is it done that it is described as occurring "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump." A striking parallel to this event took place in connection with the destruction of Jerusalem, which, according to Christ's teaching, was a type of the end of the world.

Before the awful ruin fell upon the Holy City, the disciples, previously warned, fled to Mt. Pella, beyond Jordan, and were safe, sheltered there from the storm of God's indignation. In the great and notable day of the Lord, our Pella will not be in any earthly mountain-top, but in Mt. Zion above, beyond death and mortality, where Christ is. Thither, if we are his, we shall be rapt away.

It would seem that the prophet's eye must have been on this event when he penned those words (Isa. xxvi. 19-21): "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity," etc. Here are the resurrection and the rapture both distinctly predicted.

As the mother snatches her child from the burning house and carries it to a place of safety, so at the sound of the last trumpet will the Lord gather his church to the shelter of Paradise, and save it from the consuming fires of that great day. When some one remarked to Father Taylor, the well-known Bethel preacher, that an unprecedented number of children were dying during a certain year, "Yes," said he, "there must be a storm approaching, since doves are flying home."

Indeed, there will be a storm, when, "as clouds and as doves to their windows," the saints of the Lord shall be "caught up . . . in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air."

Here is where Christ's solemn warning falls: "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." For not all will be caught up. It will be the solemn moment of separation, when, as Jesus so plainly foretells, "one shall be taken and the other left." This separation applies both to the dead and the living.

It is only "the dead in Christ" that will rise when the trumpet calls: "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished" (Rev. xx. 5). It is only the living who are in Christ that will be changed and translated: "They that were ready went in with him to the marriage." As a magnet, sweeping through sand in which are particles of iron, takes to itself the iron and leaves the sand, so, as Christ bursts through the clouds at his glorious appearing, his own will be drawn up to him by the irresistible attraction of the dwelling spirit.

"Caught up! caught up! no wing required;
Caught up to Him, by love inspired,
To meet Him in the air."

May God help us to be ready always, that when the trumpet sounds we may not be left behind. An English preacher gives the following incident:

"A short time ago, there were two sisters in the neighborhood of London. One lived for God, and the other for the world. The Christian had been at the meeting where she had been hearing about the coming of the Lord. She told her unconverted sister what she had been hearing, and remarked: "I felt like this: I thought if the Lord should come, what a fearful thing it would be for you! I should be taken up to be forever with him, and you would be left for judgment; and I could not bear to think of it."

The sister made no reply. They slept in the same bed; and in the night the Christian lay awake, thinking, 'If the Lord should come!—O my poor sister!' She could not lie there long, but rose, and quietly stole away to a corner of the room, and, kneeling down there, poured out her soul in prayer. Presently the other awoke; she felt for her sister, but could not find her. She did not know what happened, and in an agony of mind thought to herself, 'Can it be that the Lord has come?'

She got up and searched about the room, until at last she found her. She knelt by her side; and before she rose from her knees she trusted in Jesus, and was ready to meet him."—Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D.

The affected gayety of a wicked man is like the flowery surface of Mount Etna, beneath which, materials are gathering for an eruption that will one day reduce all its beauties to ruin and desolation.

BREVITIES.

A REMARKABLE CELEBRATION.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Francis Adams celebrated their golden wedding September 10th, at their residence, Quincy, Mass. Two other golden weddings in the two preceding generations were celebrated in the same house. At the date of their golden weddings ex-President John Adams was seventy-nine years old, and ex-President J. Q. Adams had just entered his eightieth year. Mr. Charles Francis Adams is now seventy-two.

The following curious calculation appears in a French journal: The Prince Imperial had seventeen wounds. There are seventeen letters in the name Napoleon Bonaparte. The addition of the figures 1808, the date of the birth of Napoleon III., makes seventeen; so does 1929, the date of the Empress Eugenie's birth, and 1853, the date of their marriage. From that to 1870, the year of their fall, was seventeen years. The Prince Imperial was seventeen years of age when his father died. There are seventeen letters in the name of Lieut. Carey, and the addition of the figures 1862, the date of Prince Victor's birth, again produces seventeen.

Myer Stern has written from a small town of Germany on the subject of Jewish agricultural colonies, giving some pertinent information gathered by him on his travels. In Russia he says that many villages have been laid out expressly for Jews who follow agriculture, and that for seventy years they have there conducted farming successfully and contentedly, the men tilling the soil and raising the crops, and the women taking care of the cattle. An eminent rabbi of Buda-Pesth informed Mr. Stern that thousands of Jews are farmers in Hungary, and that there are thick settlements of them in Marmaros, Bereghs Comitat, and the region of Ugolza, some being quite wealthy, and all making honorable livelihoods. They are very religious, and strictly keep their Sabbath and holidays. They are also orderly citizens and prompt tax-payers.

The Moquis Indians of Arizona, numbering 1,700, live in seven villages on the tops of three cliffs or headlands that rise more than 600 feet above the plains. Why they choose these unhandy places is a mystery. On reaching the villages, says a recent visitor, one finds one's self on a flat ledge of bare rock which extends out from the main table nearly half a mile in length and from ten feet to perhaps three hundred feet in width. The sides are almost perpendicular. The most populous of these villages, Wal-la-pi, is on the extreme end of the rocks, where the width is not over one hundred feet. All the water for all purposes is carried in earthen vessels on the backs of men and women from a spring near the foot of the mountain, a distance of nearly a mile, while the wood is brought eight miles. Here these people have lived longer than they can tell, even from their traditions, and hitherto they have been averse to a change of location, notwithstanding the difficulty of obtaining their necessary supplies and the distance from their fields and herds.

A REMARKABLE CENTENARIAN.

There is at present living in a Skye-bothy, says the Glasgow Herald, old Widow Macpherson, who entered upon her 106th year last Christmas. She was born there in the same year that Dr. Samuel Johnson and Boswell visited Skye, and met with Flora Mcdonald, the Jacobite heroine, who befriended Prince Charlie when he fled to Skye after his disastrous defeat at Culloden, in 1746, and the government reward of £30,000 offered for his surrender did not induce her to betray her trust and yield up this sole survivor of a fallen dynasty. During the 105 years of Widow Macpherson's life she has lived in a turf hut, the smoke from the peat fire on the hearth finding its way out by every crevice, and giving a lustre as if varnished to the rafters which support the thatched roof. She has survived six Lords of the Isle, the present being the seventh, Lord Macdonald. She has never been out of the island, and does not understand one word of English, but converses freely in Gaelic. She has been blind for ten years, but her hearing and memory are both good, and she is nursed by her daughter Kitty, who is unwearied in her attendance upon her old mother.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 1, 1879.

To some questions requesting answers we hope to respond before long. We have been burdened with some cares that have compelled us to delay our answers.

WE again request that our brethren would favor us with some brief and practical articles on the Christain life. Long articles on subjects that have been discussed again and again do not meet with that welcome that something having a bearing on personal preparedness for the coming of the Holy and Just One would receive.

WE are glad to say that numbers of our subscribers are renewing their subscriptions. As the paper is dependent upon current receipts for its weekly issue, we hope all its patrons will be prompt to renew as soon as their time expires, but we hope also that a persistent effort will be made to increase the subscription list, now times are financially improving.

PLEASE give the weight of a talent.
N. BOND.

Talent is a term which was applied by the ancient Greeks to a balance for weighing, afterwards both to the substance weighed and the weight itself. The Æginetan talent weighed about 85 lb.; the Euboic about 70½ lb; and the Attic silver talent about 57 lb.

The Hebrew talent was equal to 3000 shekels. From the weight of an average number of shekel specimens of the Maccabæan issue the shekel's weight is found equal to 220 grains, Troy weight.

Multiplying 220x3000 =660,000 grs. Now 7000 grains, Troy weight, are equivalent to one pound Avoirdupois. We then have, by division which agrees very nearly with the weight of the Æginetan talent as given above.

$$\frac{660000}{7000} = 94\frac{2}{7} \text{ lb.}$$

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Church---Its Founder and Builder.
No. 2.

And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Matt. xvi. 18.

7. In contradistinction to a church, like that of Sardis, having a name to live, "but art dead," it is a risen, living church, its members having "passed from death unto life." "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who hath raised him from the dead." Col. ii. 12; Compare iii. 1. "And you hath he quickened," etc., "even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, ... and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," etc. Eph. ii. 1-5, 6. It is a regenerated and saved church, having no native righteousness of its own, but whose righteousness is of God in Christ; no fig-leaf aprons of man's make, but the genuine "coats of skins" of God's manufacture, (Titus iii. 5; 1 Cor. i. 30; Phil. iii. 9), each member or branch being grafted in the true vine—Christ—by a living faith. This church has the elements of divine life and power within itself. Abiding in Christ, it draws its nourishment and vitality from him, and he from the Father. "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth or believeth me shall live by me." John vi. 57; xv. 1-4.

Hence, its members are not dependent on any external forms or ceremonies of religion for its subsistance and perpetuation, as it derives it immediately from Christ without any human mediation; as with this church there is but "one mediator between God and men," Christ Jesus the Lord (1 Tim. ii. 5), and but one duly consecrated priest, and that is the great High Priest who has passed into the heavens, there to appear in the presence of God for us (Heb. iv. 14), with whom this church holds daily communion and intercourse, (1 John i. 3), by way of "the throne of grace" which is the antitype of Jacob's ladder. The ladder symbolizing the celestial hierarchy composed chiefly of God's holy angels, of which the patriarch beheld on that memorable night in the vision "ascending and descending on it." Gen. xxviii. 12, 13.

Observe, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. i. 14. And does not God give his angels charge over his church? Psa. xci. 11. In the seven church state of the Apocalyse, to have their several guardian angels or messengers, and the church of the living God or first born not to have their angels to minister unto her, to feed her, to shield her, and protect her from the assault of the enemy, and, finally, carry her through her militant state along triumphantly to millennial blessedness and scenes of ineffable glory and grandeur? Surely, she will, and "an innumerable company of angels," too. Heb. xii. 22. The angels have an important part to act in the grand drama of human redemption and are incessantly engaged at work in carrying out the divine purpose for the rescue of the fallen, and restoring the lost unto the bosom of the divine love, and bringing them to the saving knowledge of Christ, to the gathering into the one fold, and to the building up and preparing the church for the coming of her Lord, and the final consummation in the marriage supper of the Lamb, and the crowning of the King of glory, when myriads upon myriads of those bright celestial beings, of all ranks and grades, will grace that wonderful and inspiring scene by their smiling presence. We need but for a few moments turn to the book of Revelations as proof that the work of angels is vast and varied in the gracious economy of man's redemption, and, especially, in the closing up and final scenes of this age, and the bringing in of a better one, when it will be said, in reference to the enthroned Messiah of God, "Let all the angels of God worship him," (Heb. i. 6); that is, when he, God, "shall send Jesus," or "when he bringeth the first begotten into the world" again. But this is rather digressing from the point; nevertheless, it is an interesting subject, and we should like to dwell here, but must pass to notice.

8. It is a church, having no affinity with, and is entirely separate from the world. This position being characteristic of all true Christians, it being absolutely enjoined upon them; hence of the church; for, as Christians, they constitute the church. John xvii. contains the prayer of the holy Redeemer to the Father for the church. He prays for its entire sanctification, that is, for its disseverance from the world, its being set apart, and for its unity and consolidation. He declares that it will not be an edifice held up in admiration by the world, but, rather that it would be an object of the world's hatred and contempt. He plainly states for the encouragement of his disciples, lest they would diminish in faith and hope, "If the world hate you, you know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world I have chosen you out of the world; therefore the world hateth you," etc. John xv. 18-20; see 2 Cor. vi. 17. Hence, it is a church that seeks not protection from the "powers that be" as to becoming an incorporated institution, lawfully installed, but act rather so as to escape the curse of Jeremiah (xvii. 5, 6), and the woe of the Lord Jesus, (Luke vi. 26); hence she does not trust in the arm of flesh, but in the living God for protection, support and succor. It neither seeks the smiles of the world nor shuns nor cares for its frowns. It has no certain dwelling place as it passes through this world of woe, more than did "the church in the wilderness." We see in that long and rugged forty years journey of the Israelites through the wilderness a type of the church of Christ from the time of its birth at Pentecost, until it reaches the Mount Tabor of its consummation of glory in the coming of Jesus as foretold. Hence, that church that declares to set as queen, and shall see no sorrow, that is conformed to the world, that is in sympathy with the world, and is allied to, and with its customs, fashions, and institutions, is either a false or apostate church.

9. Its members. Respecting the churches of the world, there are various human contrivances and devices gotten up to make members, and so form churches; and the true index of success and prosperity, as a general thing, is in the acquisition of numbers. If we can only add by increase of numbers, that seems the point that answers for all things else. This is the way that the piety of worldly churches are measured to-day, by their numbers and their wealth—that is, temporal wealth—no matter concerning "the unsearchable riches of Christ," that is not taken into account in their estimate. But, herein is the great mistake and where thousands are deluded, and the result must be, they go down into the ditch, both the guide and the guided, under a strong delusion. Matt. xv. 14; 2 Thess. ii. 11. It is a noteworthy fact that all true church membership is predicated on the only soul-saving basis of "the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost" which God has promised "to shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior." Tit. iii. 5, 6. A soul may become a member of a church without this washing of regeneration, etc., but not a member of Christ's mystical body, which is the church.

Without this quickening, for it is only as the result of this quickening, this operation of the divine and living power that raised the Lord Jesus from the dead, whereby the soul attaches itself to him, holding on him by this vitalizing power and living faith as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast; no human device or human arm can accomplish this work as a creation, hence it can only be performed by sovereign and divine power. "If any man be in Christ (in the body) he is a new creature," etc. 2 Cor. v. 17. Hence all professedly spiritual children not of God's workmanship are but children of the flesh and not of the spirit or promise.

Hence, Jesus declares "no man can come to me except the father which hath sent me draw him," etc. John vi. 44. So that all converts that are not drawn by the divine father to Christ, that are not grafted in the good olive tree, which is Christ by the Holy Ghost power proceeding from God, are but false, and dry and lifeless branches, having no divine sap or life in them. They have the appearance and form of branches, but not being divinely united to Christ by the quickening and energizing power from on high—creative power—they are dead, and in the great summing up day, must be cast forth as a branch only fit to be cast into the fire and burned. John xv 6. And how are we to distinguish between the true and the false? By simply using the means that Christ has given us to determine, namely, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away, and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit. . . . Abide in me and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me." John xv. 1-5.

Thus, we observe the importance of abiding in the vine in order that we derive from it the necessary sap or vitality to render us living branches, or how can we yield fruit and so by our good works glorify our father which is in heaven. "Now, if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Rom. viii. 9. And to have the spirit we must certainly be grafted in him so that we abide in him, or we are as but a withered, fruitless branch, and only fit for the flames.

10. The first converts of Christ's church, or we might say the branches or beginning of that church, were made such, not of men but, of God; neither by men's means or devices, but by the means and methods devised of God. Hence they were those bearing certain important characteristics, namely, "But as many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John i. 12, 13. Here is implied a work reaching far beyond all human force; a birth of the spirit of which its modus operandi we know but little, further than we know whether or not we have been recipients of its new birth powers. John iii. 5-8. The formula, or introductory, attending this is clearly marked in many places in the word. See Matt. iii. 2; xxviii, 19; Mark i. 15; Acts ii. 38; iii. 19; viii. 12; xxxviii. 30; x. 44-48; xix. 2-6.

That it is the special prerogative of God to introduce members into the body of this church. The expressions, "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved," "Believers were the more added to the Lord," "And much people was added to the Lord," Acts ii. 47; v. 14; xi. 24, is proof of who the author of the work is.

Hence they are styled Christians, properly so, because they are Christians from the fact that they belong to Christ by virtue of their union with him, and from the fact that they are the purchase of his blood, and hence they act like Christians, talk like Christians, live like Christians, and if they shall not survive his second coming will die like Christians; and if they should abide until that day—having their citizenship in heaven or heavenly—they will have their mortal bodies changed and fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body, hence, be like him physically as well as morally, and so like him all over according to promise. Acts xi. 26; Phil. iii. 20, 21; 1 John iii. 2.

In conclusion we would say that it will avail us nothing in the great day to have simply had a name to live—to have carried with us in life a mere profession, to have endorsed any of the many man made creeds in Christendom, to have attached ourselves to any of the many churches or denominations which the world is groaning under, will avail us nothing. Creeds are nothing! Christ is all in all! Churches, and sects, and denominations are worse than nothing, as they will prove to thousands a snare and a hindrance to their soul's salvation! Solid, substantial and thorough conversion of the soul to God in the use of the means designed as set forth in the apostolic gospel, which forms the all important and vital union with Christ. We must not stop short of this. If we do, we have no assurance of safety. As there was no safety outside of the ark in the days of Noah, so there is no safety out of Christ.

O, dear reader, examine yourself in the light of God's word and see where you are standing to-day. Whether in creeds or in Christ! Whether in false systems of religion and in churches, or in the body of Christ, the only true church of the living God. Eph. iv. 12; Col. i. 18. WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

"Human Responsibility to Divine Government."

I have read with care, the article by Bro. Magruder on "Human Responsibility to Divine Government" and much admire the spirit in which it is written. With your permission I would like to say a few words touching the same subject. Our Brother divides the race into three classes. "The righteous, the wicked, and the irresponsible." It is of the third class I wish to speak. Our brother says the third class "are those who living in times of ignorance, never hear the divine word and therefore cannot be said to accept or reject it and hence are not responsible to it." What does our brother mean by the "divine word?" Does he mean the Bible as a whole, or does he mean "the gospel," "the word of truth," what saves? If the latter are there not some who have lived, not only in the "times of ignorance" covered by the quotation, but at other times, and even now in our day, who do not hear? If so, why do they not hear? Is it not, as our brother says of the third class, "the result of the circumstances that surround them in life?" Is not death that came by Adam one of the circumstances? Is not death that came by Adam an unjust interference with life, and often before the individual has had a chance to hear "the word of truth," "the gospel of our salvation?" If when all such individuals are classed as irresponsible, are they not creatures of fate? Must we bow to this conclusion? I for one might do so with a good grace if it were absolutely necessary; but if such were to come up for trial in the coming age, would it not obviate the difficulty? How can we understand that to be a redemption which does not restore to the race, as far as possible, what the race lost through the sin of Adam? Did not the race loose the chance to live forever through the first Adam? Is not that chance restored by the second Adam? If so, does it not necessitate a resurrection of all such as are capacitated for eternal life, who fell in death before it was possible for them to hear "the word of truth," "the gospel of their salvation?" If not, what do these and kindred passages mean? "He is the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world takes away the unjust interference with the life of all such by raising them from the dead to trial as a subject in the age or "fullness of times."

Are not all the world on trial through their knowledge of God by creation and tradition? And such as acknowledge God and walk according to the light given, are they not eligible to a resurrection as subjects of the kingdom like the "left of the nations?" While those who hear "the word of truth," "the gospel of our salvation," are on trial for the name, for the kingship, for eternal life.

J. H. THOMAS, M. D.

[We had concluded to terminate the discussion on "Human Responsibility to Divine Government," as bearing upon the resurrection of the unjust and unbelieving, with Bro. Magruder's last article. On account, however, of some points in the above we have concluded to let it appear. It will be due Bro. Magruder to make a brief response, we still deem it inexpedient to protract the discussion. The practical rather than the speculative is now most needful. ED.]

Meeting in Missouri.

I was, as announced through THE RESTITUTION, permitted to commence meeting at Ravanna, Mo., August 20th, and to continue till Sept. 7th, making, in all, fifteen discourses. Our meeting was fairly attended considering the shortness of the nights and the busy season of the year. While there, we attended each First Day of the week to the breaking of the loaf, and immersed one into the Christ—Sister Jennie Callaway—Brother Callaway's oldest daughter. There are about twenty brethren in and around Ravanna, but constant removes make it very hard, apparently, to maintain an organization, and, perhaps, it would have been given over ere this had it not been for Brother Callaway's constant zeal and love for the truth. Brother James Harlan, formerly of Iowa, has located there to read medicine with Brother Callaway.

From Ravanna I was, by Brother Helm and James Callaway accompanied across the country about eighty miles south into Carroll county, where I found a congregation of about forty members. Here the truth was once introduced by J. K. Spear, and afterwards followed up by Brother Benjamin Wilson, which resulted in planting a little congregation. Since, or for several years, they have been cared for by Brother Prosser, who has, so far as I could learn, been doing well in presenting the truth. On the Sunday before I reached there he immersed five into the Christ. On the next evening after our arrival, the 10th, I united Brother James Helm, of Ravanna, and Miss Mary White, in matrimony, and the next afternoon immersed the then Mrs. Helm into the Christ. The excessive rains during the week prevented us of several meetings, but I was enabled to make five speeches to good and attentive audiences and to listen to one from Brother Prosser. But in the midst of prosperity often comes sorrow and bereavements. The hearts of many were rendered sad by the death of Brother Funk, who had been one of the leading members among them. But may the hope of those who were bereaved be enabled to reach out even to the throne of him who is enabled to help for consolation. Brother Prosser has also organized a congregation near him of about thirty members, known as the Blue Mound congregation. They would be pleased to have any of our preaching brethren stop and make them a visit who may be passing through the country. They are but a short distance from Chillicothe, on the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad. The brethren intend having a general meeting there another fall.

The Growth of Nihilism in Russia.

Russian Nihilism is not dying out. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Cologne Gazette declares that the continuance of those conditions which gave birth to it, begetting discontent, contempt, and general hatred of Government institutions brings regular accessions to its ranks. That Nihilism has not been shaken to any extent, in spite of General Ghourko's vigorous measures, is proved by the fact that its celebrated organ, Land and Liberty, still appears in St. Petersburg, always finding its way to the bureaus of the highest officers of state. A six months state of siege having been unable to prevent the circulation of this paper, is in itself a proof that the blows hitherto dealt have not yet affected the vitality of Nihilism. The area of its activity is becoming wider, and it is establishing itself in the nation; people, as they get accustomed to it, are beginning to regard it with favor, and, decreasing in gloomy and narrow fanaticism, it is increasing in popularity and influence. The press toned down its indignation articles immediately after the murders of last spring. Then came discussions on the cause of the evil, tending to show that the nation required increased freedom and rights in order to fight against it. And when language and action on the subject had gone as far as possible; when the government had been implored to do its part and had turned a deaf ear to the appeal, the journals confined themselves to reporting occurrences, and ceased altogether attacking Nihilism itself. The press has as a matter of fact, discontinued its assistance of combatting the revolution. The evils in the system of government are, on the other hand, so numerous that there is no lack of material for attacks against present institutions, and, in this way, fresh ground is prepared for Nihilism.

Methodist Record; Flowers are created as coral insects create islands in the sea. The exquisite fabric is made visible by an adherance of atoms according to divine law, as operative now as in the Eden morning. The living, sentient germs of the flower hear the secret trumpet-sounds; and obedient to the command of the supreme Intelligence, they arrange themselves in order, as really responsive to law as the soldiers who march and countermarch in the field-review. A rose is not an accident. It is a divine creation, It is an intelligent thought embodied. All the glories of the garden, and all the grandeur of the summer, are processes of law, sentients, living entities, one answering to another, and all of them touched by the hand of God, grouped in order, harmoniously blended and poised, in the visible universe of atoms, allegiant to the will of the Almighty. And as God moves upon the particles that answer his call by blooming out in flowers, so his volitious transform plant, animal, stone, star and sun, and he can create the new heavens and the new earth.

Lines.

Come, Lord, and tarry not;
Bring the long-looked-for day,
Oh! why these years of waiting here,
These ages of delay?

Come, for the good are few;
They lift their voice in vain;
Faith wanes faster on the earth,
And love is on the wane.

Come, for love wakes cold;
Its steps are faint and slow;
Faith now is lost in unbelief;
Hope's lamp burns dim and low.

Come, for creation groans,
Impatient of thy stay;
Worn out with these long years of ill
These ages of delay.

Come, and make all things new;
Build up the ruined earth;
Restore our failed paradise,
Creation's second birth.

Come, and begin thy reign
Of everlasting peace;
Come, take the kingdom to thyself,
Great King of Righteousness.

SELECTIONS.

(New York Observer.)

The Kirwan Letters To the Right Rev. John Hughes, Bishop of New York.

LETTER XI.

The Effects of Popery on Liberty, Knowledge, Happiness, True Religion.

My Dear Sir,—In my last letter I submitted to your decision the question whether or not the Roman Catholic is a church of Christ, after briefly stating to you how some things bearing on its truthful decision strike me. I design the present letter to have no very remote bearing upon the same question, and would ask you to give it the degree of consideration to which, in candor, you may deem its statements entitled.

In reading the prophecies of the Old Testament, I find that they all speak with the most glowing anticipations of the yet future kingdom of Messiah. That kingdom was to produce the civil, moral, and spiritual renovation of the world. When I turn over to the New Testament, I find that, on the birth of Messiah, the angel of the Lord stated to the shepherds that he came to bring them good tidings of great joy which should be to all people. And having announced the birth of the Savior in the city of David, he was suddenly joined by a multitude of angels, singing "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men."

The Old Testament and the New—patriarchs, prophets, and apostles, all unite in teaching us that the effect of Christianity upon our world would be to restore it to its primeval state, and to reinstamp upon the heart of man the lost image of his Creator. Now, how far has popery fulfilled these predictions, and the reasonable expectations of the faithful founded on them? In other words, what are the fruits of popery? Our Savior tells us that a good tree yields good fruit—a bad tree, bad fruit. And with this test in view, my object in the present letter is to state to you how some things strike me.

What has been the effect of popery upon human liberty? Permit me to use the word "liberty" in its widest sense. As to civil liberty, it has been its unchanging enemy. It has never permitted a spark of liberty to glow for an hour when it could extinguish it. There is not in Europe at the present hour—perhaps not on earth—a greater civil despot than the Pope. The man that, in Italy, writes a page or makes a speech in favor of liberty, must fly the kingdom, or be dragged to a dungeon. And we are to judge of popery, not by its pliability where it cannot rule, but by the way in which it shows its heart where it can do so without let or hindrance. Kings as well as people have groaned under its tyranny. Henry IV. of Germany was made by the Pope to stand three days in the open air, with bare head and feet. Frederick I. was made to hold his stirrup. He caused Henry II. of England to be scourged on the tomb of Thomas A Becket. And the present state of Spain, Austria, Italy, shows the effects of popery on civil liberty.

It is equally the foe of mental liberty. The Bible is without any authority save what your church gives it. And the Bible must teach nothing save what your church allows. And man must believe nothing save what the priest permits. And philosophy must teach nothing save what the church sanctions. You know that for this last offence Galileo was sent to study astronomy in prison. Pure popery and real liberty never have breathed, and never can, the same atmosphere. The principle of your church is to allow nothing that bows not to its yoke.

What has been the effect of popery upon human knowledge? When Christianity, like a new sun, rose upon the world, there was much that might be called education in the Roman empire. The obvious effect of Christianity was to extend it. After the lapse of some ages, popery, by gradual stages, crept, serpent-like, to the high places of power. How soon afterward the lights of learning go out—how soon the Dark Ages commence, and roll on as if they were never to end! And those centuries of darkness form the Golden Age of your church. And what spirit did it manifest on the revival of learning in Europe after the sacking of Constantinople, and at the Reformation? Leo X. prohibited every book translated from the Greek and Hebrew. This blow was aimed at the Bible. He forbade the reading of every book published by the Reformers. He excommunicated all who read an heretical work. The Inquisitors prohibited every book published by sixty-two different printers, and all books printed by any printer who had never published a book of heresy! Not has one of these prohibitions ever been recalled. At this hour, the noblest products of human genius are under the ban of your church, and the Index Expurgatorius is in full operation at Rome!

And what has been the effect of all this upon human knowledge? Look into the countries for an answer where your church rules undisturbed. The nobles and the people in Spain, Portugal, Austria, Sardinia, Sicily, are sunk into almost the same state of ignorance. Upon the intellectual degradation of Catholic Ireland I have already dwelt. The Book of books, which the Lamb died to unseal, your church has revealed; it has laid an embargo upon human knowledge; it allows the people to read only what it permits, and it permits only what tends to rivet its chains, and to perpetuate the darkness which is its natural element. When the Reformation occurred, the retrograde movement of the world toward ignorance, and barbarism, and idolatry had almost been completed. Had it not occurred, a radiance might continue to gild the high places of the earth after the Gospel sun had set—a twilight might be protracted for a few ages, in which a few might grope their way to heaven, but each age would have come wrapped in a deeper and yet deeper gloom, until impenetrable darkness had fallen on the world. Even the degree of knowledge which has obtained in the papal world, it owes to the Reformation.

And what has been the effect of popery upon the happiness of our race? This is a question of high bearing, yet I can do little more than glance at it. Has it ever laid out its energies for the promotion of human happiness? If so, when and where? Has it not, on the other hand, set itself in opposition to everything calculated to promote it? Does general intelligence promote it? Your church has always opposed it. Does the free circulation of the Word of God promote it? You have opposed this also. Does the inculcation of pure religion promote it? You have poisoned or closed up all its fountains. Does advancing civilization promote it? Your efforts are untiring to reverse its wheels, and to roll us back to the darkness of the Dark Ages, whose very light was darkness. But what can I say more? for the time would fail me to tell of your monasteries and nunneries, of the wars which popery has excited, of its Crusades, of the bitter jealousies it has sown between States, of the oceans of blood it has shed to obtain its objects, of the Inquisitions it has erected to torture the unbelieving, and of the way and manner in which it has caused those of whom the world was not worthy to have trial of cruel mockings and scourgings—yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment: how it caused them to be stoned, to be sawn asunder, to be slain with the sword, to wander about in deserts and in mountains, in dens and caves of the earth. Oh, sir, the pathway of popery through the world is marked by the blood and bones of its victims. It has gone into the earth feeling that Joshua's commission on entering Canaan was in its pocket, and that all who questioned its authority were Hittites and Amorites; and, almost without a figure of speech, it can be said that the nations which it found as the garden of the Lord, it converted into a howling wilderness. I know not that human happiness or human improvement have ever had a more determined foe than popery.

What is the influence of popery as to the exercise of Christian charity? By charity I mean, not almsgiving, nor yet the love of God which the Spirit inspires in the soul, but that grace which induces love to those who differ from us, and to cast a mantle over their defects. The Bible teaches us to do good to all as we find opportunity—to love our enemies—to treat with kindness those who despitefully persecute us. How does your church obey these injunctions of Christ the Lord? Let your Inquisitions, your auto da fés, your Bartholomew's day, your Irish massacre, your yearly anathemas against heretics, your consigning to perdition all beyond the pale of your church, answer. All non-papists you place beyond the pale of mercy; you refuse their bodies Christian burial, if such your burial can be called; you convert into the bitterest enemies of the man that becomes a Bible Christian those of his own household; you make the poor Irish servant to feel that his master and her mistress are the enemies of God, however pious, whose reading of the Bible and whose prayers to heaven cannot be heard without committing great sin; you enact a ceremonial law, and proclaim that all who submit not to it are speckled with plague-spots; and hence your priests, wherever located in Protestant communities, instead of going about as men to promote the general welfare, move about as spectres, as if afraid of the light of day; here abstracting a child from a Sunday school, there burning a Bible, here poisoning the mind of a servant against his master, and there that of a maid against her mistress, and seeking to place all, save his own untittered followers, like the lepers of Samaria, without the city of God. Does this look like the spirit of Christ?

What is the influence of popery on true religion? To this point I have already spoken. I have told you, sir, how it has corrupted our rule of faith, and the sacraments, and the doctrines of the Bible. This is but the theory of the matter. Oh, how can I speak of its practical effects? The religion of Christ it has converted into a system of idolatry, in which God and witness the Bible and traditions, canons, decretals, the worship of God and of saints, the mediation of Christ and of Mary, prayer and scourging, pious deeds, penances, and processions, are all of like authority and like efficacy!

The mind of the poor papist it fills, not with light and love, but with darkness and fear. It closes to him the way to heaven through the blood of Christ, and opens it through the fires of Purgatory. Leaving him in doubt as to where he will succeed best, he now prays for pardon to God—now to the Virgin—now to Peter or Paul—now to some old picture almost obliterated by age, believing alike the truths of Scripture and the absurdities of your system, and knowing little of either.

It impresses the poor papist with the idea that the religion consists, not in love to God and man, but in external submission to rites and forms. Hence the Spaniard will go to confession with his dagger under his mantle, and the poor, generous Irishman will go from the Mass and Missal to the pot-house, and from the confession-box to the card-table and the boxing match! and your Inquisitors have gone out from your Eucharist to kindle the fires which consumed your heretics and our martyrs, and which illumined their pathway to glory!

But I must stop lest my emotions swell beyond due bonds.

These, reverend sir, are some, and but some, of the fruits of your system. How do they appear to you when thus brought together? Is the tree which bears these fruits good or bad? Has popery in any one particular, in any one country, or in any age, ever produced the results which prophets and Apostles have told us the religion of Messiah would produce? If not, are not popery and Christianity not only different, but antagonist system? Popery is paganism under a new name, and the difference between their priests is as little as is the difference between the oysters. With respect, yours,

KIRWAN.

(The Truth.)

Books that Die, and that Live.

In a recent English publication the statement is made that "the tables of literary mortality show the following appalling facts in regard to the chances of an author to secure literary fame: Out of 1,000 published books, 600 never pay the cost of printing; 200 just pay expenses; 100 return a slight profit; and fewer still show a substantial gain. Of these 1,000 books 650 are forgotten by the end of the year, and 150 more at the end of three years; only fifty survive seven years publicity. Of the 50,000 publications put forth in the seventeenth century, barely fifty-nine have maintained their reputation, and are reprinted. Of the 50,000 publications put forth in the seventeenth century, barely fifty-nine have maintained their reputation, and are reprinted. Of the 50,000 works published in the eighteenth century, posterity has hardly preserved more than were rescued from oblivion in the seventeenth century. Men have been writing books these three thousand years, and there are scarcely more than 500 writers throughout the globe, who have survived the ravages of time and the forgetfulness of man." It might have been safely added that there are not fifty of the 500, that are known to the mass of ordinary intelligent readers in any one country of the globe.

But if there figures furnish humiliating proof of the utter vanity of human ambition, and the disappointment of human hopes, it is comforting to turn to "the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." Here we find a collection of books, the last of which was written 1,800 years ago, the first of which was more than a thousand years before the birth of Herodotus, called by Cicero, "the Father of history." It is marvellous that they were so religiously preserved by the Jews, when they contain an almost unbroken record of Jewish stupidity, and blind unbelief, and shameful idolatry and wicked rebellion against their own God. It is equally marvellous that they have been preserved since the Christian era dawned, when we remember that for centuries the fires of persecution, and the raillery of wit, and the scorn of philosophy, and the pride of science, and the natural antipathy of the human heart to their searching reproofs and holy demands, have strenuously sought to consign them to oblivion or destruction.

But according to the last report of the American Bible Society, over 164,000,000 Bibles and Testaments have been distributed in more than 240 languages and dialects of earth since the Bible Society work was inaugurated in 1804. Of this number, more than 36,000,000 have been issued by the American Bible Society, about 80,000,000 by the British and Foreign Society, 32,000,000 by other Bible Societies whose reports are accessible, beside the millions that have been sent forth by private publishing houses. If God's blessed word contained the absurdities which so many shallow, conceited, and depraved men and women profess to find in it, nearly always as second hand discoveries, it is inconceivable that it could attain this enormous circulation. All the unnumbered millions who have read it, and lived and died happily by its teachings, are not fools and hypocrites; and the more they have studied it, the more convincing and overwhelming are the evidences of its divine origin, until they can say with John Randolph, "a mole could have conceived the Principia of Newton, as easily as man could have made such a book."

Amid much that is discouraging to the thoughtful Christian, the increasing circulation of the Bible among the nations is the most hopeful sign of the times; and it will surely accomplish its mission whether received or rejected. It is "unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one the savior of death unto death; and to the other the savor of life unto life." (2 Cor. ii. 15, 16). "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow, from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void; but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. lv. 10, 11). It is a solemn thought that this ever-living word will appear as a witness against those to whom it comes, and who turn a deaf ear to its admonitions and entreaties. "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day" (John xii. 48).

NEWS ITEMS.

YELLOW FEVER.

MEMPHIS, September 26.—Evening.—Six new cases in all were reported to-day, three of whom were colored. Two additional deaths have occurred.

Four cases of fever were reported at Oak Grove, ten miles south of Bailey Station, Tenn. Two deaths have recently occurred in a family named Bailey, residing at that point.

AT LITTLE ROCK.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., September 27.—At the meeting of the local Board of Health yesterday, an order was passed establishing quarantine limits at five miles from this city against Memphis.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., September 27.—10 a. m.—Two cases were reported this morning—Alf Borjeaks and F. Goldscamp. Three deaths have occurred since last night—Mary Stines, Margaret Manly and John D. Allen.

AT NOON.

MEMPHIS, September, 27.—Noon.—One additional new case has been reported to the Board of Health—Allen Brown. Three more deaths have occurred: Carl A. Schurmyer, Charles Hallman and Harriet Archey, the last named colored.

Charles Hallman died five miles from the city, on Poplar-street boulevard. The young daughter of Rev. W. T. Dalzell was stricken with the fever last evening. Alfred Watkins and Mrs. Prestige remain very low. The former had the black vomit last night.

RIGHT REPORT.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., September 28.—The total number of new cases for the week was sixty-three—whites, forty-one; colored, twenty-two. Total number to date, 1,259. Total number of deaths from yellow fever for the week, thirty-one—white, twenty-six; colored, five. Total deaths to date, 352.

The Black Hills city of Deadwood was almost entirely swept out of existence by a conflagration Friday morning. The total loss is estimated at over $1,500,000. The inhabitants, many of whom lost everything, are in a destitute condition.

FOREIGN.

King Cetywayo, the Zulu chief, is now at Cape Town, South Africa. Five of his attendants were killed in trying to escape. Sir Garnet Wolsely telegraphs from South Africa that all the important Zulu chiefs have now submitted to the British authorities.

GREAT DISTRESS.

LONDON, September 27.—Short time and low wages cause great distress to the working classes.

THE ADVANCE.

SIMLA, September 27.—General Baker's brigade to-day will proceed to Zargum Shahr, where it will be joined by a force under Sir Fredrick Roberts, the last detachment of which will leave Ali Kheyl Monday for Cabul. The Ameer's officials have been instructed not to oppose the advance of the British troops. A small body of Mohammunds assembled near Lalpura but were dispersed.

CHOLERA.

Six fatal cases of cholera have occurred in the Ninth Regiment, Royal Artillery. The Eighty-first Regiment is also afflicted with the same disease.

NEW LOANS.

It is reported from several quarters that a new Russian four and a half per cent., loan of fifteen or twenty millions is about to be offered in London. The money is to be used for the construction of railways. It is also intimated that another and larger loan on account of war material may be expected.

A war to the bitter end is in prospect between Turkey and Greece over the controversy of the geographical boundary. In the meantime efforts are on foot for an alliance between those inveterate foes, Russia and Turkey.

Rest, but few can comprehend the word. At morn I speak it, but at midnight most, and then 'tis music! O the thought of rest—of perfect freedom from distress and pain—of health, of vigor in each nerve and limb. The thought inspires, consoles, and makes me pray for fear I shall lose the blessing. Grant me, O God, a patient heart; and may my will be so conformed to thine, that I may wait thy own good pleasure, whatsoever it be.

MARRIED.

McCRORY—RIGHTLEY—By Elder S. A. Claplin, at the residence of the brides' father, in Plymouth, Indiana, Sept. 28, 1879, Mr. FRANCIS MARION McCRORY and Miss ALICE RIGHTLEY.

DIED.

SHIVELY—Of Typhoid fever, at Elmira, N. Y., Wm. H. Moore.

He was born April 7, 1840, and was in his fortieth year. Was married to Miss I Montenney, in public, at Darien, N. Y., about ten years ago, by the writer. I also preached the funeral sermon of his grandmother, brother and father, and also baptized his mother and youngest sister. I received a telegram Aug. 28, announcing his death and asking me to come to Pennsylvania (at Gillets) to attend his funeral on the 31st, some 300 miles. He was the son of Jesse and Abby Moore, and was a good and obedient one. He leaves a wife, two children, mother and two sisters to mourn their loss. He was a conductor on the railroad. We occupied the Baptist church at Gillets, and as there last two trains at that place, one from Elmira with the corps, and the other from Troy, Bradford county, Pa., it is estimated that some 1,500 people attended his funeral. He was a good son, an affectionate husband and a tender father, but we all had to bid him a final farewell, and thus committed him into the hands of a judge that is infinite in knowledge and will do right. C. P. SWEET.

POETRY.

[Bethel Evangelist.]

The Master.

Waiting for him in the darkness,
Watching for him in the light;
Listening to catch his orders
In the very midst of the fight.
Seeing his slightest signal
Across the heads of the throng;
Hearing his faintest whisper
Above earth's loudest song.

Dwelling beneath his shadow
In the burden and heat of the day;
Looking for his appearing
As the hours wear fast away.
Shining—to give him glory;
Working to praise his name;
Bearing with him the suffering,
Bearing for him the shame.

Art thou afraid to trust him
Seeming so far away?
When for—then, not keep closer—
Close as he says we may?
Why then not walk beside him?
Holding his blessed hand;
Patiently walking onward
All through the weary land?

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Glorious Consummation.—No. 1.

I will come again. John xiv. 3.

That our Lord and Redeemer, Jesus Christ, will sometime appear in this world, for the accomplishment of certain purposes, is a truth very plainly revealed in the Word of God. His coming and the purposes for which he comes are revealed equally plain in the Word of God, and there is no excuse for anyone remaining in darkness on this grand subject. The time and manner of his coming are stated in plain, simple language in the Bible; so plain, in fact, that "a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein," if he will take the Bible to mean what it says.

As I said, it is a plainly revealed truth that Christ is coming to earth again. To deny this truth would be to deny the truth of the Bible and the majesty of God. The church of all ages has held this glorious truth, even the patriarchs, prophets and righteous men of old. Israel's prophets did not only prophecy of the first advent of the Redeemer, but also of his second.

I now call attention to the glorious promise of Christ which I have used as my text, "I will come again." This promise has never been fulfilled. Jesus has never literally returned to earth. Therefore it remains to be fulfilled in the future. Many Christian people sincerely believe that this promise is fulfilled at every individual's death. They are honest in this belief, but it may not be true, indeed it is not true. It can be shown very plain that death is not the Redeemer's advent. Christ told his disciples that he was going to leave them. "I go away," he said, "but if I go away, I will come again." How did he go away? Literally, personally? Just so he is coming again. The Bible says he is coming in the same manner he went away. See Acts i. 11.

Our Savior, in the 24th chapter of Matthew, 13th of Mark, 21st of Luke, speaks of his second coming and the signs which should precede it, to show when it was near. He speaks also of the destruction of Jerusalem in these same chapters; and as these two subjects, the destruction of Jerusalem and his second coming, have been recorded so through each other, many have concluded as follows: That Christ alludes altogether to his coming to destroy Jerusalem, and many go so far as to say that this is the only coming there ever will be. But this notion or opinion can easily be confuted by paying strict attention to the whole tenor of those prophecies. For example: Christ speaks of his coming as personal, literal, as visible as the lightning (Matt. xxiv. 27); it remains to be proven that there was such a manifestation at Jerusalem's destruction.

Other proofs are numerous, of which I give a few of the most significant. At the destruction of Jerusalem Christ did not appear in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and cause all tribes of the earth to mourn. Matt. xxiv. 30.

It is equally certain that he did not send his angels with the great sound of a trumpet to gather his elect from the four winds. Another important fact is well worth our notice here. When was the book of Revelation given to St. John? Look in your reference Bible opposite the 1st verse of Rev. 1st chapter, and you will read Anno Domini 96. Then the book of Revelation was given in the year 96, more than sixty years after Christ's ascension. Was the year 96 before or after Jerusalem's destruction? After, about twenty-five years after. Jerusalem was destroyed about the year 70. Well, in this book of Revelation, Christ's second advent was alluded to as a then future event. So this proves that Christ's second advent was not at the destruction of Jerusalem, beyond doubt or cavil.

Then the promise, "I will come again," remains still to be fulfilled, as it was not fulfilled at Jerusalem's destruction, nor is it fulfilled at every individual's death. The apostles have spoken more or less of the second coming of Christ. References to it are made a large number of times in the Bible. It is a very prominent theme in Holy Scripture.

Paul, in his epistle to Titus, in admonishing the brethren, writes thus: "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Tit. ii. 11 13. And in Heb. ix. 28, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

It is a very clearly revealed fact, that when our Savior appears, he can, and will be seen by all the inhabitants of the earth, that his coming will be as visible as the lightning. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Matt. xxiv. 27. "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him and they also which pierced him," etc. Rev. i. 7. "While they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 10, 11.

Jesus was seen going up into heaven in person and it is said that he will come in like manner. And when he comes he will be seen by all, the disobedient, rejectors of the gospels, scoffers, and every class of unbelievers. "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Matt. xxiv. 30.

It is very plainly revealed in many verses, that, when Jesus appears, he shall be seen by all, saint and sinner alike yea, by all of earth's inhabitants. But, as it respects the precise time of his coming, God, for wise purposes, has not seen fit to reveal it. It is not necessary, therefore, that we should know it, or it would have been revealed. The Lord tells us in so many plain words that we may know when his coming is near, and commands us to watch. Why watch? Because he is coming suddenly. Because he wants us to be found ready and waiting. Because, if we did not watch he would come upon us unawares.

He is coming suddenly and says: "Be ye ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh. Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh shall find so doing (watching)." Matt. xxiv. 44, 46. He would have us ready and waiting. This is plainly taught in his many commands to watch. If we do not watch he will come upon us unawares. He says: "If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." Rev. iii. 3. "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame." Rev. xvi. 15. Yes, it is plain that Christ enjoins upon us the duty of watching, and in this last verse pronounces a blessing upon the watcher. To be blessed of Christ! Oh, how sweet! Then let every Christian watch. Do not disobey Christ in not watching, or you may be found stripped of your garments. Rev. xvi. 15.

After our Savior had given us the signs by which we might discern his approach, he tells us that, when all have come to pass, we may know positively, without any guess work, that he is very near. He says: "Now learn a parable of the fig-tree. When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily, I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." Matt. xxiv. 32 34.

Now, this is very plain language to me, but it may not be so plain to the reader. I can realize the full meaning of these words, and the marvelous truth they convey, but it may not be so with the reader. Therefore, that the reader may understand, I will explain in a few words, to which I call special attention.

Christ tells us to learn a parable of the fig-tree. What are we to learn? When we see the fig-tree leafing out, or putting forth leaves, we know of a certainty that summer is near. There is no guess-work about it. Not at all. It is a positive knowledge. Christ here uses very emphatic language. The word know is very emphatic. Christ applies it to the parable of the fig-tree. Where else does he apply it equally emphatic? To the fulfillment of prophecy.

He goes on to speak of the fulfillment of all the signs of his approach, and says that, when all have been fulfilled that we may know—not guess or suppose—that his coming is very near. He says: "When ye shall see all these things come to pass then know that it is near." "All these things" he says. He is not at the doors till all of the signs have been fulfilled, not part of them. All is another emphatic word. The meaning of Christ's words here is, that the class of people living on the earth after the fulfillment of all the signs of his approach are to know that his coming is very near, "at the doors," he says. When a person is standing right at the door, the very next thing in order is the opening of the door and entrance.

To make his words more emphatic, Christ speaks in 34th verse of a generation that should not pass away before his coming. "This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled." "All these things," the advent and His signs. This generation is not to pass till Christ has come. What generation is meant? Most evidently the generation in existence after the fulfillment of all the signs. No other explanation will suffice to put sufficient emphasis on the verse preceding it. Then, reader, if Christ's words are true, there is certainly but a step between us and his second coming.

To the unbeliever, the infidel, the scoffer, this explanation and Christ's own words even, are vain, foolish and undeserving of confidence. But, let us not be faithless and unbelieving, for Christ's words are true. They cannot be broken or fail of fulfillment. Christ says in verse 35: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Let people scoff and disbelieve, but these words show that their scoffing will not prevent Christ from coming.

I am well aware that there are many, even among professed Christians, who say that we can know nothing whatever of the time of Christ's advent; that he may come "to-morrow, or not for a thousand years." To such I would say, If you are right, without any proof, whatever, that you are right, Christ's words are worse than meaningless. Indeed, Christ is found to be a liar, a false witness, a fanatic. Who will dare to lay such a charge to Christ, to pile up such an accusation against him? Yet it is just what you are doing, as I not one jot or tittle short of it. When Christ says in so many plain words, "Know that is near, even at the doors," and soon says, "You can't know anything whatever about it," Christ is a liar if the man is right. "But," says the unbeliever, "you can't understand these things." All I have to say to this is, that any one who cannot understand these words "Know that it is near, even at the doors," must be blind indeed. Why, these words are so simple that a little child can understand them. If these words cannot be understood, then not a single verse in the Bible can be understood. All is meaningless chaos. We had better throw away the book. This is the inevitable result of disbelieving Christ's words.

From the reading of the sure Word and common observation, it is revealed to me beyond the shadow of a doubt, that it will be a very dark time as it respects the state of religion in the world, just before the coming of Christ. Paul tells us, that "In the last days perilous times shall come. Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. iii. 1, 13. These evil men, seducers, deceivers, are to teach all sorts of false doctrines and damnable heresies. Every doctrine, whatever it may be, whether few or many, believe it, and love it, that is contrary to the Bible, is false. False doctrines and religion is to abound extensively in the last days, or prophecy would fail of fulfillment, which God says shall never be. His word cannot be broken; it is impossible.

Paul tells us furthermore of the state of religion in the last days, that, "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith (of the Bible), giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared with a hot iron." If their consciences were not seared they would know they were teaching false doctrine and leave it. Paul says that "some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils," showing that false doctrines will be taught. And that it is dangerous to depart from the true faith is more than implied in another verse. "Take heed unto thyself and to the doctrine, and continue in them (not depart from them). For in so doing (continuing in the truth), thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2, 16.

In 2 Tim. iv. 3, we read: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Are we not living in these times now, and are not false doctrines increasing? They must be blind, indeed, who cannot see it! willfully blind. To-day the pure gospel of Christ is shrouded in darkness, it is not preached. Some gospel is preached, but not the gospel. This state of things is growing worse and worse, ripening for destruction.

A corrupted, adulterated gospel has taken the place of the pure gospel. Whenever the ideas of men are added to the gospel, it (the gospel) is darkened, adulterated, added to and taken from. Things are very bad now, but will be worse. Depend upon it, the darkest time of all will be immediately preceding the coming of Christ. The power of deception is now great, but will be greater, for Paul says, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."

But this is not the general belief. No, for the general opinion is, that the religion of Christ will be in a very prosperous state, and go on adding conquest to conquest, till the whole world is brought to Christ. But the Bible and common observation and reason declare aloud it is a wrong conclusion.

Our Savior gives us an idea of the state of the world at the time of the end when he declared, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man." This, very emphatically, contradicts the idea of a conversion of the world. Our Savior furthermore declares, "Likewise also, as it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be; the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." Luke xvii. 26, 28-30. We all know how wicked and disbelieving the people were in the days of Noah and Lot; how scoffing, how worldly, and just as it was in those days, as respects the state of the world, so shall it be in the last days. That there will be but little genuine faith on the earth, is more than intimated in these words of our Savior, "Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke xviii. 8.

Therefore we have good reason, as well as Scripture to confirm us in the belief, that when Christ comes there will be but a small number, when compared to that great body which do make a profession of religion, that will be found ready and waiting for, and earnestly desiring his return. Only here and there will be found one having on the wedding garment of righteousness and loving the Lord's appearing.

The great majority will be so absorbed in the vain, trifling things of this world, as to let the tokens of his swift approach pass by unheeded, and scoff at those who have their eyes open to see the swift approaching end of all things, and that the Judge standeth before the door. James v. 9.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—You will find enclosed one dollar to apply on my subscription. I expected to have paid up before now, but when we came up here we had lost about all we had and it takes a long time to catch up.

I would like to say a few words through THE RESTITUTION, but, as I have sent two or three communications and they have not appeared, I concluded they are not publishable. I have had much thought of late upon the words of the Apostle Paul in 1 Cor. xv. 50. "Now this I say brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." I am satisfied that these words are very much misapprehended by the brethren. One writer in the last paper speaking of our future body says: It is a spiritual body and not one of flesh and blood. Now can it not be a spiritual body and yet be composed of flesh and blood? Does the Apostle say anything about putting off flesh and blood? No, not a word, but he says, "this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal put on immortality." Now what is this corruptible and this mortal but our body which is composed of flesh and blood. But it is said that Christ shed his blood, and therefore he had no blood in his veins after his resurrection. True, Christ did shed his his blood, but does this prove that there was no blood left in his body which saw no corruption? He also gave his flesh for the life of the world, but does this prove that his body was not composed of flesh after he was raised from the dead? For as much then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same and lived a life of perfect righteousness in the flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh; hence flesh and blood is not condemned in him because his blood cleanseth us from all sin. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh (or after sin in the flesh) but after the spirit."

Then the question is not of inhabiting the kingdom of God, but of inheriting, and I understand there is quite a difference in all courts of law between the two, and no judge would try a case of inhabiting by the law of inheritance, and the Apostle intended to prove that we could not inherit the kingdom through our flesh and blood relationship, because the inheritance had been lost by the first Adam, through sin in the flesh, but had been reclaimed by Christ, the second Adam, through righteousness in the flesh by him, and we must become related to him by the spirit through the gospel. But the subject is too large and too deep for me to say more at this time.

I was glad to see you touch upon it in THE RESTITUTION of September 3, and would like to see more from your pen upon the same. I must say a word in commendation of the last RESTITUTION, as my daughter said after she had read it, there are a good many good letters in this paper. Yes that is what we want, a good many good letters, if they are short, and not a few long ones upon dry bone subjects. I received a letter from a Brother Paris, from Plymouth, who was in this state and thought perhaps he would come up to this place, but have not seen him. I would like to visit and meet with the brethren at and around Plymouth, and Argos once more. I received a very pleasant visit from Brother Southwick, who is visiting in this state, and would like to see any others that may be coming this way. Please say that I am at Gale's carriage manufactury, Second Avenue North, between 1 & 2 streets' Minneapolis, Minn. Yours in hope, THOS. WRIGHT.

Editor Restitution:—I saw in the last RESTITUTION that the paper would be discontinued to those that are in arrears. I think it a good thing too, for I think there is but very few that take the paper but what could spare two dollars some time in the course of the year.

If there are some that could not, us contributors ought to pay enough extra to send them the paper. Please enclosed find $2.00 to renew my subscription; will try and send $1.00 to the relief fund soon.

Editor Restitution:—My subscription has expired, and as I like the paper, and have a dollar to spare, inclosed find, and so continue it. At the expiration of six months I hope to be able to send another. I am an Adventist, and am taking the Bible Banner, the World's Crisis, the Christian, and Journal, and so as the Apostle says prove all things, hold fast to that which is good. THE RESTITUTION is good, send it on. Yours in hope of life when Jesus comes.

Editor Restitution:—Thanks for the extra copies you have sent me from time to time. I am scattering them out among the people where they never heard of such a paper before. They seem to receive it gladly. I have no trouble to get them to take a copy and could give away more if I had them, I am sowing the seed of the kingdom as best I can, hoping to reap the harvest before long. Oh may the King soon come in his beauty and set all things right. Your brother in the one faith,

S. T. HOOK.

Editor Restitution:—Dear brother in the gospel faith, you have been very patient with me to send me THE RESTITUTION thus far without hearing from me. There has been various reasons for my not writing—poor health, large family and not the money. I have kept waiting, thinking I might get the money, but cannot send any yet, but want my paper still sent if you can wait a little longer, and I will send you some money as soon as I can. I like the paper and will not do without it if I can pay for it. We have no preaching here, and I feel in need of all the help I can get. It is but four years since I first began to learn these truths; have not heard but very few sermons, but through what I have heard and reading, I have learned more in those four years than all my life before. I am thankful that God, in his goodness, has blessed me in knowing those things.

Yours in the One Faith,

Editor Restitution:—I thought I would write you a few lines to let you know I have returned from Minnesota, and am quite well, except being troubled with the rheumatism in one of my knees. I had a good time; went to Minneapolis; attended two meetings; preaching by Brother Burzell, and had the pleasure of seeing two intelligent believers baptized into the Christ. It filled my heart with joy and gladness, and when I look forward a little to that bright morn, when they, who have obeyed from the heart, that form of doctrine which has been delivered to them by good old Brother Paul, and others, will come forth from their dusty beds with shouts of redeeming grace and dying love. We shall more fully realize the import of the language: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." John iii. 16, 17, 18.

I think Minneapolis would be a good point to start a new field of labor as there are about 55,000 inhabitants in that city, and no one but Brother Burzell to preach the glad tidings of the kingdom. The Adventists have a small meeting house, and they appear to be a kind hearted, honest set of people. It might be that, with a little instruction, they would embrace the gospel; at any rate, there is a great field for labor in Minnesota, but it wants somebody that is smart enough to remove every objection that may be brought to bear against the plain teachings of the word of God. I feel, for my part, quite incompetent for the task, but I will ever pray the Lord to send out such laborers as will rightly divide the word of truth. I hope, dear brother, you will continue to persevere in your high calling, and, at last receive a crown of life. My address will be, after this, Busseyville, Wisconsin.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Begin with modesty, if you would end with honor.

Leisure, liberty and will to enjoy spiritual things, are three great favors.

The world now is waiting the harvest tide;
But reapers are few, and the work is great,
And much will be lost should the harvest wait."

"TILL HE COME."

"Till He come"—O let the words
Linger on the trembling chords;
Let the little while between
In their golden light be seen;
Let us think how heaven and home
Lie beyond that—"Till He come."

A ship on the broad, boisterous sea, and open ocean needeth no pilot. But it dare not venture alone on the placid bosom of a little river, lest it be wrecked by some hidden rock. Thus it is with life. 'Tis not in our open, exposed deeds that we so much need the still voice of the silent monitor, as in the small, secret, everyday acts of our life.

Bethune: When the mind, like a pure, calm lake, reflects back the light which is shed from heaven, the image of God is upon it commensurate with its capacity, for the tiniest drop of dew images forth the true, though not the full radiance of the sun.

SOON.

I know not if He come at eve,
Or night, or noon; or soon;
I know the hedge of twilight grey,
That fans the cheek of dying day,
Doth ever whisper—soon!

Kind words have done more to elevate man than science or art, and to preserve them from sin, than prisons or gibbets. They are the language of heaven's own children, who, having received mercy, have learned to be merciful.

Do not look for wrong or guile,
You will find them if you do;
As you measure to your neighbor,
He will measure back to you.
Look for goodness, look for gladness,
You will meet them all the while,
If you bring a smiling visage
To the glass, you meet a smile.

What plant would thrive if the sun shone forever? and what should we be if the sun of prosperity always shone upon our pathway? Along life's dusty thoroughfare I see the world, but not as I saw it once; sickness and sorrow have given me another pair of eyes.

Gentle breezes, balmy breezes, there is vigor in your breath,
But ye cannot bring life roses to the faded cheeks of death!

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the investestigation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Glorious Consummation.—No. 2.

I will come again. John xiv. 3.

The Bible teaches that, when Christ shall come, people will be crying, "peace and safety," putting the great day far from them, promising themselves many years of peace and happiness. But, alas! they are fearfully deceiving themselves. Upon them the day of the Lord shall come "as a destruction from the Almighty." Isa. xiii. 6-9. "Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty. Therefore shall all hands be faint, and every man's heart shall melt: and they shall be afraid: pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth. Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it."

Notwithstanding the many tokens which the Savior declared should precede his coming, the great mass of mankind will be taken terribly by surprise. "As a snare" shall it come on them, are the words of our Savior. Paul tells us that, when they shall cry "peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh on them, and they shall not escape." Luke xxi. 35; 1 Thess. v. 3. So sudden and unexpected will be the coming of the Lord, that when the children of men least expect or look for it, he will make his appearance in the clouds of heaven, and strike their rebellious hearts with awful terror, and sorrow, and pangs.

But the day of the Lord will not come unawares upon his obedient children. If they will observe the signs of the times, and study the good Book carefully, that day will not take them by surprise, as they will be constantly looking for it, expecting it at any moment. Unto the wise it is given to understand, and to know the near proximity of the kingdom of God. This assertion can be abundantly proved by Holy Scripture.

Paul tells us that we are children of light and not of darkness, and, therefore, that day need not come upon us unawares. 1 Thess. 5. The children of light ought to know more about the Lord's return than the children of darkness, and, indeed, do know more about it, or the Bible is not true. How solemnly and how lovingly did our Savior warn us to be found in a state of readiness, that that day should not come upon us unawares. Therefore, there will be no excuse for those who make no preparation, for the warning is given, and if they do not take heed to it, they alone will be held responsible.

Our best friend charges us, "take heed unto yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness and cares of this life and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all those that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all those things which are coming on the earth, and to stand before the Son of Man." Luke xxi. 34-36. To stand before the Son of Man without fear, without feeling any weight of guilt, oh! how great a privilege.

We shall have need of boldness in the day of judgment, and if we are not strictly obedient to God in this world, how are we going to obtain boldness? Those who have respect to all the Lord's commandments can stand before him without fear, having none to accuse or condemn them. But those who rebel and fight against God may well tremble and fear. What a privilege it will be in the great and terrible day of the Lord to have him for our friend, to shield and protect us. What an indescribable thrill of joy it will send through us to hear the welcome applaud, "Well done, good and faithful servant," and hear the glorious invitation, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." And what an awful doom will be the sinners, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire." Reader, prepare to meet thy God. Heed the commands "watch," "take heed," "be ready," for they are no idle words, and it will make a difference if we do not obey them, for the Lord says so.

In Rev. xvi. 15 we have another warning from Christ. "Behold I come as a thief;" and then a blessing, "blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garment,"—garments of righteousness—and here another warning, "lest he walk naked (destitute of his garments of righteousness) and they see his shame." Many will be found when Christ comes, walking without their garments of righteousness, and will be ashamed before him. Oh! how sad! Reader, don't put off your garments of righteousness.

Notwithstanding the warnings they have received, the children of God crying aloud to warn them of coming judgment, the world will not notice the approach of the Son of Man. But all their unbelief and all that they can do, will not prevent the coming of the Lord. Peter said that, "in the last days scoffers should come, saying, where is the promise of his coming?" and they are here, repeating almost the precise words Peter writes. But did Peter teach that their unbelief would keep the Lord away? Oh, no. He says: The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. 2 Pet. iii. 10.

The day of the Lord will surely come in spite of scoffers and unbelievers; but woe unto them! The unbelievers will prosecute their worldly designs and make calculations for the improvement of the world. The wisdom of the world is now great, but is continually increasing. One new invention has succeeded another, and, perhaps, will until the end of time, until the world will, by the wisdom of men be rendered highly convenient for the comfort and gratification of the human race. Putting the end far from them, declaring that it never will come, they realize not that the world has grown old and judgment is near.

In the midst of their vain glory and earthly splendor, and that all upon a sudden, what a sight shall be beheld by mortal eyes! Tongue cannot tell nor language describe. Heaven shall be opened and the sign of the Son of Man shall appear. This will be a most wonderful revelation to the human eye. Oh, how great! how terrible the sight! Truly, will not all the tribes of the earth mourn and their hearts fail them for fear?

Whenever this opening is seen in the heavens, then will Jesus, the great King, the Redeemer's Lord, appear "with power and great glory." So says the Word of God. John, the beloved disciple, was favored with a revelation of those wonderful events, and has recorded the same for the benefit of the human family. Read Rev. xix. 11-16.

"And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called faithful and true, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; and his name is called the Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings and Lord of lords."

Oh! the glorious and beautiful appearance of the Lord Jesus Christ, followed by the armies of heaven, all seated upon white horses and clothed with fine raiment. Such a sight has never been witnessed by the human eye, but will some day be witnessed. It will be a glorious sight to the faithful, but awful to the disobedient. And this is to be a reality, it is no fable, as some may believe. The faithful ones expect soon to see the King in all his beauty. Let all be ready.

The Savior will one day be revealed from heaven. Coupled with his coming will be the resurrection of his dead saints and translation of the living ones. He will gather his living saints from every quarter of the earth, and raise his dead ones from their dusty beds. When Christ, with his shining armies, shall appear in the clouds of heaven, then it is that the trump of God shall be sounded.

So great will be the sound that it shall be heard all over the world, and it will be a token for the collection of the saints. The angels will be employed in the gathering of the saints as Christ tells us. "And he shall send his angels with the great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds," Matt. xxiv. 31. And the great sound of a trumpet shall rouse the sleeping dead, who shall rise to meet the Lord in the air.

Paul has written of this event as follows: "Behold, I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trump shall sound and the dead shall be raised and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52. And again; "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the tramp of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." 1 Thess. iv. 14-18.

And what words of comfort these are. Oh, why do not Christians comfort one another more with these words? Reader, do you believe Jesus is coming? He is coming beyond doubt. He has promised to come, "I will come again." This promise remains to be fulfilled. The coming of Christ will complete the grand redemptive plan. Let us rejoice that God has given us such precious promises of a glorious reward, "when Christ who is our life shall appear." Col. iii. 4.

While we wait for the Master's return let us not be idle, let us not forget his commands and warnings. He has told us in the parable of the Nobleman (Luke xix. 12) to occupy till he comes, and he has told us to improve on the talents given us until he comes to reckon and see how many talents each one has gained. Then, when he comes, will be the day of reckoning. Then the profitable servants will be rewarded and the unprofitable cast into outer darkness. He is the appointed judge of mankind.

When Jesus comes he brings his reward with him. "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." Rev. xxii. 12. "His reward is with him and his work is before him," says the prophet Isaiah. When he comes the saints will enter upon that glorious reward for which they have waited so long, but until then they must wait. Then the weary pilgrims will be forever at rest. "Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty. In his presence there is fulness of joy forevermore," says the Bible.

The only hope of the church in the second advent of Christ. All the shining purposes of God depend upon the fulfillment of the glorious promise to come again. The saints will never be glorified and rewarded till he comes in his resurrection and transiting power. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, (then, and not till then) ye shall also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 4. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John iii. 2. And when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 1 Pet. v. 4. These verses settle the point that we must wait till his coming for reward.

He is coming to judge the human race. John, in vision saw the judgment scene, the judgment throne, the judge seated on his throne. "And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the heaven and the earth fled away, and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened." Read the passages for yourself. Rev. xx. 11-15. "The Father judgeth no man but hath committed all judgment to the Son." John v. 22. Jesus then will be the judge, and by his words we shall be judged. "The word I have spoken, the same shall judge you in the last day." John xii. 48.

He is coming to deliver creation from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. "Behold I make all things new. And I John saw a new heaven and a new earth for the first were passed away." Rev. xxi. 1, 5. "Behold I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create." Isa. lxv. 17, 18. What a glorious home will be that of the saints.

The church has waited long her absent Lord to see, but he has not forgotten his promise to her. He will come and bring joy and comfort to her waiting heart. Habakkuk prayed, "Oh, that thou wouldst rend the heavens, that thou wouldst come down." The martyr cry was, "How long?" The cry of every saint of God to-day is,—

How long, oh, Lord! our Savior,
Will thou remain away?
Our hearts are growing weary
Of thy so long delay.

It is the duty of the waiting church to respond to the promise of Christ, "Surely I come quickly," in these words, "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Rev. xxii. 20. It may seem a long time to the waiting church, but he will come at last and bring her a glorious reward. His promises are true. His word is settled in heaven. His promise has not yet been fulfilled, "I will come again." But it will ere long. Then watch, for "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time." Heb. ix. 28.

He is coming. Watch and be ready. For it was those that were ready that went into the marriage supper represented in Matt. xxv., and those that were not ready were shut out. When Jesus comes, the marriage supper of the Lamb, spoken of in Rev. xix., will be celebrated. That will be a grand and glorious occasion. Some will be shut out from the marriage chamber, but those who are ready will be admitted. What a glorious privilege. Jesus says, "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." Rev. xix. 9. Much more might be written on the coming of Jesus, for it is a glorious subject; but here I will stop, reminding the reader of the words of Jesus, "What I say unto you I say unto ALL, WATCH." Mark xiii. 37.

The Savior has promised quickly to come,
But no more as the babe of the stall;
Coming in glory and honor and might,
He's coming Redeemer and Lord of all.
Are you willing to wait, ready to go?
Perfectly resigned to his will?
For Jesus the Savior loves you so,
Though unworthy he loves you still.

Suicides in the higher ranks of the German army are becoming painfully frequent, a noble young officer at Potsdam having the other day added his name to the list of those who within the last few months, from stress of circumstances peculiar to their position, have incurred a verdict of felo de-se. From official statistics just published it appears that the number of suicides in Prussia since 1874 has gone on increasing to an alarming extent. Whereas in that year 2,828 of such cases occurred, the list in 1877 showed a total of 4,330, divided between 3,559 males and 771 females.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find an a item clipped from The Christian Secretary, a Baptist paper, published in Hartford, Conn. I thought it might be interesting to the readers of THE RESTITUTION, as setting forth the claims of popery. Bearing upon the same subject, I also send a few extracts from "The Faith of Our Fathers," a work written by James Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore.

"Now, the Scriptures alone do not contain all the truth which a Christian is bound to believe, nor do they explicitly enjoin all the duties which he is obliged to practice..... The Catholic church correctly teaches, that our Lord and his apostles inculcated certain important duties of religion, which are not recorded by the inspired writers. For instance, most Christians pray to the Holy Ghost, a practice which is nowhere found in the Bible. We must, therefore, conclude that the Scriptures alone cannot be a sufficient guide and rule of faith, because they cannot, at any time, be within the reach of every inquirer; because they are not of themselves clear and intelligible, even in matters of the highest importance, and, because they do not contain all the truths necessary to salvation. Page 111..... The Pope, therefore, be it known, is not the maker of divine law; he is only its expounder. He is not the author of revelation, but only its interpreter. .... In a word, the sovereign pontiff is to the church, though in a more eminent degree, what the chief justice is to the United States. .... The chief justice, with his associate judges, examines into the case and then pronounces judgment upon it; and this decision is final, irrevocable, and practically infallible." Pages 148, 149.

"To sum up in one sentence the titles of a Catholic priest, he is a king, reigning not over unwilling subjects, but over the hearts and affections of his people. He is a shepherd, because he leads his flock into the delicious pastures of the sacraments, and shelters them from the wolves that lie in wait for their souls. He is a father, because he breaks the bread of life to his spiritual children, whom he has begotten in Jesus Christ through the gospel. He is a judge, whose office it is to pass sentence of pardon upon self-accusing criminals. He is a physician, because he heals their souls from the loathsome distempers of sin." Pages 144-5.

We take, as reported in the daily papers, the following passage from Bishop Healy's sermon at the consecration of the Hartford diocesan. Notice the statements, "the priest is another Christ;" "the bishop is the representative of God himself." "This man commands not merely devils but God himself." Compare such claims as these with what the apostle says of the Man of Sin who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." 2 Thess. ii. 3, 4.

But there is one superior to the simple Christian, one not so much the object of miracles as the worker of the most wonderful miracles of God. Consider that Christ went about doing good, conferring miracles on the suffering—the greater part miracles upon the body, the better to attract the attention and the faith of those who saw him. He bestowed wonderful power on his disciples; even the devils were subject to them. He promised them that they should do greater miracles than he had ever done.

And to the priesthood he has given this power. Kings and Princes must bow before its authority. The priest is the representative of Christ Sacerdos Alter Christus. The priest is another Christ. What he does on earth is confirmed in heaven. To this chosen delegate of the Lord is given the power to forgive sin, and what he absolves here is absolved on high.

The priest exerts an authority compared to which that of the early disciples seems to be almost nothing. This man commands not merely devils, but God himself who descends upon the altar. Who can estimate the dignity of the priesthood? Recently over the seas there has been a bloodless but cruel persecution against the priesthood because they claim an authority beyond this world and reaching even to heaven. They rule the souls, others the bodies. The priest is an angel of God, an ambassador, occupying a middle place between God and man. Consider lest you should judge us too severely. There must be an angelic life. We bear the mysteries of God. We are the consorts of angels, and our lives should be worthy of the dignity we bear. The priest represents none other than Christ himself. What can be beyond that? Yet there is another glory and dignity conferred upon men, which are not recorded by the inspired writers. For instance, most Christians pray to the Holy Ghost, a practice which is nowhere found in the Bible. Pleasantries.

Mrs. Partington, in illustration of the proverb, "A soft answer turneth away wrath," says that "it is better to speak paragorically of a person than to be all the time singing epitraphs."

The Boston Transcript gives the following account of the origin of a word: A great many years ago, a poor beggar explained his ragged appearance by observing: "I have no money to buy new clothing, and mend I can't." And his class have been called mendicants ever since.

A remarkable instance of a prompt proposal and a prompt acceptance was that of the Puritan who rode up to the door of the house where dwelt the young woman of his choice, and having desired her to be called out to him, said, without circumlocution: "Rachel, the Lord has sent me here to marry thee," when the young woman answered with equal readiness, "The Lord's will be done"

A Western paper thinks Dean Stanley was not equal to the occasion when he performed the marriage service for Prof. Tyndall. Instead of the usual formula he should have asked the groom: "Do you take this anthropoid to be your co-ordinate, to love with your nerve centers, to cherish with your whole cellular tissue, until a final molecular disturbance shall resolve its organism into its primitive atoms?"

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 8, 1879.

A SEVERE cold has nearly prostrated us for a few days past, and we truly make up this paper under difficulties. For many words of encouragement, and for substantial aid for the paper, we most heartily thank our friends. Numbers of our brethren are paying arrearages and continuing their subscriptions with expressions of gratitude that the paper has been sent through the hard times. We can only say that we need the help of all. We entreat all lovers of the truth to stand by the cause and our loving Lord will stand by them.

Four Sore Judgments.

So will I send upon you famine and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee, and I will bring the sword upon thee. I the Lord have spoken it, Ezek. v. 17.

For the last few years the world has been severely smitten with these plagues that the prophet once so sternly denounced against Jerusalem and the land of Israel. The record of war for the last twenty years is terrible. During this time nearly all the powerful nations of the earth have been engaged in pouring out blood like water while reaping a harvest of death with the sword. Famine, too, has stricken down its millions in China, India, Persia, Brazil, and Northern Africa. Then the pestilence has "walked in darkness and wasted at noon-day" in the four quarters of the globe. And finally the "noisome beasts" have proved a scourge in different lands. The grass-hopper plague in our own country, the Colorado beetle, and many destructive insects, that were unknown to our fathers, waste the herbage, the grain, the fruit, the vine, and the esculent roots. Our brevities will specify some particulars showing that evil beasts and serpents are direful pests in certain localities. And, alas, prophecy assures us that all these evils will become more and more intensified.

"The earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant." It is for these reasons that the curse is devouring the earth. And "destruction upon destruction is cried" by the weeping seer of Israel till ancient chaos for a time almost assumes her dismal throne, over universal desolation. But "although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vine; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

We look for the promised restitution of all things; for a new heaven and a new earth; for the glad time when there shall be no more curse, no more death, no more pain and no more sorrow. We adore God who has promised to make all things new.

The Judgment of the Dead.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.

This passage accounts for all the death that will ever occur in this world. For this law was to have jurisdiction over the race of Adam forever, otherwise it could not appoint all men to death.

The promise of the seed that was to bruise the serpent's head was made before the appointment to death was given; therefore this punishment is the punishment under the gospel arrangement. It is the first punishment under the gospel. It is only one punishment, and it is complete and final. It can never be increased or repealed without destroying the law that appointed it. It can never be superseded by any other law, for it was to continue forever. God's judgment as expressed in this law, is true and righteous altogether. It is unimprovable. God cannot deny himself! He cannot alter the thing that has gone out of his mouth. This one death is the whole punishment for sin under the gospel. It is the wages of sin—the end of sin. It is to die so as not to live, and return to dust. When men have died once and returned to dust, the law which appointed all men to death has no further demand upon them. If no provision had been made in the gospel to save men from death, no further notice would have been taken of the dead. There would have been no need of the judgment of the dead.

But "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him might not not perish, (finally, as he otherwise would have done,) but have everlasting life" by being raised up at the last day. Christ did not come to condemn the world to another punishment, but to save it from the punishment already passed upon it. He came to give life to all who should become worthy of the resurrection from the dead.

This offer of life from the dead to those who believe in Christ, removes the certainty that the death which has passed upon all men, will be final to all. It puts those to whom this offer is made on a new trial, or probation. The object of this trial is not to escape an additional punishment, but to secure life from the dead. Not that we may not die, but that we may be redeemed from death. "He that believeth on the son shall not perish but shall have everlasting life, and be raised up at the last day."

Under this offer of life from the dead, men have lived and died. Some have complied with the conditions of the resurrection, and some have not. They all lie promiscuously in the grave and their worthiness, or unworthiness is not known. This condition of the dead, and the promise "I will raise him up at the last day," render it necessary that the dead should be judged in order to determine who is worthy of a resurrection. I will now show

1. That the dead will be judged.

"And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be judge of the living and the dead," Acts x. 42. The living are one class to be judged, and the dead are another class to be judged.

Again, "I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the living and the dead at his appearing and kingdom," 2 Tim. iv. 1. Here are the same two classes to be judged. And in Rev. xi. 18, the same fact is stated again. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time that the dead should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants, the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name small and great." Here are the living nations to be judged, and here are the dead who are first judged and then rewarded. These proofs are sufficient to show that the dead will be judged.

2. The dead will be judged while they are dead.

The conditions upon which life from the dead depend, require this. Christ said, "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all that he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day. That everyone that believeth on the Son may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. That everyone that cometh to me shall be raised up at the last day. And that whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood may have eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

The being raised up at the last day depends on the following conditions: He must be Christ's; he must believe in him; he must have come to Christ, and he must eat the flesh of the son of God, and drink his blood, that he may raised up at the last day. If these conditions have not been complied with, he will not be raised up at the last day. It is to determine who have complied with these conditions, and who in this way have become worthy to live again, that the dead must be judged. The judgment must precede the resurrection of the dead, or there can be no resurrection, for it is only such as are found worthy of it, that are to be raised up at the last day. The judgment of the dead is in order to the resurrection, and not the resurrection in order to the judgment.

If the spirit of God dwell in us while we live, our mortal bodies will be quickened. If we have the first fruits of the spirit our bodies will be redeemed. If we have been planted in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. If we strive to attain unto the resurrection as Paul did, we shall attain unto it. If our conversation is in heaven from whence we look for the Savior, our vile bodies will be fashioned like unto his glorious body. If we sleep in Christ, we shall be raised from the dead as he was. If we are dead in Christ we shall be raised up. If we are included in the harvest, of which Christ is the first fruits, we shall be made alive at his coming. If we are found worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead, we shall be made like the angels, so that we can die no more.

These assurances of being raised from the dead all depend on the conditions specified, and all others will be excluded. The judgment of the dead determines who have complied with these conditions, and their resurrection is the result of the award of this judgment.

The decisions of this judgment will be according to the conditions of our probation. The Savior said, "The words which I have spoken shall judge you in the last day." "He that believeth on me shall have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. And he that believeth not on me shall perish, he shall not see life, but the wrath of God shall abide on him."

That the dead, then, will be judged previous to the resurrection of the dead is an unavoidable conclusion.

3. The award of the judgment of the dead.

The time to judge the dead will come. The Lord, the righteous judge, will come from heaven. He will stop in the region of the clouds; and while there, he will judge the dead.

We may know what the awards of this judgment are, by such Scriptures as these. The words that I have spoken, the same shall judge the dead at the last day. Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob and those like them will be made alive, because God is their God, for God is not the God of the dead but of the living, but those that are not like Abraham and Isaac and Jacob will not be made alive because God is not their God. Job, and those that are like him, will be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the dead in Christ will be raised incorruptible; but they that were in honor and understood not, have died as the beasts die, they shall never see light, like sheep they are laid in the grave. David, and those like him, will be redeemed from the power of the grave, but those who have wandered out of the way of understanding, shall remain in the congregation of the dead. The Lord is the God of his people whether they are dead or alive. His dead men shall live, together with his dead body shall they arise; but those who are not his people are dead, they shall not live, they are deceased, they shall not rise. Daniel wrote of one class who will have everlasting life, and of another that will have shame, and everlasting contempt, but not life. Those who have believed in the Son of Man, will not perish, but have everlasting life and be raised up at the last day; but those who have not believed in him will not have life but the wrath of God (which is death) will continue to abide on them. The dead who have done good, will have life, but the dead who have done evil will not have life but damnation. They are already condemned to abide under the wrath of God. At the last trump the dead in Christ will be raised from the dead; but the dead out of Christ will not be made alive. The dead (not the living) will be judged out of the books, and those whose names are found written in the book of life will be made alive, and those of the dead whose names are not found written in the book of life will not be made alive, but be cast into the lake of fire, as death and hell were, and as the beast, and the false prophet and the devil were. The just and the unjust will be judged in this judgment. To the one class will be awarded life from the dead, to the other, that they shall not see life, but that the wrath of God will continue to abide on them.

Thus, the awards of this judgment are distinctly made known. They are variously described, but they are the same awards. Life from the dead to one class, and not to see life to the other.

Although much of this testimony is implied, yet it is just as obviously the sense of the language used, as if that which is implied had been fully expressed. The implied sense is unavoidable. This judgment is in perfect agreement with the penalty of the law, "Thou shalt surely die," and with the punishment under the gospel, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." It is also in harmony with the general tenor of the Bible on the subject, and with its positive, as well as its implied testimony. It also agrees with the promises of life in the gospel. This harmony is complete. Not a jarring text to be found when explained in the light of the judgment of the dead.

This judgment settles the destinies of the world that has passed away. Then will begin the judgment of the living world.

I will answer objections to this view in my next.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

"The Second Death."

This phrase occurs four times. Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6-14; xxi. 8. It occurs in the most profound relations to the resurrection, and the closing scenes of judgment and the perdition of ungodly men.

1. If "the first resurrection—the resurrection of the just," is to be a reality, if "the perdition of ungodly men" is an expression of the truth, then the phrase "the second death" should also be accepted as the accurate and appropriate expression of the doom of the "condemned." John iii. 19-21; v. 29; 2 Pet. ii. 9; Matt. xiii. 47-50. "This is the condemnation," they hate the light, tread under foot the Son of God and count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing. "For where much is given, much is required." Luke xii. 48; Heb. x. 29-30.

The most impressive motives, addressed to both hope and fear, are employed to arrest our attention and constrain us to repentance, faith and a holy life.

But all the realities in the taking away of the sin of the world, and filling it with the knowledge and blessing of God, constrain me to look for something determinate in this terrible phrase. Yet, most teachers seem content to take anything they happen to have heard and call it "a mystery, a symbolic doom, or a hopeless death"—anything obscure that the untaught will take.

Let us, then, clear the way to the simple and unmistakable import of its terms.

2. There are (as primary divisions) two Adams, two begettings, two births, two covenants, two Jerusalem's, two kingdoms and two worlds. In harmony with these, Jacob would be buried with his fathers in the Machpelah cave, where Abraham and the primal patriarchs then lay. Gen. xlix, 30-32; Heb. xi. 13, 35.

They would "put off the old man" and be ready by faith to "put on the new," at the better—the first resurrection—into the likeness of the heavenly. 1 Cor. xv. 45-47.

3. It is the habit of the philosophic world to regard the life, which is the secondary sense of the word soul—as the man proper—a spirit man, that survives death. But, no one of that class seems to have reflected on the bearing of that idea. For if it could be true it would prove too much.

Thus, if the life of man be such an immortal man, then the life of an angel should be a higher and more celestial angel, and the life of other living creatures (Hebrew, living souls) would be a corresponding spiritual being! For the Creator is the "God of the spirits of all flesh." Hence, it is sheer assumption to assert this of man. The notion confounds the primal truth that, "The first man, Adam, was made a living soul," Gen. ii. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 45, and "the last Adam (the second man) a quickening spirit." (Of course, both need a spirit here, are organized personalities—Adam the head of our mortal age and race—Jesus the head of the world to come, Heb. ii. 5; Isa. ix. 6; the everlasting Father, Eph. i. 10).

Then, how does the philosophic notion of life confound God's primal truth? I reply: It makes one man too many at every stage, and a race without a father, utterly unknown to the gospel. That is, to say, there is no third in the series, no third begetting or birth, no third city, covenant or world, in this range of truth. The Bible recognizes only "the old and the new." Therefore, the life of man, is to man what "the spirit of life" is to other orders of God's creatures, animal and angelic above or below him in the scale of being, "each after its kind."

4. We may now reach the import of the terms in our phrase, "the second death." We read, Rom. v. 12; Heb. ix. 27, "by one man (Adam) sin entered into the world and death by sin. It is appointed unto men once to die and after this the judgment, death hath passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."

But "God who is rich in mercy," hath found a ransom, and Jesus hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light by the resurrection. Hence, there is hope for man and restitution for earth. He who caused all creatures to live and come under Adam, Gen. i. 26, can reorganize all creaturehood under Christ, "the second man, the Lord from heaven," Eph. i. 10; Matt. xix. 28.

There can be no number between the first and the second. There is "no man" intervening between "the first man Adam" (as head of our race) and the second—the last—Christ. The gospel knows no third one. The application is easy. Sin, under the Adamic law, brought death "once." Heb. ix. 27. So, a rejection of God's remedy, incurs "condemnation." To this doom they are to be raised, (anastasis, while the just have anastasis to life). John iii. 16-21; v. 29; Acts xxiv. 14; 2 Pet. ii. 9.

There can be no first in a series except as it is followed by the second, so there can be no second except as it "follows next after the first." Let us note its origin. "Second, secundus from sequo—I follow the next after the first—that immediately following the first." Hence, in the nature of things, and from the primal laws of language, "the second death" must follow the first and belong to that series or class of events. If the first death be personal and real, involving the loss of the present Adamic life with more or less of distress, so will the second death be the loss of life associated with hope. It will be a hopeless death, indeed, because there is no other sacrifice or resurrection of life beyond.

Brother Myers may be reminded of "the gospel preached before to Abraham." (Gal. iii. 8. That opened "the only hope and the inheritance of the saints," and, of course, they glimpsed "the hopeless death—the end of the wicked." Psa. xxxvii.

Brother Magruder has written well on this point. (My copy of his article I can't find to refresh my convictions).

The essential point in grasping the doctrine of the text, is to get the import of the words. We see the depth of the phrase "once to die," out of life given to the race of Adam. Well, as we have "the gospel of life"—the gospel of Christ—the second man—the head of the world to come, we may see "the condemnation" for hating the light. John iii. 19. The resurrection to this condemnation (same word) John v. 29, and thus reach the necessary place and import of "the second death!" It seems a miserable dying out of hope and the only life that the gospel gives in Christ for the world to come.

There is but one dying—one death, that ends our life as derived from Adam. It follows, logically and scripturally, that "the second death" is the doom that awaits the unjust. They are reserved to the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Pet. ii. 1-9. They are then severed from among the just. Matt. xiii. 49. They are raised (anastasis) to that doom, John iii. 29; v. 29, and, hence, they "die the second death." Let all give the trumpet a certain sound, and all take warning and escape that final hopeless doom! There is in the gospel enough and to spare. Come to the feast and live.

Your poor brother, rejoicing in hope of life everlasting, and the divine welcome to the wisdom and wealth of the world to come. JOHN.

Conference Report.

The members of the church of God met on Friday, Sept. 19, at 4 o'clock, at the Hasty school house, on Little Brushey, in Montague county, Texas, as previous notice was given in THE RESTITUTION. Brief but interesting remarks were delivered by the following brethren: Thomas Doye, Thomas Greenstreet and J. L. Long. Meeting then adjourned until morning.

Saturday, the 20th, at 9:30 the meeting was called to order, and the church being in an unorganized condition the first business was to organize the church in working order, so the following officers were chosen to take the oversight: William Boon and W. L. Popejoy, were chosen Elders and William Moore and Thomas Gower were chosen Deacons. The next business was to organize in conference capacity. William Fanlug, was appointed to the chair, and William Boon, W. L. Popejoy and B. F. Hodges, were chosen as committee of arrangements, and B. F. Hodges was to act as secretary, after which, Bro. Greenstreet arose and gave an interesting discourse on Christian duties. Then adjourned until two o'clock.

At 2 o'clock the church was called to order by the chairman. Bro. Long took the stand and preached from Luke xv, and made his discourse altogether interesting, showing the return of the prodigal son. Then the meeting adjourned to come together at 10 o'clock on the morrow.

Sunday the 21st, by 10 o'clock, there was a large assembly on the ground, and the meeting was called to order by the chairman. Bro. James Bodine having arrived at that time, the services for the day were divided so that all the preaching brethren were to preach in turn as follows: Thomas Doyl, Bro. Thomas Greenstreet, morning service. After recess and dinner, Bro. Bodine, next Bro. Long, and at 4 o'clock the Lord's supper was administered; so the time was fully occupied and everyone looked as though they were glad to be there. Then the meeting adjourned until 10 o'clock Monday.

Monday the 22d, by 10 o'clock there was a good assembly on the ground. The conference was called to order by the chairman, and the business of the conference was taken up. Brethren Thomas Greenstreet, Thomas Doyl, J. L. Long, and James Bodine, were set apart as traveling Evangelists. Then, by request, Bro. Greenstreet arose and deliver. d an able discourse from 1 Thess. 4, 5, and concluded by Bro. Doyl. Then adjourned for dinner.

Between 1 and 2 o'clock everyone got ready for the water to witness the baptism. The distance was about eight miles, over hills and valleys, and the train of wagons and horsemen between a quarter and a half mile long, filled the writer with joy and gladness to see the progress of God's word spreading in this western country, and to look back just a few years and think that the very land and country where we have been holding these meetings, was visited every month by the hostile tribes of Indians, scalping women and children. Having arrived on the banks of Big Sandy, after a few appropriate remarks, there were eighteen obedient souls went down into the watery grave and rose to walk in newness of life.

Thus ended one of the most glorious meetings that has ever been witnessed by the children of God in this western country.

THE ADVANCE ON CABUL.

SIMLA, October 1.—Gen. Sir Fredrick Roberts telegraphs from Kushi that he will advance on Cabul to-day. The health of the troops is good. Lieut. Kinloch, on the way to join his regiment, was ambuscaded and killed. Sir Fredrick Robert's advance guard consists of one cavalry brigade, two guns, two companies of the Seventy-second Infantry, the Fifth Punjaub Infantry and the Twenty-third Pioneers.

TEN THOUSAND RUSSIANS EXILED TO SIBERIA.

LONDON, October 1.—The St. Petersburg Golos says that 11,854 persons were imprisoned in the Central Prison at Moscow during the summer, 10,477 of whom were condemned to exile in Siberia.

DROUTH.

BUCHAREST, October 4.—The drouth continues, and the country is in a fearful state.

THE FAMINE.

LONDON, October 6.—Revolting details of the sufferings of the famine-stricken people still come from Cashmero. There is reason to hope that the worst is over, but undoubtedly the relief measures have been miserably mismanaged by the Maharajah and his advisers, and the loss of life has been terrible.

RUSSIAN HOSTILITY.

LONDON, October 6.—The Russian press make a fresh outburst of hostility against England and Germany. The St. Petersburg Novoe Vremya says: "Sooner or later a war of life and death with England is inevitable. The only question now to be considered is, which is the most available route to Hindoostan."

LONDON, October 3.—A dispatch dated Valparaiso, September 8, says: "It is reported that the Chilians, before evacuating Calama, sacked and burned the place. The Chilians have made raids into Bolivia beyond Conchas Blancas, destroying commissary and ordnance supplies and seizing horses and carts.

DOMESTIC.

A party of United States soldiers was attacked by hostile Indians, on the 20th of September, near Milk river, Col., and the commander and ten of his men were killed, and twenty-five were wounded. At last accounts another attack was anticipated. The loss of the Indians is not stated. The whites lost three-fourths of their animals, Indian supplies, etc.

Thus far the fatalities resulting from the fall of the crowded grand stand on the Adrian (Mich.) fair grounds, Thursday afternoon, number thirteen, and, as far as can be ascertained, the number of injured is 230, the recovery of some of whom is doubtful.

Be Still.

"Be still—be still,' though all should seem Like visions of a troubled dream;
'Be still—be still,' each murmuring thought,
For God is Love, and changes not.

The hand that moves the orbiting scene,
Plans what shall be—as what has been,
That hand is His—it holds thee still:
Calmly submit, and trust His will.

'Be still,' nor doubt His faithful love,
Though He thy faith and patience prove:
He, while He tries thee, through the fire,
Will give thee strength thou dost require.

'Be still,' thy cares are measured all
By Him who notes the sparrow's fall;
There's not a grief which rends thy breast,
But He can chase, or calm to rest.

Trust all to Him—thine every care,
Each burden cast on Him in prayer;
He will give peace, calm every storm,
And all things for His own perform.

'Be still,' for in a little while,
Thou shalt upon yon sorrows smile;
And earth-born aching pang shall cease
In endless joy—in endless peace."

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I was prevented by a somewhat serious injury—from an accidental fall—from being at Salem, Ohio, last Sunday—a week ago—but have sent an appointment to be there (D. V.) on second Sunday in October. I leave home on Thursday next, (if the Lord will,) October 2d, for Port Washington, Ohio, on Saturday, Sunday and Monday next, to meet the brethren there and preach. I shall probably go thence to Salem. If you have sent me to the latter place any sample copies of THE RESTITUTION I shall hope to use them advantageously at that point. Meantime, please send to me, immediately, on receipt of this, thirty cents (enclosed) worth of the "Bible Pearls" assorted, and a few numbers of any recent issues of THE RESTITUTION; address[to care of "Wm. Rennis, (a brother,) Port Washington, Ohio." I hope to be able to procure and forward to you, some subscriptions on this trip.

Wishing you, dear brother, grace, mercy and peace from God, our Father and Jesus Christ, our Lord, I am fraternally and affectionately,

A. B. MAGRUDER.

Nashua, Ia.

Editor Restitution:—My heart's desire and prayer to our heavenly Father is, that THE RESTITUTION, its editor and contributors may live and prosper until our beloved King, the King of saints shall come. Although somewhat advanced in age and declining in health, and poor in this world's goods, and obtain only for which I labor with my hands, I cannot be satisfied unless I can show my love by my works. Although it be small, I intend to do all I can for the cause I love. If my life is spared, will remit on, or before the first of January, for the year 1880. I live where all, with whom I have conversed, do not desire the truth as it is in Jesus.

Yours, striving for a resurrection from among the dead ones, or a quickening when the Lord comes.

JAS. D. CALDER.

Rockville, Kan.

Editor Restitution:—In my sad bereavement I seat myself to let you know that my wife died September 12th, of heart disease and dropsy. She would have been forty-six years old the 10th of September. Her name was Elsie Hubbard. She died in the Abrahamic faith. She sleeps in Jesus. Please find two dollars enclosed, which will pay up to July 1, 1879. I am much obliged to you for waiting on me so long. I will try and do better next time. There are but few of the One Faith here.

Yours, in hope of the resurrection.

CHAUNCY HUBBARD.

Painsville, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:—I do not wish to be troublesome in trying to occupy a small space in your truly valuable paper, but I do desire to be understood. In my article published in THE RESTITUTION of March 20, on the training and government of children, my request was that those who write for THE RESTITUTION would show upon whom God has laid this duty by direct command, and I still make this request, and I hope the brethren and sisters will not ignore the subject. Sister M. Rock ,asked to answer, but she seems not to have understood my request; it was not to know whether the mother has a right to instruct and command her children, but has God by direct command laid this responsibility upon her? If so, will not someone give the readers of THE RESTITUTION the book, chapter, and verse, wherein such command may be found in plain language? I know he has given direct commands to the fathers, some of which may be found in the following scriptures: Eph. vi. 4, "Ye fathers provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Is this not plain? 1 Tim. iii. 4, "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity." Also in verse 12, "Ruling their children and their own houses well." Do not these texts show that the duty rests upon the man? God said of Abraham, "I know him that he will command his children, and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment." Again in Deut. iv. 9, the Lord says, "only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, lest they depart from thy heart, &c., but teach them to thy sons, and thy sons' sons." Chap. vi. 17, "Ye shall diligently keep the commandments of the Lord your God, and his testimonies, and his statutes which he hath commanded thee." And again, Deut. vi. 7—10, "And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." And in Heb. xii. 9, we have proof that the father recognized this duty and performed it: "Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence."

Now, dear friends, in view of these Scriptures, I would solemnly ask why is this great responsibility laid upon the mother? Please give me some good reason for so doing, drawn from the word in a thus saith the Lord.

I have been all my life a chore-going woman, and if my memory serves me rightly I have not heard this duty preached to fathers but once in forty years, from the pulpit, but have heard much eloquence, exhortation, yes, and even much fault-finding too, and of mothers. Now brethren and sisters I hope you will not ignore this subject but show where the Bible authority is for this course. I am glad our beloved paper is taking a more practical turn. But I hope our writers will not get in the habit of sentimentalizing, and give merely vague ideas of Christian duties but the plain declarations of the Scriptures. All the instruction the Christian man or woman needs to guide them to the acceptance of the divine law giver, is plainly laid down in the New Testament by Christ and his Apostles; so we need no speculation or inferences and one positive command ought too, and will be sufficient to insure obedience of the true Christian. Hoping for a hearty response to my request, I am your sister in Christ.

MRS. M. H.

Editor Restitution:—As many of the brethren and sisters of this state are personally acquainted with me, and I can't correspond with all, I am on the eve of starting back to the state of Illinois with my family. The reason is, I can't make a living here. The state is overdone in everything. All trades are at a standstill. The agricultural districts are not profitable to those that work the soil. The good land is owned by capitol. The poor man has no chance at all here. I would say to those, if any contemplate to emigrate here, to not come, if they can live where they are, for their position can't be bettered here. The climate is pleasant and good, and that is all the good I can say of California. I sincerely hope none of the One Faith will become drowned by the cares of this life, that we all may be accounted worthy of eternal life in the kingdom of God.

BREVITIES.

The Sandemanians are a peculiar religious people of Danbury, Conn. They have no pastor or sermons; but in their church is a circular table, around which they sit, on Sundays, and discuss scriptural texts.

Of late wild beasts have appeared in unusual numbers in Russia. In one month ten bears near Burakoff destroyed seven horses, four cows, and several sheep, and such annoyances have occurred in other districts. Even in populous Odessa the police were occupied in chasing a wolf in the open streets.

The discovery has been made near Neuwied, in Germany, of what is supposed to be one of the subterranean stores of the ancient Germans mentioned by Tacitus. It contains charcoal, potsherds of rough description, and remains of bones, and on the lime wall is the drawing of a running horse, apparently scratched with a hard stone and evincing a certain amount of skill.

Of the war waged between man and beast in India the yearly statistics are once more published, and it would seem that during 1877 the slaughter was terrible. Nineteen thousand six hundred and ninety-five people were killed—46 by elephants, 819 by tigers, 200 by leopards, 85 by bears, 564 by wolves, 25 by hyænas, 1,180 by other wild animals, and 10,777 by snakes. Fifty-three thousand cattle, moreover, succumbed in the fight. On the other side, under stimulus of a reward amounting to more than £10,000, 23,861 wild beasts and 127,295 snakes have been killed; a large total in itself, but small when the losses man and domestic animals have sustained are taken into consideration.

There are said to be fully 200,000 beggars tramping about the German Empire, and they are estimated to get as alms not less than $18,000,000 annually in money, without considering the value of food and clothing given them. Many of these beggars got into the habit of gaining their livelihood in this way through the oppressive laws formerly in vogue that required apprentices to travel about, literaly as journeymen, with a view to perfecting themselves in their respective trades.

A curious superstition is exhibited in Western and Southern India, where the lands desolated by the famine of 1877 are now being ravaged by a plague of millions of rats. These animals have overspread the country like locusts, they destroy the crops almost as thoroughly, and are even more difficult to keep down. So grave has become the aspect of affairs that a "Rat Committee" has been appointed to inquire into the best means of getting rid of the creatures. The natives in some places refuse to destroy the rats, as they believe that the souls of people who died in the famine have come back in the bodies of rats to get the food they should have had in their previous existence. Thus we see how superstition becomes its own scourge (Prov. i. 31).

The defeat by locusts of a Russian detachment of infantry on the march from Gontschaki is reported. It was assailed by a flight of locusts twenty-two miles square, which arrested its progress and compelled it to take refuge in the military station of Dzigamskoi. Next day the detachment made another attempt to continue its march, but was brought to a dead stand about a verst from Dzigamskoi by the locusts, which had alighted in such masses upon the ground that the soldiers could not wade through them, and they still filled the air, swarming upon the men in countless myriads. In the hope of dispersing them by noise, Major Lazoff gave his men the command to fire in the air, and kept up a series of volleys for nearly half an hour; but the locusts paid no attention whatsoever to the rapid discharge of Russian musketry directed against them, and the detachment was forced to retreat for the second time to Dzigamskoi.

THE WORLD'S MORTALITY—INTERESTING STATISTICS.

The earth is inhabited by about 1,300 millions of people, as follows:—

Of the Caucasian race,	360,000,000
Of the Mongolian,	550,000,000
Of the Ethiopian,	190,000,000
Of the Malay,	200,000,000
Of the American Indian,	1,000,000,

All these respectively speak 3,064 languages, and possesses 1,000 different religions. The number of deaths per annum is 33,333,333, or 91,034 per day, 3,730 per hour, sixty per minute, or one per second. This loss is more than compensated for by the number of births. The average duration of life throughout the globe is thirty-three years. One-fourth of its population dies before the seventh year, and one-half before the seventeenth. Out of 10,000 persons, only one reaches his hundreth year, only one in 500 his eightieth, and only one in 100 his sixty-fifth. Married people live longer than unmarried ones, and a tall man is likely to live longer than a short one. Until the fifteenth year, women have a better chance of life than men; but beyond that period the chances are equal.

The fifty-sixth annual report of the Berlin society for the promotion of Christianity among the Jews has been lately published. There is no concealment of the fact that the visible results do not correspond with the wishes of the society. The total number of the Hebrew race is given as about what it was in the days of King David—between six and seven millions. There are in Europe, according to the latest statistical information, about 5,000,000; in Asia, 200,000; in Africa, over 80,000; in America, from a million to a million and a half. More than half of the European Jews (2,691,000) reside in Russia; 1,375,000 in Austria (of whom 575,000 in the Polish province of Galicia); 512,000 in Germany (61 in the Polish province of Posen); Roumania is credited with 274,000, and Turkey with 100,000. There are 70,000 in Holland, 50,000 in England, 49,000 in France, 36,000 in Italy; Spain and Portugal have between 2,000 and 4,000; 1,800 in Sweden, and 25 in Norway. Nothing is said about Denmark or Switzerland. The population of Jerusalem is given at 7,000 Mohammedans, 5,000 Christians, and 12,500 Jews. The report gives no details concerning America, except that in New York there are thirty synagogues.

What to-day can be done as well?

The more fully we enter, by the power of the Spirit of God, into the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, the more decided will be our separation, and the more whole-hearted will be our devotedness. The effort to produce either the one or the other until redemption is known will prove the most hopeless labor.

Bronson: Education should give us command of every faculty of body and mind; call out all our powers of observation and reflection; change the creatures of impulse, prejudice, and passion, to thinking, reasoning, loving beings; lead to objects of pursuit and habits of conduct favorable to the happiness of every individual, and of the whole world; multiply all the means of enjoyment, and diminish every temptation to vice and sensuality: and true education will do all this.

Earth was at peace when morning stars were singing
And when the sons of God with joy did shout,
When like a lover, votive offerings bringing,
Her Maker hung his starry banners out.

But since the star of hope went down in sorrow
Full six millenniums have well nigh fled;
And still the worn earth waits a coming morrow
When they shall live again—the myriad dead.

DIED.

FUNK—At his residence in Carroll county, Mo., Sept. 5, 1879, G. G. Funk, aged forty years, eleven months and four days.

Bro. Funk was a firm believer in the soon coming king. In his quiet, unostentatious way, he exemplified beautifully the Christian character. He passed away calmly, peacefully, in full hope of a glorious immortality beyond the reign of death. It was hard to give him up, but we sorrow not as others who have no hope. Silently and sadly we laid him in the grave to wait the sounding of the arch-angel's trumpet. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss. May God bless and temper the winds to the shorn ones, and reunite them in the soon-coming kingdom. A discourse was made by the writer to a large concourse of sympathizing friends, from John xi. 21.

W. A. PRESTON.

KERR—Aug. 21, Sister Mary Francis Kerr, aged 32 years, beloved wife of John Kerr and only daughter of brother and sister Abraham and Mary Vanwinkle, of East Newark, N. J.

Our deceased sister was the only child left of a large family, which fact, and other circumstances attending her sickness and death, made the providential stroke more severe, and to the family almost unbearable, but the deep, heartfelt sorrow is neutralized by the cheering testimony she gave her friends in her last hours. Although her death was comparatively sudden and unexpected, it had no terror to her; its sting had been removed in a union with that all saving name to the obedience of faith, therefore the last enemy found her rejoicing in the blessed hope. Beloved by all who knew her, mild and lovely in her life, calm and peaceful in death, in that trying hour she was the comforter as well as the comforted, as the many of her friends and relatives who witnessed her in her dying moments will testify. And now she waits the coming of her and our dear Lord to strengthen her and raise her up even from among the dead, when she will possess the divine nature in being made like Christ and seeing him as he is.

Bro. John Donaldson, of Brooklyn, discoursed at her funeral on Job xiv. and 1 Cor. xv., to a very large and attentive audience held in the M. E. church of the same place. We cannot help but hope and believe there were some seed sown by which Christ will be magnified even in her death. I send you these touching lines in memoriam as expressing what I am unable to express in her case, which you will please insert with this notice.

JOHN G. WOODRUFF.

IN MEMORIAM.

Sleep, sister, sleep, no dream disturbs thy rest,
Nor anguish troubles thy profound repose;
No wave of tumult rolls across thy breast,
All, all is still as evening's silent close.

Sleep, sister, sleep, the world hath rarely tried
The nature of too fine a texture wrought
To bear the burdens that its life entailed,
Or realize the molds sought.

Sleep, sister, sleep, the Christ himself hath slept
Within thy lowly bed. In agony
Enspired upon the cross—while pity wept
His death—as dear bereaved ones weep for thee.

Sleep, sister, sleep, the Christ hath broken the Lord
Of him who had the power to close thine eyes;
The spirit raised the anointed from the dead,
That spirit dwelt in thee, and thou shalt rise.

Sleep, sister, sleep, the night is well nigh spent
That in its gloom thy slumbering form opposite;
The sun shall rise, his healing wings be sent
To give thee of the joy his light reveals.

Sleep, sister, sleep, though dead yet spoken thou
To all the dear ones thou hast left to travel;
Bidding them watch, become redemption now
Is nearer than it was when they believed.

Sleep, sister sleep, nor weep thy losing word,
Nor thy sweet smile remembered by us while;
But store our hearts to wait our coming Lord,
In whose bright presence we shall meet again.

POETRY.

Adversity.

W. I. CROCKETT.

Our hearts are stamped upon the days
That break the chains of love and life;
But from each agonizing strife
There springs a hope that ne'er decays.

The clouds that gather o'er the sky,
Should make us look more oft above;
And shelter 'neath the wings of love,
That spread through all eternity.

What shadows fall upon the road,
But make the sunshine seem more bright?
But make more precious rays of light,
That steal into our dim abode.

The tree bright clothed in tender leaves,
That murmur to the air their praise,
Is freshened by the darkest days,
And from the clouds its life receives.

What are we but mere things of dust,
We cannot life but dimly see,
And all our trials yet may be
The love of Him who is our trust.

Some wondrous power directs our way,
And linked within our hearts doth draw
More strongly than can human law
Toward a clearer, brighter day.

SELECTIONS.

[The Christian World.]

Conditional Immortality and its Connection With Christian Doctrine.

The Rev. Henry Constable said:—Mr. Chairman and Christian friends,—I have been asked to read a paper upon a very grand question, Conditional Immortality as Connected with the Human Race, and as related to the Admitted Evangelical Doctrines of Christian Faith. A subject it is—you will see—upon which whole volumes might be written, as they have been written, and upon which I can now hope to say but a very few words.

Immortality and Man.—Immortality and that strange race of being to which each of us belongs! Between the lower creatures and immortality there is no connection. Scripture is not merely silent upon such a connection, but it denies it. We read their history in one brief phrase—"The beasts that perish." Ps. xlix. 12. Between man, however, and immortality—let us take what view we please of human nature and the destiny of the wicked—there is a very close and intimate connection. Scripture speaks of it in relation to man both before and since his fall. "In our image," spoken by God of man at his creation, implied of necessity immortality. The very threat—"in the day that thou eatest of the tree of knowledge thou shalt die"—is God's declaration that if man had not sinned he would have lived for ever (Gen. i. 28, ii. 17). Man fell, but redemption was promised to him. The very idea of redemption includes within its scope immortality restored. And so as revelation opened out with its wondrous story the victory over the grave is written more and more clearly in letters of light—until the source of all life comes—the Son of God, by whom man was made, and proclaims as the very essence of his gospel, "I give unto My sheep eternal life." Isa. xxvi. 19; Hos. xiii. 14; John x. 28. But we should expect upon man's part a susceptibility of this grand doctrine of revelation, if not an anticipation of it, yet an endless memory of it, never wholly obliterated. We should expect of a creature created for immortality, and to whom immortality was to be restored, that its idea should enter into his speculations, kindle his fancy, be a theme for his subtlest disputes, be food for thought whener he looked on a little and saw a grave open before him, and felt the inexorable hand of time pushing him towards it, and know that all who had gone before him had descended into it. And so it was. Immortality has been the theme of man from his earliest day to ours. It has entered into his oratory, his poetry, and his philosophy; it has been hoped for or it has been dreaded, it has been reasoned for or reasoned against; it has been believed or it has been rejected. It was to be, according to varying speculations, for all men, or for some only or for none. Look at that group of men in the ancient land of Luz! Job. ii, 8–13. Childless, poor, distracted with sores from crown to foot, his friends pouring vinegar for balm into his wounds, his wife calling on him to blaspheme God and die. What is it which comes up to the mind of Job as, in his agony, he cursed the day that had introduced him to existence? It is the hope of immortality! "When a man dies," he asks himself, "shall he live again?" And then he bursts forth into those glorious words which have brought comfort to thousands upon thousands of sad hearts, I know that my Redeemer liveth—I know that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth—I know that after worms have destroyed this body in my flesh, I shall see God; and so he is able to rest in the high resolve, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait until my changing come" xiv. 14; xix. 25, 26.

Look at another group of men! They are gathered in a prison house round the greatest philosopher of the heathen world—Socrates. He is about to die, and of what is his discourse to his friends upon the last evening of his life? It is upon Immortality! That was his hope, his ardent longing! He arrays all his reasons why it should be reckoned a good hope, and not an idle dream. But he taught not with authority, but as the Scribes, and so while some hoped he spoke truth, others listened with the sad smile of incredulity to the earnest words he poured forth. Look at that crowded audience drawn from every part of the world to listen in an Athenian garden to another of Athens philosophers. His subject too is Immortality. Epicurus has heard all the subtle reasonings of Socrates, but they have not convinced him. He dismisses them all as cobwebs to be brushed aside. While he could conceive and speak of, and reason about this grand doctrine, he held the sad view that it was not for man, no, not for the very noblest minds that have arisen and shone among our race. Here, again, is an assemblage of a very different kind! The last days of Jerusalem have come! The great soldier, the Roman Titus—is haranguing his troops as he directs their fierce attack upon the strong tower of Antonia. Josephus, I. W., vi. 1, 6. What is the powerful motive which lays before them as he urges them on to a struggle, which would probably end in death to the foremost of their number? It was that to the brave man who died in battle there awaited an immortal life, while to the cowardly and the sluggard there was in death only everlasting oblivion. Or, once more. Look at those men, seated in council round the watch-fire of their tribe. It is in the great forest wilderness of the New World, and they are looking over the wide waste of waters as the Indian sun is sinking towards the west! What is that old man speaking of, to whom all listen with rapt, unbroken attention? It is of immortality! of happy hunting grounds, where no palefaces come to disturb the red man; there he pursues the deer and the elk, and hopes that even his faithful dog shall in that happy land bear him company. There, sir, is man and immortality! The idea of it is ineradicable from his nature. He must talk of it and think of it wherever he roams—in the pathless forest, across the waste of sand, by the sad sea waves, amid the porticos of Athens, in the forum of Rome, in tribe, republic, or monarchy, immortality is the subject of his thoughts. But his thoughts are widely various. Is it for all, or some only, or for none? It is not my purpose now, sir, to prove which of these various opinions is the truth. Many of us in this room today have put our views before the public, and I am bold to say they have never been confuted. My chief object is to show that our view, now generally known by the title of "Conditional Immortality," takes its place among, harmonizes with, does not disturb, far less deny, the great accepted Evangelical truths and doctrines of the gospel of Jesus Christ. A few words as to what we mean by Conditional Immortality. We believe, then, in a future life—an everlasting life—for man. We believe, that it was to give us this blessed life that Jesus—the Son of God—came from heaven to earth. Believing that our first head, Adam, lost it for himself and for his seed, we believe that the second Adam, has brought it back. But we also believe that there is in this a beautiful harmony with the Divine character; that our doctrine is one that sets forth all God's attributes, his power, his wisdom, his justice, his love, his tender pity.

We believe, then, that for all who are fitted for it there will be immortality—most certainly not for others. Eternal misery! We reject it as a horrible nightmare! Eternal evil! We repudiate it as a foul libel upon our God! For those who are attuned to sing the song of redemption, for the lovers of God and man, for the sweet angel faces that tell of bliss and joy; for all of these we believe in immortality! For others destruction! And yet we also believe that the very destruction of the wicked exhibits the mercy of God in blessing to the universe. We might be certain that our view would meet with disapproval. When was there ever a truth propounded—new to the age though not new itself—that was not condemned, and, what is more, the more important it was the more it was condemned! We do not, indeed, wonder; we should wonder if it was otherwise, for our view runs counter to a doctrine which has generally found reception in every Christian Church. Ignored in the Articles and Liturgy of the English Church, immortality for all, whether of bliss or of woe, has found full expression in her homilies. The Congregational churches, I should suppose, are in no way committed to it, but as a rule, I believe, it has been, up to a recent time, generally held among them. The Westminister Confession has taught it in plainest terms. Methodism, in the sermons of John Wesley, has proclaimed it; Rome has pronounced for it by the mouth of many of her Popes! With such a widespread acceptance, we cannot wonder that a shout of horror should have been raised against our view throughout Christendom. It has been condemned in every variety of phrase. It is declared to be subversive of order, an encourager of sin, fatal to the atonement, destructive of faith in a future life, the disturber of Christian doctrine! Even the charge of excessive cruelty has been raised against it! To this, I would wish to say a few words—they can be but a few; they cannot embrace even a short reply to the many charges brought against us. I ask, then, sir, in the first place, has the adoption of our view of Conditional Immortality—and it has been adopted by members of every orthodox evangelical communion—has it exerted any disturbing influence upon those who have adopted it? No! The acceptance of this view has not disturbed our faith! Most of us in this chapel to-day—certainly all of us upon whom years have written their furrowed marks—were educated in the doctrine of Unconditional Immortality. One thing or another led us to an alteration of our view.

We have come to the conclusion that fallen man is mortal—not immortal; that Christ has placed Immortality within our power; that great numbers of mankind—more, perhaps, than even sanguine hope would imagine—will attain it; but that for others—many, certainly; perhaps the majority of the human race—there is no immortality of any kind, sad or joyful, in pleasure or in pain. What effect has this doctrine had on us? Are we running wildly about, unable to remain within the old land marks—finding the whole system in which we were educated intolerable to us—alienated from our ancestral doctrines—looking out eagerly for some new community within which we may shelter ourselves and our opinions? Verily, I see nothing of the kind. None of us that I am aware of have fled to Arianism, or Socinianism, or Romanism, or Scepticism, or Atheism! Our newly-adopted view possesses a wonderfully small element of the destructive or rending asunder power. For the first time, so far as I know, in the history of religious thought, a change in a great fundamental doctrine—for by universal confession, this is a change in a fundamental doctrine—has given rise to no new sect—no church of old day or of latter day saints. We do not hear of any successful attempt—or of any attempt at all—to form us into a sect of Whitites, or Leaskits, or Goodwynites, or Mentonites! The names are strange to us, and I do not imagine that use will ever enable us to get over their strangeness. Efforts have been made in various quarters to eject us, but we have made none to go forth. We have clung to the old ways—the old evangelical truths, the old-established Evangelical communions. There has never, I believe, been felt on the part of a single individual among us—leader or follower—to add another to the denominations of Christendom. Truly, Conditional Immortality is not a rending, destructive, separating power. If I may judge of others by myself, while it has removed one horrible, sickening, maddening idea from my mind, it has endeared to it all old Evangelical truth. I might I think stop here, and fairly consider that I had proved my point—namely, that the reception of the doctrine of Conditional Immortality is not opposed to Evangelical doctrine. They are not a few, sir, who have adopted this doctrine. They may be reckoned by their thousands in this land. There is no part of the world where the English tongue is spoken where it has not its adherents. Sincerity cannot be denied us, for none of us has gained anything that I know of—many have lost much in reputation and position—some have suffered keenly!—so severely, that they have well earned the time-honored title of confessors. We are of all tones of mind—the æsthetic and the logical, the tender and the severe, the broad and the scrupulous, and yet not one in this large body that I have heard of, has been shaken in his attachment to Scriptural Evangelical truth by this terrible doctrine of Conditional Immortality. I think its opponents might well take it into their conception that it is not so terrible a doctrine after all. But I have been asked to show the harmony of this doctrine with the several doctrines of Christianity to which it is said to be opposed, and with the several attributes of God, with which it is thought to be inconsistent.

Were I to attempt to go through such a subject, my task would far surpass my strength and your endurance. Besides, others will take up what I leave incomplete. You will permit me rather to apply the remainder of my time to an objection not infrequently brought against our view, that it represents God's conduct to the wicked as being too severe. We suppose that in that hereafter which follows the resurrection, both of the just and of the unjust, the latter will be subjected to judgment and to conscious pain ere they sink under the law of an eternal death. This is said by some to be too severe! By whom is this said? Perhaps some may be astonished to hear that there are Augustinian advocates who charge our view with cruelty! And yet there are! But really this charge from them is one that we think it an insult to reason to argue against. To say, as they do, that it is not too severe in God to punish sinners with torment as long as God lives, while it is too severe in him to give pain for some definite time adjudged by him, and then to consign them to a condition where is no more pain, or weariness, or oppression, is not a view which we need waste a moment to confute. But there are others who make this charge of cruelty, and from whom it comes at first sight, at least, with far greater grace—I mean those who hold Origen's view of universal restoration. They who think that throughout the ages—soon perhaps with some, later with others—Satan and his angels, all the children of men, not even such as Balaam and Judas excluded, will be brought somehow to a better mind, will lay themselves at the Great Father's feet, will receive his blessing, and cause joy among the angels,—these say it would be cruel in God to take life from a single soul capable of all this. If severity be all that is charged against our view, we frankly confess that in our view there is severity. But is this any valid objection? Is not severity a part of God's ways? Are we not told in his word that severity mingles with his dealings of mercy? Does not the Apostle to mankind call upon us to behold both the goodness and the severity of God? Rom. ii. 22. But to the charge of "too severe," we answer No! If it is a part of God's providence—one issue of the long struggle between good and evil—that immortality, once offered, should have passed out of the reach of some—that life, with all its wondrous capacities of bliss and affection and intellectual attainment, should be withdrawn without hope of restoration—we deny that any man can show that this is too severe.

We might just as well say that God was bound to bestow eternal life upon as many as he could possibly call into such a being, as that he must keep in eternal life all who once had it in their power. But let us go a little into particulars. We teach conscious pain in the hereafter for the wicked—for some much, for multitudes very little indeed. Have the advocates of universal restoration any right to object to this part of our scheme? No! They teach themselves an amount of pain in the hereafter in their process of purgation which I, for one, think greater than will be inflicted upon the very greatest offender. Upon the mere point of conscious pain they cannot object to us. But destruction—the annihilation of any human life—this is the great point which they urge against us. Even here, while we allow severity, we fully believe that there is a mercy to myriads upon myriads which counterbalances the severity in a perhaps infinite degree. Let me try and present this to your mind as it has been presented to mine. Ruled over by one great Being, upon one great plan, there is no such thing in the universe as an unconnected fact. Each event is joined on with another; forms a link in a mighty chain.

The history of the angelic fall and God's dealings with them, of man's fall and God's dealings with us, is not an unconnected episode in the great universal history of creation. As the spots we see upon the sun affect our earth, which is so many millions of miles away, as the changes in the moon have a like effect, so God's dealings with two fallen races will and must affect other races besides them. Angels desire to look into these things! It is by his dealings with his church that the manifold wisdom of God is to be made known to the heavenly principalities. 1 Pet. i. 12; Eph. iii. 10.

Is God, think you done with working? Is he who has ever been working in the past not to work in the future? John v. 17. Is he done with working his great works—the creation of beings and races which resemble himself? He seems to take a long time with his works. He is in no hurry with them, but they are going on silently, ceaselessly, until they rise with images of deity. How long ago it is since our earth was without form and void we know not! How long it continued with no beauty, save such as lay in its capacity for endless beauty, we cannot tell! But at length came light, and the blue firmament, the seas, and the dry land. And then came life—life at first only of the lowest kind, vegetable life, unconscious of its own existence. And then came a higher life—the life of the animal, rising up from the lowest zoophyte, through fish, and bird, and beast, until it culminated in man, the image of God. Should we think that God, when he made man ceased for ever from such another work? Is this likely, when we know that God, if to us a slow, is yet a ceaseless, endless worker? Is this likely when you look up into the sky for a moment, and think of what you there behold—an infinity of worlds? It may be that very few of them are yet inhabited. Some of the planets even of our own solar system—astronomers tell us—are as yet unfit for life in any condition of it that is known to us. May it not well be that among the divine works of the great eternal future it may form a part to people those great innumerable rolling orbs with creatures made in the likeness of God? Made in the image of God! How strange the consequence that follows! Because made in that image, therefore near to danger—therefore exposed to ruin! And yet so it is. The humble zoophyte of an inconceivable antiquity of creation is now as it was at first made! And so of every lower creature. There is no falling off—there is no deterioration—there can be none—their path has been marked out for them by a divine ordinance which they cannot transgress. But for God's image there is free will. Fall is very near to such. Experience has testified to this. Those unclean devils dwelling in tombs and waste places once wore a face of beauty such as Raphael never painted. Those men of ruthless will that in pursuit of selfish purposes trample upon the most sacred rights of others, are sprung from Adam, son of God! Those poor sinful women—scarce women, for they are lost to every grace of womanhood—are daughters of Eve, the fair, pure bride of the God-like man! Every high race that we know of has, in some or in all of its members, told us how near the lofty are to fall! Now, if, as would appear, the history of God's dealings with us and with angels is meant to stay all further entrance of evil among the intelligences of the future, is it not a mercy, even that severity which cuts off eternal life from some? Surely it is! Who that knows even a little of the misery of evil would think any severity short of injustice to be excessive that would banish it for ever? When we see it even in our own little circle—a mere drop in that great ocean of human misery, that has been crying up to heaven from battle-fields and famine-struck regions, and plague-visited cities, and narrow, squalid lanes; aye, and from the palaces and grand mansions of the earth—when we know that the sight even of the little portion of misery visible to us makes men doubt, if not the being, yet the goodness of God—shall we not say that that is mercy rather than severity which, withdrawing life from some who could not claim it and did not deserve it, has removed misery and sin from multitudes, as outnumbering them as the sands on all the shores of the world outnumber those of one little strand? I have often thought that God delays the creation of beings like to us till they have all our strange history before them, to teach them the great mystery of free will. Now, most certainly that theory of universal restoration which comes before the mind with such an alluring aspect of mercy teaches no such much-needed lesson as ours does. Rather it would encourage sin, by holding out the certainty of recovery. One day, it suggests, all will return to God. Meanwhile, taste this evil which is so attractive, you will afterwards enjoy good the more from having known its opposite. And so it would be evil for ever—evil among new races as they sprung into being, the sad cry ever going up from the creations of God. We believe our view to be, sir, notwithstanding the charge of severity, the most merciful after all yet further: I see blessings in the sorest afflictions of this life, of whatever sort; in fact I see that they are as great, if not greater, blessings than those of prosperity—spiritually I mean. And so, learning the lessons our heavenly Father desired we should, I have hope. The time for work is short if we desire to stand before the Son of Man in the day of trouble. A patient, contented, sacrificing, and godly life will alone stand the test in that soon-coming day. Will we be there? It is a strait and narrow pathway, and asks for sacrifices in pleasure, comfort and money. We have got to learn the faults of ourselves, not of others; and to do this we must compare our lives with the pattern, which will require the time in which others are seeking pleasure, to be spent in study and meditation. The Lord asks us to help him, which with many of us, requires us to sacrifice comforts in many ways; perhaps some would say luxuries, but to me a few pears now and then, a few peaches, or a few grapes, etc., etc., are not much luxury. However, we have sacrificed, and are sacrificing such comforts for the Lord's cause, and I hope and believe he will reward me at his appearing. I do not say I do entirely without these and other things, but they are few and far between, and it is for the sake of the Lord's cause, for I should have them if it were not for the thought of sacrificing for him. It is not compulsory, but these things are willingly foregone. There are a multitude of ways we can sacrifice if we only think so and I hope the Lord will put it into the hearts of many to do so, that our paper may be published without interruption. Yours in hope of the rapture.

Ed. Restitution:—You will find enclosed two dollars in payment of my subscription to THE RESTITUTION for another year.

I like the way in which THE RESTITUTION is edited now except I think sometimes there is too much of the dross of orthodoxy allowed to appear in it from the pens of some of your contributors.

I am the only one in this city of 12,000 inhabitants holding the truth that I know of, so I am quite lonesome at times.

The truth appears to be dying out altogether in this country (Canada). I know of several places where a few years ago they had very prosperous churches which have dwindled down now to a very few individuals, and in some cases no meetings at all. The causes of this has been too many hobby horses to ride, and too much hair-splitting in order to make riders for all the different hobbies. Another cause has been the worldliness of the leaders or preachers, which right-minded people could not approve of, and a great many others would follow. Consequently the falling to pieces of the church. We have not had enough of the spirit of Christ, and consequently have not been the right kind of a "peculiar people."

It is my present intention to leave this country and go to the states to see if I can find a church or people who try to live up to the truth. If I can find such I would settle down among them. Truly yours, etc.,

Ed. Restitution:—As you have not had any notice of Bro. John Innis' death, I am requested by his widow to do so. Bro. Innis, on the day of his death, was as well as usual. Worked in the field raking hay until a shower of rain came. He unhitched his horse from the rake and went into the barn during the shower. He talked as usual and was to all appearance in good health. His son, who was in the barn at the same time, with his hired man, saw him stagger and fall, and he only lived a few minutes and never spoke after he fell. Bro. Innis embraced the faith about twenty-five years ago, and has done much to lead others into the truth. He was a believer in the resurrection of the just and not just. He used to often say that he would have to sleep before he would hear the bridegroom's voice. But although we feel that he has gone to sleep for a short time we miss him much. He was always ready with a helping hand where and whenever it was needed. He was one of the most faithful soldiers of the faith ever seen. He daily talked to every one around him of the soon coming of the Lord, and urging all to be prepared for that event. Bro. Innis has left many friends to mourn his loss, but there is one thing that comforts those who feel sad for the loss of their loved ones, and that is the hope of a glorious resurrection, which the brother has had this many a year. Although he has had the frowns of many of his neighbors for his faith and hope he held them true to the end. Yours in hope,

Ed. Restitution:—There are those who claim they know they are of the elect, and if such is the case, I wish I might have the same evidence. I wait, long, watch, hope and pray, and am striving to the best of my knowledge, that I may be of the glorified ones and escape the troublesome times coming; but in my case, the Lord only knows. But because I do not have such evidence, I do not get discouraged. I more and more realize that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." I realize that it is not worldly prosperity alone, but worldly adversity also, that works for good. So I think I see good in hiding the evidence of our acceptance from us; still if it was the Lord's will to give it, I wish I might have it. And

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Scriptural restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets since the world began. It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates the strictly belief of the Gospel, repentance, and the obedience of prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Non-Resurrection of Some.—Reply to Brother J. H. Thomas.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

The plea of your correspondent for a resurrection of some of the "irresponsible" of our third class of the human race, seems to rest on the ground of the supposed necessity of excepting some of that class—"those of good and honest hearts," as in the instances he cites—who, if death had not taken them off, would certainly have accepted and embraced the truth.

1. Does not such reasoning hang entirely on conjecture and hypothesis? Is it profitable to exhaust it, such speculations? God's laws are general laws. If, in individual cases, they seem to us to operate harshly or unjustly, we must remit the rectification of such results to his wisdom and justice, for we know the "Judge of all the earth will do right." He will provide, in his own way and time, for the exceptions, if real, to which Brother Thomas refers. It may be as Pope saith:

"Partial evil is universal good,
And discord, harmony not understood."

2. Our brother asks, "Is not death, that came by Adam, an unjust interference with life and often before the individual has had a chance to hear the word of truth—the gospel of our salvation?" We cannot respond affirmatively, for that "interference" is of God and we cannot say that anything that he does or permits is unjust, for "there is no unrighteousness with God." It is written of God that he creates and he destroys. He says, "Behold, I kill and I make alive."

Life is, in itself, a great blessing. In general, the human race enjoy more than they suffer in the present state. Health and happiness in the world of mankind is the general rule. Disease and misery, the exception. It is proved by our own experience and observation, for the love of life—self-preservation—is the first law of nature. The great teacher—who knew what was in man—has asked, "What will not a man give in exchange for his life?"

Who of us is willing to die rather than live? Even in every extreme of pain and suffering, men prefer life to death. The loss of life is to them the direst calamity. Who shall say then that man has not gained by his creation at any rate? And if he fails to live hereafter by falling within our third class of the irresponsibles, we cannot justly charge his Creator with any wrong in failing to make him live again. On the contrary, we discern in the present arrangement of things abundant reason to extol the wisdom and benevolence of God in creating man. How much positive happiness we enjoy, as human beings, in the means and resources of pleasure he has freely given us. The general law of our being, is health, and health is that condition of our being in which simple existence is enjoyment. How much positive enjoyment we derive, as men, from the air we breathe, the water we drink, the food we eat—from alternate labor and rest,—and the ten thousand avenues of pleasure opened to us, and the ocean of enjoyment we drink into our sensitive souls through our five senses? And, when to these we add the development, cultivation and enjoyment of our sympathetic nature in our various social relations, in the emotional feelings, in the parental marriage, filial, fraternal and friendly ties and associations which cluster around us in domestic and social life, who will deny that, as a whole, we are positive gainers (whatever befalls us hereafter) in having lived upon this beautiful green earth and in this fair world in which God's goodness has placed us? If these conclusions be admitted, it seems clear that it was wise and right to create man, and that, by God's overruling goodness and mercy, Adam's race have been blessed and advantaged by his fall (or, we may say, in spite of it,) notwithstanding that death, after a life time of greater enjoyment than suffering, consigns them again to the dust.

The training and trials of our race in this school of mixed good and evil are necessary for the development and formation of character, in order to fit and prepare him, if he consents to God's plans and will be a co-worker to that end, to live in a future life by the resurrection, and to act his part in the wise and happy economy of God's future kingdom on earth and over all nations under Christ. Hence, we learn in Acts xv. that, during the present life, God is choosing out from among the nations "a people for his name," i. e., for an ulterior kosmos, or government, which he will establish on earth when the present order of things will be superceded.

If man hears, believes and accepts these terms that God offers in the gospel, he will be among the called and chosen of the kingdom. If he knowingly rejects or even "neglects this great salvation," Heb. ii., he shall not "escape" a just retribution, which will end in his reconsignment to the dust of death. But, if he never hears, and, consequently, cannot heed the salvation and its conditions, in the gospel proclamation, as God is not an "austere man and does not gather where he has not strewn," such no one is necessarily not within the premises or under the law of God, and is, therefore, "irresponsible."

So far, I submit, we can see our way clear in the light of reason and revelation, as far as the latter has been made known to us in the Holy Scriptures. When the Lord of life and glory comes, "with whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and learning," when wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of his times, we shall learn and know more, and all our doubts and difficulties will vanish in that brighter light. Biding that time in patience and hope, I offer the foregoing in reply to our brother's comments on my former article as the best supplement I can supply with the light now before us.

Fort Washington, O.

A Sketch of the Rise of the Turkish Empire and its Future as Foretold in Rev. xvi. 12.

Since first Islamism was proclaimed to the world, the advancement or decline of the people who embraced it has been watched with interest by all civilized countries. Mohammed, its founder, was born A. D. 569, and Gibbon assures us that he was of melancholy temperament and addicted to religious contemplation from his earliest youth. The faith that he planted and nourished in the bosom of his family might have perished when the prophet fled before his enemies but for the timely interference and succor of Medina, that received him and embraced his faith with reverence. From Medina his fame spread, and no longer an outcast and wanderer Mohammed became the prophet of his foes, and the prince of a people whose dominion one hundred years after his death extended from India to the Atlantic ocean, embracing Persia, Syria, Egypt, Africa and Spain.

Constantinople attracted, at an early date, Mohammed's followers, as we find them under its walls forty-six years after the flight from Mecca to Medina. In this, their first attack, they were dismayed by the solid walls of the city and its spirited resistance of the Romans, whose valor was aroused by the danger to their empire and religion. What, however, the Mohammedans failed to accomplish in their first siege, was reserved for the future, when, with the decline of the Mongols, arose the Ottoman empire.

Othman, the founder of the empire bearing his name, (Ottoman being a corruption of Osman or Otharus) was a man possessing more than the ordinary abilities of a soldier. Being freed from the superior power of the Mongols and situated near the confines of the Greek empire, he felt justified by the commands of the Koran to levy war upon all "infidels."

We may date the real establishment of the Ottoman power from the conquest of Prusia which occurred during the latter part of Othman's reign. Orchan succeeded his father Othman, and was, in turn, succeeded by Amurath, who subdued the provinces of Thrace, and fixed upon Adrianople as the seat of Mohammedan government and religion in Europe. After a reign of twenty-nine years, Amurath was assassinated by a Servian soldier. Bajaset, surnamed Ilderim or the lightning, followed after his father Amurath in the possession of the Ottoman throne. His surname of "lightning" was very expressive of his character and of his destructive marches during the years of his reign from A. D. 1389 to 1403. He overran Thrace, Macedonia and Thessaly, and, not content with the title of Emir, borne by his predecessors, he accepted the title of "Sultan," and desirous of doing some great thing to deserve such an imposing name, he marched against Hungary, and in the battle of Nicopolis defeated a combined army of one hundred thousand Christians under the command of Sigismund, the Hungarian king.

Constantinople would, most surely have fallen into Bajaset's hands had it not been for the appearance on the scene of action of the celebrated Timour or Tamerlane, who defeated Bajaset in a pitched battle around the city of Angora. By this victory the fall of Constantinople was delayed some fifty years, when it was besieged and taken by Mohamet II.

Mohamet ascended the throne of the Ottomans A. D. 1451. Although well educated, his teachings made a beast of prey, making his passionate and brutal nature. The slightest pretext seemed sufficient in his eyes for declaring war against the Greeks and in 1453 his army encamped before Constantinople. The city, after sustaining a memorable siege fell. Mohamet completely changed it into a Turkish seat of government; the churches he converted into mosques, and thus, after a struggle of years, the crescent triumphed over the cross, and the superstitious worship of the Romish beat gave place to the no less superstitious but purer worship of Islam.

Like all the vast changes that are continually taking place in the administrations of the world, the wonderful events that led to the occupation of Constantinople by the Ottomans and the establishment of their present empire in Europe, were brought to pass by the Creator of the universe for the accomplishment of the great end of all human affairs, viz.: the setting up of a divine kingdom for the glory of his name and the eternal possession of those whose record, during this present life entitle them to it. In consideration of these things I invite your attention to Rev. xvi. 12: "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great River Euphrates and the water thereof was dried up that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."

That Turkey is the Euphrates here mentioned, I have not a doubt. Nearly all students and expositors of prophecy agree in this. Dr. John Cummings says: "The great River Euphrates denotes the Turkish or Mohammedan power." The Turkish empire originally sprang from the banks of the Euphrates and spread its overwhelming waters through the vast extent of country from the Chinese frontier to Constantinople, and from Jerusalem to Arabia Felix. But this mighty inundation is destined to subside and its waters become perfectly dry. We may date the commencement of this subsidence, when, in 1821 A. D., the sixth vial began to flow upon the Ottoman empire. From that date until this, its power has been gradually declining.

In 1839 the Ottoman empire was declared to be a mere phantom, and that the territory of the Porte should be regarded as wastes in the political world, awaiting but the incursions of European civilization. It was regarded then that humanity and the cause of enlightenment would be benefited by the complete demolition of Turkish rule.

In the last war between Russia and Turkey many were the conjectures regarding the result. Many sympathized with the Turks and predicted that they would be victorious, but all those enlightened by prophecy beheld in it but ruin as their ultimate destiny. The virus of paganism and Roman Catholicism, to a greater or less degree, permeates the great masses of the Protestant world.

Martin Luther was a great reformer and a good man, yet he needed to be reformed himself on many points. Inherent immortality, or in common parlance "immortal soulism," which necessitates independent, or in other words, immortality out of Christ the life giver; to believe this dogma one must ignore a great amount of Scripture bearing on this point—perverting others, and flatly contradicting the following Scriptures, 2 Tim. i. 9-11.

Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, where unto I am appointed a preacher and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles.

The following facts are deducible from the above. 1st. That eternal life or life by and through a resurrection from the dead, is imparted to the believers, conditioned on the belief and obedience of the gospel. 1 Cor. xv. Mark xvi. 15-16. 2d. That it has its beginning, when the trumpet sounds, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, (not before). To show that the doctrine of immortal soulism is identified with the heathen dogma, I will illustrate by bringing or placing in juxtaposition Socrates, a true exponent of heathenism, who lived before the gospel was promulgated, and the late Wilbeur Fisk, D. D., president of the Methodist Episcopal College, Middleton, Conn. Of course he must be considered a true exponent of Protestantism.

I read several years ago what purports to be an authentic account of the closing scene in the life of each; the former said while dying "you cannot bury Socrates, I shall go to the gods." The latter said to his wife while she was bathed in tears, "Weep not, you cannot bury Wilbeur Fisk, my soul will soon be in heaven." The latter can claim no more Scriptural warrant for his "going to heaven," than the former for going to the gods. Abraham, the father of the faithful never had the promise of going to any other country than the land of Canaan, (the kingdom proper) and ultimately the dominion and greatness of the kingdom under, not in or above the whole heaven. Dan. vii. 27.

The heirs of promise, certainly cannot claim other lands or other inheritance than the progenitor was invested with title deeds.

In order to arrive at the truth on any given doctrine of the Scripture we must learn it by analysis—by comparing spiritual things with spiritual, or which is the same, comparing Scripture with Scripture and by the plain word, which must in all cases be conclusive, as Dr. Adam Clark in his commentaries has well said, that no doctrine of the Bible can be built on parables or figures, unless it is enforced by the plain word; this must in all cases be conclusive. The office, figures or parables is to illustrate facts, and not facts to illustrate figures, and the context must in all cases determine the extent of the figures. The plain texts are the "land marks" which we are forbidden to remove. All speculations out side of, and independent of the written word, are inadmissable. We might as well deny the Bible as authorized in matters of faith like Robert Ingersol, as to have such a loose jointed system of interpretation as many have, whereby the Scriptures are rendered inharmonious, and flexible and easily bent to every whim or caprice in which we may choose to indulge. Some of our good friends who are of nervous temperament often go into spasms at the bare mention of any literal interpretation of the Bible doctrine; literal, they think is necessarily unscriptural and wicked, and opposed to spiritual; they thereby reduce everthing to vapor, rendering everything volatile and evanescent and thereby become like "the baseless fabric of a vision leaving not a wreck behind."

Let us put this principle to a test. To carry out this principle to its logical conclusion the kingdom which is to be inaugurated will not be literal but spiritual and the king the same—the rulers—the territory, subjects and laws and everything constituting a kingdom must follow in the same wake, and what must be the outcome of all this? Let us take the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. I wish to institute here a series of questions in order to draw out the argument based on the denial of things as literal, and Lord will thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? verse 6. Was the kingdom when it existed literal? was the Lord Jesus a literal being? Were the persons who gazed up into heaven literal persons to gaze on a myth? Did Christ ascend into heaven? The same, (not another Jesus) shall so come in like manner as he have seen him go into heaven. If ye went away literally.

If these questions should be answered in the affirmative everything is conceded which we claim, if in the negative, then the coming of Christ must be all a myth or a mere farce; literal it is not as many suppose, opposed to spiritual, or at least not necessarily so, but mysticism is something intangible—unreal. I saw not long since, a pamphlet under the heading—"Where are the dead." I did not only have an opportunity to only glance it over at the time, thinking that I should have another opportunity to canvass it more thoroughly, but at the present writing I have failed to find a copy. I saw the author at the time, and he boasted, that he demolished "materialism" as he termed it. In his book he laid down certain rules for the interpretation of the Scriptures, many of them were good, but he very soon forgot them, and erected his battery against this man of straw—materialism, which he identified it with infidelity; he must have been deeply dyed in the stygian waters of Paganism and Catholicism, to come to the conclusion after citing many texts of Scripture, (many of them were our proof texts) that the dead, some of whom, are in heaven, and others are in the "bad place." If words are the signs of ideas, (and almost every one is ready to admit it) then the wonder is, how any honest intelligent person can arrive at such a conclusion; no sane honest person will admit for a moment, that figures, metaphors, or symbols should take precedence of the plain texts of Scripture, and certainly the adoption of this plain common sense rule is fatal to such a conclusion; but suppose we give our opponents the benefit of this rule reversed, what would they gain? take for instance the doctrine of the future punishment of the wicked; the plain texts are as follows, "destruction not annihilation as they are not synonymous terms," die, death, kill, be as though they had not been, and such like terms; according to Webster's definition of the term death, (substantially this), not only a cessation of all the functions of life, but a loss of the susceptibilities of renewed action; now bring the figures used to illustrate death—a cessation of being "the fire that shall not be quenched," "the worm that shall never die," etc.

Now let us analyze the figures; fire is used, sometimes to purify, and sometimes to destroy, it will do this on combustible substances, if it is not quenched, and whether quenched or not, perpetuity in either case can not be predicated on this figure, as it is used by our opponents for this purpose; the same may be said relative to the "never dying worm," it will not die until there is nothing left to feed upon. Our opponents can readily see, if their logic is good for anything, it proves immortality to worms as well as men; but this is not all, nor the worst of their system of interpretation. The plain language of the Bible is, "The wages of sin is death," not life throughout the untold cycles of eternity.

The literal interpretation of the Bible is the only one which will harmonize the whole Bible teaching; take for instance the prophecies, and their fulfillment. I have witnessed in my day, being nearly seventy years old, and many of my good brethren and sisters of equal age, will bear witness to the literal fulfillment of many of the prophecies. If one part is literal the other must be also. Literal is not, as many of our good friends suppose, opposed to spiritual, but to mythical, or to any thing imaginary or unreal as before observed. M. I. LEWIS.

The Right Interpretation of the Scriptures—What Rules are necessary for this Purpose.

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto our fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed Heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds.—Heb. i. 1-2.

A great mystery seems still to hang over the minds of not only the masses, but of many of those who are well educated in every thing except Bible lore, as to the meaning of what the Bible says, and this arises from the fact of a disregard of the plainest and the most common-sense rules of interpretation, viz, that words in the Bible as well as in all the books are the signs of ideas. The text alone, to say nothing of other portions of the written word, gives the key to unlock the whole mystery. The idea still lingers in the minds of many, and I might say, of a large majority of mankind with regard to how, or in what manner the holy spirit communicates or teaches us, that it is still through the medium of visions or dreams, as in former dispensations, forgetting that this, as well as the direct ministry (personally) of angels, which were the divers manners of former ages, which are superceded by what the Son of God has spoken in these last days, for certainly the personal presence and the ministry is as necessary now, as visions or dreams, and why the former is held to so tenatiously and not the latter is what I would like to know, for surely the spirit's teaching through God's Son in these last days, or in other words the written word, is redundant on the supposition, that other agencies, such as protracted meetings—some mesmeric influence must be brought to bear, to evolve spirit influence—the anxious seat is thought to be more potent to develope Christian character than the study of the word.

I say this with Christian courtesy, and with all due defence to many whom I highly esteem as men, but I must dissent from their teachings, notwithstanding they are head and shoulders above me in what is required in the schools of theology. But great as well as small men, (sometime at least) have their foibles—their weak points, and the Pope of Rome even, with all of his infallibility has not been able to monopolize all the knowledge extant in the theological world. The virus of paganism and Roman Catholicism, to a greater or less degree, permeates the great masses of the Protestant world.

Martin Luther was a great reformer and a good man, yet he needed to be reformed himself on many points. Inherent immortality, or in common parlance "immortal soulism," which necessitates independent, or in other words, immortality out of Christ the life giver; to believe this dogma one must ignore a great amount of Scripture bearing on this point—perverting others, and flatly contradicting the following Scriptures, 2 Tim. i. 9-11.

Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, where unto I am appointed a preacher and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles.

The following facts are deducible from the above. 1st. That eternal life or life by and through a resurrection from the dead, is imparted to the believers, conditioned on the belief and obedience of the gospel. 1 Cor. xv. Mark xvi. 15-16. 2d. That it has its beginning, when the trumpet sounds, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, (not before). To show that the doctrine of immortal soulism is identified with the heathen dogma, I will illustrate by bringing or placing in juxtaposition Socrates, a true exponent of heathenism, who lived before the gospel was promulgated, and the late Wilbeur Fisk, D. D., president of the Methodist Episcopal College, Middleton, Conn. Of course he must be considered a true exponent of Protestantism.

I read several years ago what purports to be an authentic account of the closing scene in the life of each; the former said while dying "you cannot bury Socrates, I shall go to the gods." The latter said to his wife while she was bathed in tears, "Weep not, you cannot bury Wilbeur Fisk, my soul will soon be in heaven." The latter can claim no more Scriptural warrant for his "going to heaven," than the former for going to the gods. Abraham, the father of the faithful never had the promise of going to any other country than the land of Canaan, (the kingdom proper) and ultimately the dominion and greatness of the kingdom under, not in or above the whole heaven. Dan. vii. 27.

The heirs of promise, certainly cannot claim other lands or other inheritance than the progenitor was invested with title deeds.

In order to arrive at the truth on any given doctrine of the Scripture we must learn it by analysis—by comparing spiritual things with spiritual, or which is the same, comparing Scripture with Scripture and by the plain word, which must in all cases be conclusive, as Dr. Adam Clark in his commentaries has well said, that no doctrine of the Bible can be built on parables or figures, unless it is enforced by the plain word; this must in all cases be conclusive. The office, figures or parables is to illustrate facts, and not facts to illustrate figures, and the context must in all cases determine the extent of the figures. The plain texts are the "land marks" which we are forbidden to remove. All speculations out side of, and independent of the written word, are inadmissable. We might as well deny the Bible as authorized in matters of faith like Robert Ingersol, as to have such a loose jointed system of interpretation as many have, whereby the Scriptures are rendered inharmonious, and flexible and easily bent to every whim or caprice in which we may choose to indulge. Some of our good friends who are of nervous temperament often go into spasms at the bare mention of any literal interpretation of the Bible doctrine; literal, they think is necessarily unscriptural and wicked, and opposed to spiritual; they thereby reduce everthing to vapor, rendering everything volatile and evanescent and thereby become like "the baseless fabric of a vision leaving not a wreck behind."

Let us put this principle to a test. To carry out this principle to its logical conclusion the kingdom which is to be inaugurated will not be literal but spiritual and the king the same—the rulers—the territory, subjects and laws and everything constituting a kingdom must follow in the same wake, and what must be the outcome of all this? Let us take the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. I wish to institute here a series of questions in order to draw out the argument based on the denial of things as literal, and Lord will thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? verse 6. Was the kingdom when it existed literal? was the Lord Jesus a literal being? Were the persons who gazed up into heaven literal persons to gaze on a myth? Did Christ ascend into heaven? The same, (not another Jesus) shall so come in like manner as he have seen him go into heaven. If ye went away literally.

If these questions should be answered in the affirmative everything is conceded which we claim, if in the negative, then the coming of Christ must be all a myth or a mere farce; literal it is not as many suppose, opposed to spiritual, or at least not necessarily so, but mysticism is something intangible—unreal. I saw not long since, a pamphlet under the heading—"Where are the dead." I did not only have an opportunity to only glance it over at the time, thinking that I should have another opportunity to canvass it more thoroughly, but at the present writing I have failed to find a copy. I saw the author at the time, and he boasted, that he demolished "materialism" as he termed it. In his book he laid down certain rules for the interpretation of the Scriptures, many of them were good, but he very soon forgot them, and erected his battery against this man of straw—materialism, which he identified it with infidelity; he must have been deeply dyed in the stygian waters of Paganism and Catholicism, to come to the conclusion after citing many texts of Scripture, (many of them were our proof texts) that the dead, some of whom, are in heaven, and others are in the "bad place." If words are the signs of ideas, (and almost every one is ready to admit it) then the wonder is, how any honest intelligent person can arrive at such a conclusion; no sane honest person will admit for a moment, that figures, metaphors, or symbols should take precedence of the plain texts of Scripture, and certainly the adoption of this plain common sense rule is fatal to such a conclusion; but suppose we give our opponents the benefit of this rule reversed, what would they gain? take for instance the doctrine of the future punishment of the wicked; the plain texts are as follows, "destruction not annihilation as they are not synonymous terms," die, death, kill, be as though they had not been, and such like terms; according to Webster's definition of the term death, (substantially this), not only a cessation of all the functions of life, but a loss of the susceptibilities of renewed action; now bring the figures used to illustrate death—a cessation of being "the fire that shall not be quenched," "the worm that shall never die," etc.

Now let us analyze the figures; fire is used, sometimes to purify, and sometimes to destroy, it will do this on combustible substances, if it is not quenched, and whether quenched or not, perpetuity in either case can not be predicated on this figure, as it is used by our opponents for this purpose; the same may be said relative to the "never dying worm," it will not die until there is nothing left to feed upon. Our opponents can readily see, if their logic is good for anything, it proves immortality to worms as well as men; but this is not all, nor the worst of their system of interpretation. The plain language of the Bible is, "The wages of sin is death," not life throughout the untold cycles of eternity.

The literal interpretation of the Bible is the only one which will harmonize the whole Bible teaching; take for instance the prophecies, and their fulfillment. I have witnessed in my day, being nearly seventy years old, and many of my good brethren and sisters of equal age, will bear witness to the literal fulfillment of many of the prophecies. If one part is literal the other must be also. Literal is not, as many of our good friends suppose, opposed to spiritual, but to mythical, or to any thing imaginary or unreal as before observed. M. I. LEWIS.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 15, 1879.

From Bro. H. Hayes we have a late number of the London Times, and we are also in receipt of No. 1, Vol. I, of the Nineteenth Century. Both of these papers contain exceedingly able articles on the great questions of our times. We tender our thanks to the senders.

For a few weeks past our friends have been paying arrearages and renewing subscriptions quite encouragingly. We hope that the improvement in times will result in an increase in our subscription list as well as in a liquidation of what is due the office. The prompt issue of our journal depend upon our current receipts

We give No. XII, the last of the letters of the first series addressed to the "Right Rev. John Hughes, Roman Catholic Bishop of New York," under the signature of "Kirwan." These letters were first published in New York, in 1825, and were written by Nicholas Murray, who was born in Ireland, Dec. 25, 1803, and who was brought up a Roman Catholic. He came to America in 1818, and embraced Protestantism, and graduated in Williams College in 1825. After studying theology at Princeton he became Pastor of the Presbyterian Church, first at Wilksbarre, Pa., and, subsequently, at Elizabeth, N. J. where he penned these letters, and where he died February 4, 1861. John Hughes, to whom these letters were addressed, was also born in Ireland, in 1797, and came to America in 1818. Toward the close of 1825, he was ordained a priest, and shortly after became pastor of a church in Philadelphia. During his stay in this city, he discussed, through the press, with John Breckinridge, D. D., the question —"Is the Protestant religion the religion of Christ?" In 1834, he discussed a second question with Dr. Breckinridge —"Is the Roman Catholic religion hostile to liberty?" In 1842 he became Bishop of New York. In 1850 the See of New York was raised to Metropolitan rank, and Bishop Hughes was made Archbishop, by being invested with the Pallium by the Pope. He revisited Europe several times during his life for various purposes, and, finally, died in New York, Jan. 3, 1864. The letters that we have published as copied from the New York Observer, constitute the first series of letters to Bishop Hughes. Two series followed these. They are all gathered and published in a small volume by the Presbyterian Board of Publication. The whole series of letters were republished in England, Scotland and Ireland, and the volume containing them was translated into the German, French, and Spanish languages; and into some of the languages of the East by missionaries, and thus they have to some extent, made a world-wide impression on the human mind.

Dr. Murray gives the following account of the manner in which his letters were treated by Bishop Hughes. In an appeal to the Roman Catholics, Dr. Murray says:—

"The history of my letters to Bishop Hughes is a very short one. While in my minority, and nearly thirty years ago, I left the Roman Catholic Church. Motives that I need not now detail led me to write those letters, in which I have stated the reasons which induced me to give up the religion of the priest for the religion of the Bible. To these letters Bishop Hughs attempted an indirect reply in ten letters, and broke down in the midst of the discussion at the commencement of last Lent. As these had nothing in them to answer my objections, or to satisfy your inquiries, you asked for something else. Hence the six letters entitled, "Kirwan Unmasked," in which after abuse without stint or sense he breaks down at the close of the sixth and flees to Halifax.

The history of the bishop in the concern is about as short. When my letters first appeared, he could not condescend to answer them! He then commenced answering them without reading them; and without meeting an objection stated by me, he broke down at the tenth letter. When goaded by Catholics and Protestants until he could stand it no longer, he resolved on a direct answer to my objections, and again he broke down at the close of the sixth letter, without answering one of them.

I defy Bishop Hughes and all his mitred brethren on this continent to answer them on Scriptural and common-sense principle, to the satisfaction of any reasonable man."

The letters are perfectly unanswerable; and, perhaps, a more able exposé of the idle and false pretensions of Roman Catholicism was never penned in a more comprehensive manner.

Judah and Israel.

That the land of Palestine will yet become the "glory of all lands," and that the twelve tribes, restored to their ancient inheritance, will become a confederated nation whom the Lord will make a name and a praise among all the people of the earth, under the future rule of Messiah, are events plainly predicted by the prophets. The very same principles of interpretation that we employ to prove the future coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ, are equally applicable to demonstrate the restoration of the scattered tribes; and the language of prophecy is no less explicit in its utterances in regard to a future regathering of the descendants of Jacob, and their resettlement in the Land of Promise, than it is in regard to the future reign of the Son of God upon earth.

Prophecies relative to the humiliation, sufferings, and death of the Lord Jesus are admitted to be most literally fulfilled, while those pertaining to his reign on earth are, by many, mystically explained. So those that predict the scattering of Israel among all nations, and their unparalleled sufferings, while exiles are allowed an exact accomplishment while those that promise a future restoration, and national exaltation, are mystified into shadowy presagements concerning the saved from among the nations.

Many, in their interpretations, have taken it for granted that the prophecies concerning Judah and Israel have been already fulfilled: and to show this they have claimed that every passage has found its exact counterpart, either in the return from the Babylonian captivity, or, failing in this, they have toiled most laboriously, though ineffectually, to make all the rest allude to the post-el church.

If the idea that there are many prophecies to that are yet to be fulfilled were only admitted, a strictly literal accomplishment could be allowed to the [illegible] literally. And one will say:

"Why should not the Jews be admitted? We have seen that so long as we have the history of the Jews to compare with the prophecies concerning them—that is, up to this time, a certain mode of interpreting these prophecies is rendered indispensable: then why not simply continue that same mode of interpretation, when we have prophecy alone not yet illustrated by history? If prophecies concerning the Jews, delivered two or three thousand years ago, be proved, by the history of the interim up to our own days, to have been fulfilled in a literal sense, and, therefore, to demand a literal interpretation; upon what principle can it be alleged that other prophecies, delivered in similar language, by the same prophets, are not to be similarly interpreted in our days? Must God have done, let us say days, all the literal things which he ever intended to do upon the earth? Is there, indeed, anything present in the age of the world we live in, that should change the nature of the prophecy or of its fulfillment? or is it, that unbelief, though forced to yield to the testimony of history, yet refuses to be effectually taught, even by that plain lesson, and will not take God at his word, or trust him for a moment out of her sight? The interpretation, then, which alone will be found to harmonize with all that the prophets have written, is that which makes the land always to mean Judea literally; Judea always to mean the two tribes nationally, with their Israelitish companions; Israel always to mean the whole ten tribes nationally; restoration always to mean the actual return of the twelve tribes to Judea; and David, their own king, always to mean the king of the Jews, of the seed of David, Jesus Christ our Lord.

This interpretation holds good in every point. The present condition of the land of Palestine is well known to be one of extreme barrenness and desolation; whereas it was a land of flocks and herds, a land flowing with milk and honey, the glory of all lands. In this we recognize the literal fulfillment of that clause of the prophecy which predicts desolation; and from the next clause of the prophecy, we confidently anticipate a literal renovation to beauty and fertility, accompanied by a multiplication of beasts upon it as well as men, for the consumption of its produce. In the present condition of the Jewish people, divided and dispersed, we recognize the literal fulfillment of those clauses in the prophecy which imply division and predict dispersion; and from similar clauses, similarly interpreted, we confidently anticipate a similarly literal fulfillment of the promised restoration and reunion. The last individual who was born King of the Jews was Jesus of Nazareth, and he is the literal, lineal descendant of David; and the angel who announced his birth, informed his mother that the Lord God would give unto him the throne of his father David. The people have been preserved upon the earth generation after generation. The king has been preserved in heaven, where he sitteth on the right hand of God. We are plainly informed that he shall come again from heaven in like manner as he went up into heaven. Thus king and people shall meet, and the literal, lineal descendants of David's subjects shall be governed by the literal lineal descendant of king David himself, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

This is the leading theme with the Jewish prophets. The original grant to father Abraham is never lost sight of. It is the climax of every song of triumph, the key-note in reference to which every strain is set, and without which there is no harmony in the whole. Is the Lord, the son of David, the King of the Jews, to return? it is to the Mount of Olives, in the land of Judea. Is he to reign over his people? It is in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem. Are the nations of the earth to be blessed? It is in coming to the light which shall have arisen upon Jerusalem. Yea, many hymns of praise are written in anticipation of this great accomplishment of Israel's blessedness and left ready to be sung by the re-assembled tribes in the land of Judah."

H. MCNEILL.

In prophecy, the church, Israel, and the nations are distinct; equally distinct are they in their entire probationary history, and no less distinct will they be in their several destinies in the ages to come. Prophecies concerning the future glory and exaltation of the church will all be fulfilled in the priestly royalty that awaits it in the kingdom of God. Prophecies concerning Judah and Israel will be fulfilled in the future blessedness of the chosen tribes. And prophecies concerning the nations will be fulfilled in blessing the nations. Known unto God are all his ways from the beginning. The prophets were not proposing enigmas about the church when predicting the future of Israel.

The Kirwan Letters To the Right Rev. John Hughes, Bishop of New York.

LETTER XII.

Conclusion of the whole matter.

My Dear Sir,—The letters which I have had the honor of addressing to you I must now bring to a close. I have stated to you, with all frankness and sincerity, my reasons for leaving the church in which I was born, baptized, and confirmed, and which, on the most mature deliberation, yet prevent me from returning to it. I can assure you, on the word of an Irishman, also, which is far more, on the word of a Christian, that I have had no end in view but the exposure of error and the development of the truth. Thirty years have almost run their course since I left your church; and although not utterly unknown to the men of our age, nor unsolicited, these letters form my first appearance on Popery. Unless some unexpected ripple is excited on the current of my feelings, they will probably form my last.

Now, dear sir, what think you of these reasons? Are they or are they not such as to excuse, to forbid my return to your church? Had I an ear sufficiently acute to hear the decision of your conscience, I believe in my soul that it pronounces them sufficient. Yes I believe that, were it not for your sad doctrine of infallibility, which stereotypes and perpetuates every absurdity, you, and multitudes like you, read of sense and education, would rise and cast a firebrand amid the rubbish which for ages and wickedness have, to the progress of ages, collected around your church, and send its smoke heavenward like the smoke of a furnace. But, sir, I am not ignorant of the slow progress of truth against bigotry—of the great difficulty of exchanging bad opinions and customs, hallowed by usage, for better ones; nor have I read history so inattentively as not to learn from it the great difficulty of converting high ecclesiastics to the knowledge of the truth. The mitre has shielded many a head from the weapons of sense and logic; and under the surplice many a conscience has gone to rest that, without it, would have contended to the death for the faith once delivered to the saints. I must not forget that it was the high-priest who occupied Moses' seat that put our Lord to death; nor can I forget that those claiming to be the successors of Peter and the vicegerents of Christ have been the greatest persecutors of the saints. They have shed Christian blood enough for pope and cardinals to swim in. Would to God that you could see things as I see them; your influence would be strong in freeing our fellow-countrymen from that bondage of the soul which most degrades them. But, despairing of this, I turn from you to the victims of your system.

Roman Catholics, and especially Irish Roman Catholics, to you I now turn. From your bishop, whom, with you, I respect as a man, though I oppose his religious principles, I appeal to you. With you is the power to bring to a perpetual end that system of ghostly tyranny, the most oppressive that man has ever felt. Subjects and sceptres depart together; the farce of the mass will soon end when there are none to witness it or pay for it, and popes, bishops, and priests will soon seek an honest calling when there are none to be edified by their jugglery—when "the alms and the sufferages of the faithful" cease to flow.

Will you give an honest perusal to these letters, and candidly weigh the reasons and the arguments which they contain? That I was born in Ireland is my pride. My sympathies are all with Ireland in its civil, social, and moral degradation. The blood of my kindred, shed to defend it against oppression, mingles with its soil. Your present feelings as to your church I have had, and in all their force. I can entirely appreciate them. I have cordially hated Protestantism and Protestants, and I have seen the time when I regarded the man as my personal enemy who would utter a word against my religion; but those were the days of my youth and of my ignorance. When I became a man, I put away childish things, and my reasons for so doing are spread out before you in these letters, and all I ask of you is kindly and candidly to consider them, and then to act accordingly. If they are not sufficiently cogent to cause you, as they have caused me, to leave the church of Rome, then you will have my entire consent to be oppressed, fleeced, and ridden by your priests as long as you can bear the operation.

Yet permit me to entreat you to give to the subject of these letters the attention which it demands. I know that many of you are sincere, but this is no test of truth. I know many of you to be devout, but so are Mohammedans and pagans. I know that many of you are prepared to make any sacrifice which religion demands; but we may give all our goods to feed the poor, and our bodies to be burned, and yet be strangers to the only true religion. My heart is deeply affected in view of your state. A noble people, you are shut out from the joys to which God invites you. You are hoodwinked and manacled by a system of the grossest fraud and delusion; you are denied the common birthright of a citizen of the world—seeing with your own eyes and hearing with your own ears. You are robbed of the only volume that can guide you, and are forbidden to enter the way of life, save through the gate which is guarded by your priests. Oh, suffer the entreaties of one who suffered as you now do under the galling chains of papal tyranny! Break the fetters which priests have forged, and in which they have bound you. You are now in a land where you may laugh at the excommunications and anathemas of popes, prelates, and priests—where curses fall only on the heads of those who utter them. God has given you his word; let no man filch it from you. God has given you a mind to think for yourselves; let no man usurp the power of thinking for you. God invites you to himself, to receive at his own hand pardon and forgiveness. Oh, submit not to go and pay for these, and on your knees, to a priest who only cares to get your money! Go to the Bible for your religion. Receive nothing as religious truth which is not there taught, and your mental, social, and moral regeneration is commenced.

But you meet this appeal with the objection that I am a deserter from your church, and that I am not, therefore, to be heard. If your priests take any notice at all of these letters, I know well the charges they will ring upon this idea. But was not Peter a deserter from the Jewish church, and must he not be heard on that account? Must a man who renounces error never be heard by those who continue in it? And what think you of the persecution by your church of those who renounce its authority? To say the least of it, it is in bad company. The Jews put Christ to death for deserting the faith of Moses; the Mohammedans put to death any man of their number who reject the Koran for Christ; the Hindoos expel from their society all who rejects their religion for ours; and popery has shed in rivers the blood of those who could not but reject its follies and absurdities. In this happy land, the bull of a pope is as harmless as a lamb, and the thunders of the Vatican have no lightning that injures. Priests may prejudice you against these letters, but they are the interested party; their craft is in danger; and all I ask of you is to give my reasons the candid consideration which you owe to yourself, and which their importance requires.

But you may ask, What do you wish me to give up my religion? Is not mine the oldest religion? Here, I well know, is the invincible argument with many of you, but has it any weight? Are the oldest things always the best? If so, then the Jews were right in resisting Christianity, and the pagans are right in clinging to their false systems, and you do wrong in ever exchanging an old garment or an old house for a new one. But is popery the oldest religion? Oh no. Christianity is older. Popery and Mohammedanism arose at the same time, and centuries after the establishment of Christianity. They are alike corruptions of the religion of Jesus, though the prophet has apostatized farther than the pope. They both appeal to the senses, and are both idolatrous. If the pope has his holy water, the prophet has his holy well. If the one has his holy bones, and coats, and relics, the other has his holy pieces of tapestry from the temple of Mecca. They have alike their pilgrimages, their senseless repetition of prayers, their fasts, their penances, and their external symbols, which alike adorn the church and the mosque. And if the papist can object to Christianity, saying, Is not mine the oldest religion? then can the Mohammedan do the same.

But yours is not the oldest religion. I could here give you the time, did the limits of a letter permit, when the distinguishing doctrines of your church were introduced. The celibacy of the clergy came into the church in the fourth century, purgatory appeared in the seventh, and was admired in the twelfth; auricular confessions and the worship of the Host in the thirteenth; and so on to the end of the chapter.' And instead of wishing you to give up the oldest religion, we wish you only to give up popery for Christianity; to give up the new and to return to the old. All that I have done myself, and all that I desire you to do, is to lay aside everything that pope, bishops, and priests have added to the religion of Jesus, and to embrace that religion just as it is taught in the Bible.

Convinced that you have been deceived by those to whom you have been looking for guidance—that priests have sought your money more than your salvation—that instead of bread they have given you stones, and for eggs serpents—that they have sought to brutalize instead of enlightening you—to enslave instead of elevating you to the liberty with which Christ makes his people free; do any of you inquire as to the course best for you to pursue? If you will take the advice of one that has gone before you in the way, it is cheerfully given. Think not of giving up all religion because of the deceptions of popery. This was one of my mistakes. Take the Bible for your guide; that will not deceive you. It teaches you that you are a sinner; this you should believe and feel. It teaches you that Christ died for sinners, and that his blood cleanses from all sin, and that to escape the wrath and curse of God due to you for sin, the great and the only prerequisites are repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Give up your Missal for the Bible; confess your sins, not to your priests, but to your God; look for pardon and meetness for heaven, not to priestly ablutions, and eating wafers, and extreme unctions, but to the righteousness of Jesus Christ, received by faith, and, in spite of popes, prelates, and priests, life, eternal life, is yours.

Wishing and praying for you all that deliverance from popish thraldom in which I rejoice, and that gospel hope of future blessedness which is my stay and comfort in this vale of tears,

I am, with great respect, yours,

KIRWAN.

NEWS ITEMS.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The number killed by the Michigan railway disaster September 10, near Jackson, Michigan, is fifteen; the number of the wounded is thirty-one.

The number of deaths resulting from the disaster at the fair grounds at Adrian is fifteen. All the wounded are said to be doing well with one exception.

The scarlet fever is raging with such virulence at Peoria, Ill., that the public schools have been closed.

INDIAN LOSSES.

BEAR RIVER, Col., October 11, via RAWLINS, Wy. T., October 13.—Indian reports brought in from the agency by Los Pinos Utes Day that thirty-seven Indians were killed during the fight of the 29th of September and the siege until October 5, the date of General Merritt's arrival.

YELLOW FEVER.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 11.—Twelve cases were reported to the board of health to-day, four of whom were colored. Four deaths occurred.

Total cases reported for the week, 74; whites, 40; colored, 34. Total to date, 1,421. Total deaths from yellow fever for the week, 22; total to date, 425.

MEMPHIS, October 12.—Seven new cases, two of whom are colored, were reported to day. Six interments have occurred since last evening.

MEMPHIS, October 13—NOON.—Three new cases were reported this morning: Louisa Bernard (colored), Frank Hall and William Robinson. Five deaths occurred: Miss Agnes Steele, James Stinette, Annie Dee Cash, Missouri Phillips and Maria Davis, the two last colored.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, Oct. 10.—Advices from Cape Town to Sept. 23, say that the presence of the troops, and Sir Garnet Wolseley's emphatic declaration that England intends to claim the Transvaal have produced a quieting effect on the Boers. Affairs in Zululand are quiet; but a report was current that Dabulamanzi, a brother of Cetywayo, had been killed. It seemed likely that Secocoeni will submit. Moirosi continues defiant.

TROOPS IN IRELAND.

LONDON, Oct. 10.—The Daily Standard of this morning says: "Infantry will be stationed throughout every available portion of County Mayo, Ireland."

The anti-rent movement among the working farmers of Ireland is becoming daily more formidable, and violence is threatened against the land-owners.

At last accounts the English army in Afghanistan was upon the point of entering Cabul, and was already in possession of the citadel commanding the city.

A special from Allahabad says "No quarter was given any one found firing upon the British, and prisoners taken in the fight were shot. The leaders of the mutineers are the Ameer's most trusted friends."

EARTHQUAKE.

Several shocks of earthquake have been felt in southern Hungary and Servia.

The Anti-rent Agitation in Ireland.

Yesterday was a great day for Ireland. At the small town of Navan, County of Meath, occurred an anti-rent demonstration, which cannot fail to arouse the whole Island and produce a profound sensation in England. No less than 20,000 people rallied to receive Mr. Parnell, the leader of the Home-Rulers in Parliament. All the houses were decorated, and "wearing of the green" was universal. His speech was long. The report by cable says: "He "advocated the policy of paying no "rent until the times mend, and also the "abolition of landlords and the rooting "of the people in the soil."

BREVITIES.

Archæology may shortly be able to illustrate one of the most difficult books of the New Testament. Dr. Schliemann is about to ask permission to make excavations among the tumuli of Sardis, near Smyrna, the ancient capital of Lydia, and the site of one of the Seven Churches mentioned in the Book of Revelation.

If the Atlantic Ocean were drained, there would be found a range of mountains running about through the middle of it, and another range from Newfoundland to Iceland. The tops of these are two miles below a sailing-ship, and the valleys between are in some places fifteen miles deep. The mountains are whitened for miles by tiny, creamy shells, while the deep places are red with color.

The eighteen hundredth anniversary of the destruction of Pompeii by the eruption of Vesuvius was celebrated on Saturday September 27, in the city itself, the larger portion of which has been excavated. Professor Ruggieri, the director of the excavations, delivered an address describing the appearance of Pompeii prior to its destruction. The famous letter of the younger Pliny was then read, followed by some commemorative Latin stanzas.

Christopher Mann, of Independence, Mo., celebrated his 103th birthday a few days since by a grand family reunion and dinner. He is now living with his third wife. He has twenty-two children, the oldest a son eighty-six years, and the youngest a daughter of nine years. He has had forty-two grandchildren, eleven great-grand and six great-great-grandchildren, and one great-great-great-grandchild. Seventeen of his children, thirteen of his grandchildren and several of his great-grandchildren were present at the reunion.

DISTRESS IN INDIA.

A special telegram in the Times from Calcutta says that the accounts from Cashmere continue to give a melancholy picture of the starvation and misery prevailing there. The Maharajah and his officers appear to be working well, and the Punjaub Government is doing its best to forward supplies; but little improvement in the situation can be looked for until the arrival of the rice harvest. The dispatch adds that the state of things in Eastern Bengal still causes some anxiety to the local authorities, but it is hoped the distress will not attain serious proportions.

PALESTINE FOR THE JEWS.

The Jewish Chronicle, commenting on a recent letter in the Alliance Israelite, says: "Who can doubt that in exchange for a substantial fixed tribute, the Sultan would willingly part with the power of nominating Pashas to misadminister Palestine, or that under good government the land might easily pay an increased tribute? The solution of the Turkish problem evidently is the substitution of tributary States for provinces governed directly from Constantinople. This process is still to be begun in Palestine and Armenia. The Armenian Commonwealth would be Christian, but the state formed out of Palestine might well be Jewish. No sentiment rallies round Palestine so strongly as the Jewish sentiment."

Traveling Home.

Through the dark path of sorrow which Jesus has trod,
Thy feeble once wander, our Father and God;
And the thick clouds that gather but turn us away
From the waste howling desert where he could not stay.

From the cold world that knoweth and loveth its own,
Where Jesus was hated, rejected, unknown;
We will cheerfully hasten, rejoicing to be Counted worthy to Suffer, Lord Jesus, for Thee.

In the fierce hour that tricth the children of men—
In the hour of temptation, oh! succor us then;
Let the weak and the feeble find under thine arm,
In the blast of the terrible, shelter from storm.

When the proud are exalted, and seated on high,
When hostile and desperate sorrow draw nigh;
When the hearts of all others are failing for fear,
Then we lift up our heads, for the glory is near.

Oh! hasten thy coming, we long for the day—
Bright Star of the Morning, no longer delay;
Let the groaning creation from sorrow be free,
And the purchased possession be gathered to Thee.

LETTER DRAWER.

To the dear ones of the like precious faith:—Dear brethren and sisters, once more I give report through our paper. Since my last report of my success in preaching the word, I have visited Clinton county, Ind. Had some good meetings and the brethren wrought up and encouraged, and two others immersed into the Christ and added to them. I held some meetings at the Cure schoolhouse, and two meetings at Circleville, one at King's Corner's, two at or near Kirklin. Had a good turnout and most of the time good order. Dear brother Chaplin, I am rejoiced to tell you I got twenty-one dollars subscribed to THE RESTITUTION, for I know you need it so much to carry on the paper we so dearly prize. May it still go forth to gladden the homes of the dear brethren. Enclosed you will find a money order for twenty-one dollars. Since I sent the list, I received fifty cents for three months, to be sent to Hillsburg with the other two. I will do all I can for the paper. Your brother in Christ,

J. S. HATCH.

Editor Restitution:—I would like you to send THE RESTITUTION to my daughter, Mrs. M. F. Jordan, Middleville, Michigan, for which I enclose two dollars, and one dollar as a free-will offering. I can't tell you how I prize your good paper. I feel anxious for all to read it. It is just what is needed in these times. I may send for another soon, for some one else. My son takes it; he is in Chicago. He feels anxious to do something for God's Holy Word, and warn the sleeping ones of the danger they are in, and I don't know any better way than to help sustain THE RESTITUTION, for there are many that will pick up a paper to read, who would not think of reading their Bible, and so be led to investigate the truth to see if these things be true. We are truly living in perilous times and need to have on the whole armor of God; also to examine ourselves daily to see if we be in the faith, not forgetting the assembling of ourselves together to talk of the things concerning the kingdom of God and Christ. May God help you and give you courage to go on in the blessed work of proclaiming his word to the world. I hope everyone that has an interest in these things will not fail to put in their mite. It is the Lord's money and it is dangerous for us to withhold it from doing good. Woe unto that steward that fails to make use of his or her talents. If we can't write nor talk we can help those who can, for the harvest truly is great but the laborers are few. God help us all to be bold for the truth regardless of what the world thinks of us. The doctrine of the kingdom is not popular nor never was, but if God is for us who can be against us.

Yours in hope of an entrance into everlasting kingdom.

MRS. M. A. FINE.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find one dollar, for which, please give me credit on the arrears of the paper. I love the paper called THE RESTITUTION, and, for one, feel to long for the time of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. Acts iii. 21. Brethren and sisters in Christ Jesus our Lord, the world at the present time speaks forth with a voice of warning that our Savior is near, very nearly ready to come and receive the bride. O God, our Father, may we by thy assisting grace, so live that we may be counted worthy of a place in thy kingdom. Let us bear in mind that our fellow beings are passing away to the place where all is darkness, waiting for the verdict, as it were. O Jesus help us, as members of thy body, to ever be found striving for the faith of the gospel, realizing that it (the gospel) is the power by which we are saved through Christ Jesus.

Brethren, I, for one, feel sorrowful when I meditate on my past life. Have I, methinks, done all in my power that I could do for the sake of the gospel? I am afraid that I have not. But, by the assisting grace of God, I will from now on (until) - - - ever be found more faithful in doing my several duties for the truth's sake. Brethren, it will not do to neglect these duties that devolve upon us as Christians. Just so sure as we become negligent and forget our duty to God for his goodness towards us, just so sure we will be left out of the kingdom. How sad, how sad a thought to contemplate upon. Brethren, let us nerve up ourselves anew for the battle, feeling to realize that our redemption draweth near. I know temptations are thick on every side, but let us pray God to help us to overcome the world and all the lusts thereof.

Brethren, one of my near neighbors was in my place of business lighting his cigar, and, as he was about to light the tempting weed, he says to me: "Nelson, you are a lucky man that you do not use tobacco." He made some such an expression. Yes, I feel to praise and glorify God that I have overcome the terrible and disagreeable habit of using the nasty weed. I was a slave to it for about fifteen years. Brethren, here is a space of time for me to contemplate upon. For fifteen years, spending, on an average, for chewing and smoking, about twenty-five cents per day or more, every day during the time, which would average about $1.75 per week, and about one hundred per year, and for the fifteen years, nearly fifteen hundred dollars. Brethren, just think of this amount of money paid out for this useless weed! Will God bless me for this act? Methinks not. How can he when I have been doing myself an injustice, both physically and also financially? and the terrible example before our children! O brethren, there is a wrong here sure. The father will chew the weed before his son, and then tell his son to never chew the nasty weed; it looks wrong. Father, how can you tell your son to never chew or smoke and then set the example right before his eyes? Is it any wonder so many young boys use the nasty weed? Brother, do you belong to those that are striving for the Abrahamic faith? If so, do you set this terrible example before your offspring? Do you think God will bless you in so doing? Is this working out our own salvation with fear and trembling? Brethren in Christ, meditate. Is this abstaining from all filthy lucre? Does not Jesus want us to live here on this earth under this present dispensation, as pure and as free from sin and filthiness of flesh as when we enter the eternal haven of rest and peace and joy? Remember, brethren, Jesus is our pattern. This I say, then, walk in the spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh. Now, the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanliness, lasciviousness, Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like, of which I tell you before, as I have also told you in times past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Be not deceived, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

Your brother in Christ, patiently waiting,

E. O. NELSON.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find one dollar to apply on my subscription. Am thankful that you have continued the paper to my address and will try to be more prompt in the future. I am the only one of like faith around here, and THE RESTITUTION is ever welcome, but I do not always have time to read the long doctrinal pieces, as I have a large family and do not have much time for reading. But I love to read the short practical pieces. They give me encouragement for the duties and trials of life. I will close, wishing the paper success, and pray you may be encouraged from day to day in your arduous duties. I remain your sister in Christ,

SARAH S. HADDEN.

Editor Restitution: Enclosed please find one dollar for THE RESTITUTION six months to be sent to Jos. H. Douglass, Hortonville, Outagamie county, Wis. Also, by special request, to send back numbers to commence with Sep. 24, No. 26.

Believing as I do, and as strongly maintain, that only the honest ones and seekers after truth, can have and share in the blessedness of Christ's kingdom in the future age. Christ and his kingdom, was never appointed by God for a rebellious race of human beings. All such can have part or lot in the matter. God has no use for such a class of human beings, but he will destroy them. Says Paul—"For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die, but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live," Rom. viii. 13.

It may be of some interest to the readers of THE RESTITUTION for me to give a brief report of this case. In fact, it has not been my fortune to come across a case of this kind, that I was so deeply interested in as the one I am about to relate—thus, about one year ago while traveling the country I chanced to stop over night (as my custom is) with our friend and Bro. Douglass. I found him and his wife, to be kind and hospitable to strangers. Also, I found them to be deeply interested in religious matters, having been converted as the theory goes, about one year previous and had joined the Baptist Church. Both of them being young in the cause, and of an inquiring and investigating mind, I concluded I had struck a good point, and in the right place. There were many questions asked relative to Bible doctrines, and as many answers accordingly. Like Paul, Acts xvii. 2-3. I reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging things that pertain to the gospel of Christ. With marked and profound attention did they listen to me, and seemingly were they eager to receive the truth as laid down in the Bible—not as the theology of the day, in tradition and superstition. Fortunately I had some copies of THE RESTITUTION with me, and left them with them, and requested them to ponder well what they read. Also, requesting them to subscribe for THE RESTITUTION at least six months, knowing full well that such class of minds will be sure to continue their subscription to THE RESTITUTION Last week while traveling in that direction I made it a point to stop over night with the family.

Almost the first conversation with Bro. Douglass was in regard to THE RESTITUTION, and Bro. Douglass saying to me, he intended to send for THE RESTITUTION shortly—I said to him give me the dollar and I will send for it in your place, thus you have the result. Hoping that it will prove a success, and a blessing to the family, and be the means of educating them in the true principles and doctrines of the Bible, is the prayer of your brother,

G. F. MITCHELL.

SELECTIONS.

The Pestilence.

Before him went the pestilence, and burning diseases went forth at his feet. Hab. iii. 5. Mar.

There is something frightful in the ravages of the various pestilences that century after century ever since the historic period began have, under the subordinate reign of sin and satan, been permitted of God to scourge mankind. They have strewn the earth with corpses—filled the race with terror, and generally been preceded or accompanied with the most remarkable phenomena in the heavens and on sea and land. The malignant aspect of these visitations casts a dark shadow over the track of human life, and one has but to gather them up in order, as we have just done for a stable period of 2,000 years, and contemplate the sorrowful and smitten multitudes in their wretchedness, and he is compelled to sup on horrors. It seems as if some imperial demon, clothed with power to smite the race, was permitted to stalk abroad and devour, a demon that never cries, "Enough."

So far as I can discover the principal and most deadly plagues, epidemics, and zymotic diseases known are Oriental Plague, Sweating Sickness, Small-pox, and Cholera, and perhaps to these may be added Diptheria, Yellow Fever, and Scarlatina. It is probable that the Black Death, a name given to the chief pestilence of the middle ages, is a malignant form of the old plague and identical with it. The Sweating Sickness that ravaged Europe in other centuries was also a modified form of the Eastern Plague, while some writers have styled the Yellow Fever the "American plague," and high medical authorities all agree that Diptheria is akin to the Plague, has the same origin, and possesses similar characteristics. All these seem to have their birth in an atmosphere poisoned with miasm, deadly vapor from the earth, odors from filth and decayed matter, excess, or lack of ozone, deficiency of electricity, chemical changes, etc., the poison appearing at times to be specific and to be in some mysterious way transfused into the human body suddenly and with such virulence as to destroy life as quickly as if one had swallowed corrosive sublimate. Witness the plague of A. D. 680, when during its ravages Gregory the Great ordered a solemn procession in view of the calamity, and while the multitudes were marching and chanting eighty persons fell dead in the streets of Rome. In the first outbreak of the cholera in Granjam, India, in 1781, scores of British soldiers, among whom it suddenly appeared, fell dead on the first attack as it shot. How mortal are such pestilences! Who can put a finger on the cause? Who can explain them?

Concerning the mortality of some pestilences it is absolutely incredible. In many occurrences of Small-pox and Yellow Fever the death rate was 75 and 80 per cent., while in the Plague it was 90 per cent. In the epidemics of the middle age the mortality was so great that whole cities, towns, and villages were depopulated, dwellings left without occupants or owners went to decay, grass grew in the streets, cattle died, the sea was covered with dead fish, mould and blight fell on pastures, the air was sickly, and the sun burned dim.

At the time of the threatened outbreak of the Oriental Plague in Southeast Russia, in the winter of 1878, an Italian physician and parliamentarian said that should this awful scourge visit Europe, one third of its inhabitants would be swept away. His ominous prediction is sustained by human experience in bygone centuries. The pestilence of A. D. 542-93, says Procopius, almost destroyed the human race. By the pestilences of A. D. 1125 one-third of the people of Europe and the East perished. In A. D. 1181 Germany lost half of its inhabitants. In A. D. 1213 in Italy scarce one-tenth of the inhabitants survived. By the Black Death twenty millions of people perished in Asia in one year, and from one-half to two-thirds of the human race perished in about eight years. In A. D. 1449 scarce a third of the human race was left alive so did plagues devour mankind. In A. D. 1463 half the people of Denmark died of Sweating Sickness. Between 1667 and 1677 one-third or more, probably one-half of all the people of Europe were swept off the face of the earth by pestilences. In A. D. 1656 in Naples 240,000 died of the plague and only 50,000 survived. In A. D. 1679 four millions died of the plague. In A. D. 1781 a billious plague following famine destroyed millions of people in India. In 1783 in Cairo from 1,500 to 2,000 corpses were carried out in one day, while as late as 1808 in Constantinople the death rate by cholera was 2,000 a day. It was a common thing in the past centuries for this last named city to lose in a single year from 150,000 to 200,000 of her miserable inhabitants by some desolating plague. Think of such bills of mortality as occurring in New York, Chicago or Philadelphia! Think of the panic, the terror, the agony, the sorrow, and how dreadful is the pestilence by which these potent agencies shovel our poor race of mortals into the tomb.

It is seen that there is good ground for the universal and wide spread alarm among all the nations at the reappearance of the Oriental plague in parts of Russia last winter. Small-pox is partly vanquished, Cholera appears to have spent its rage on civilized nations, and in Europe and Armenia to mitigated its severity. But we know not what shapes of horror the old Black Death would take on should it become epidemic from Vienna to San Francisco. It is folly to say there is no danger. There is great danger. Every year since 1869 this scourge has spread out further west from its endemic home in Mesopotamia; ninety in 100 of all who are struck with it die, and thus far medical skill of the highest type avails nothing to cure. No remedy is found for it.

As for the huge maximum figures of the deaths by epidemics, they are simply awful. We stare at them, but find it impossible to realize their terrible verity. For example take small-pox. It is estimated that no less than 45,000,000 of our race perished in Europe and the East by this scourge previous to the discovery of vaccination by Dr. Edward Jenner, of England, in 1798. Between the years A. D. 1388 and 1400 the Black Death took off from 60,000,000 to 100,000,000 in Asia, Europe, and Africa. The total Asiatic Cholera statistics we have not seen, but it is declared that after the outbreak of this pestilence in Asia in 1817 in only fourteen years there perished there 18,000,000 of people. It is safe to estimate the total victims to Cholera during the last sixty years at 30,000,000 or 50,000,000.

Men know not what is before them. The learning of the world to day fears the approach of a severe pestilential period, and there are many signs of the in-coming of such a calamitous time. It is a fact that such visitations are quite periodical, and recur after certain cycles, and the dates show such a time at hand. Of one thing I am certain, viz., pestilence comes not by chance, haphazard, accident, of filth, or any human cause. It is extra-mundane, extra-natural, nay almost preternatural. Filth in nature may provoke and incite it, but God for sin also sends it. 2 Sam. xxiv. 15. There are seasons and times when an unbalanced electric condition, a pestilential state, of the all-deadly vapors bursting out of the bowels of the sick earth, or what is more probable than all, some undefinable and malignant action of the mysterious solar orb will bring in pestilence, and plague, with blight, drought, and famine; and when universal secondary cause exists, no hand of man can stay the plague, no quarantine shut it out, no cordon of soldiers, no medical skill bar its awful way. It will march forth over the earth as Satan marched forth from the presence of Deity, an avenging angel. Job i, 2. Surely as Wesley says, "Pestilence and famine signify the wrath to come." But how happy are all who have the promise.

"Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night—nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day." Psa. xci. If dark days come and a great shadow of pain and sorrow falls over the earth as in olden years, let us claim the divine promise. It is sweet and safe to have underneath in such an hour, the strong, unfailing almighty arm.—D. T. Taylor.

Love is in proportion to faith; little faith, little love; much faith, much love; perfect faith, perfect love. Perfect faith can only exist in connection with perfect surrender to God.

POETRY.

Water.

W. C. MONCRIEFF.

Through wall translucent, like a diamond pure
How flashes it in noon-tide rayt
So beautiful that one might say,
Could maiden young, philosopher, or boor,
With visage pale, or as the Moor,
For gift more choice in any language pray?

A thousand times the molten gem has met
our gaze;
And now 'tis commonplace indeed,
And few the lovely vision heed;
But how the dullest would admire and praise,
If for the first time in his days,
He saw it purling through a grassy mead!

Genius has sung the praise of festive wine,
In strains replete with force and fire;
But rather strike the tuneful lyre,
To celebrate in numbers more divine,
Above the red blood of the vine,
What kindness neither fumes of lust nor ire;

What cools the fevered lips and burning brow,
When sickness racks the weary frame;
Or sadness, or the blight of shame,
Withers the heart, like leaves upon the bough;
Ah then! the sufferers allow,
It brings to nought the vintage most in fame.

Behold, or in the wild, or on the deep,
One theft of that which thirst subdues;
He dreameth not, when sleep unveils its clues,
Of fragrant wines, but cataracts that leap,
And lakes, and rills, and clouds that weep;
And drinks long draughts at wells his fancy views.

Fresh at the dawn of sublunary things,
From the Omnific hand it flowed,
To crown with verdure man's abode;
And from the rocky depths gush forth in springs
Where health might dip its buoyant wings,
Nor feel one pang its virgin bloom corrode.

But lured by stimulants that heat the brain,
The child of earth would turn from these,
And drinking, beckon round him woes,
That held him captive in an iron chain;
And still, for warnings plead in vain,
Man quaff the cup, and lift in darkness close.

Oh! that the race who pride themselves on mind,
Out-reaching theirs that roam the dale,
Would ever appetite prevail;
And vigor and refreshment find;
Ah! lessons we human art combined:—
Wrongs would decay, and thousands cease to wail.

The Talents—Five, Two and One.

Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh. For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, and to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey. Matt. xxv. 13, 14, &c.

How full of instruction are the lessons taught in our Lord's parables. Surely he taught as never man taught—what a motive power to diligence and to activity, yea, perseverance even to the end of our pilgrimage. That this parable relates to the believers of the gospel during the times of the Gentiles there can be no doubt, that he spoke of himself as the man taking a journey into a far country, corresponds with Luke xix. 12, where he calls himself the nobleman—the fact, just so sure as he went away, just so sure will he come again and reckon with his servants, and require a strict account of each individual, precisely the same of him or her who has the one, as of him who has the five. It is not the number of the talents or the ability he has endowed us with, that he calls us to an account, but for the improvement. The injunction is, occupy till I come. At his coming he will reward every one as his works shall be.

Do I understand you to say that I, a poor, obscure layman, is as responsible for the improvement of the ability God has given me, as the man who preaches the gospel? Precisely so. He will not call you to account for not preaching the gospel, if he has not called and endowed you with ability to do it! But he will call you to a strict account for not supporting the man who does preach the gospel. How fearfully responsible are many amongst us for the covetous manner in which they give to God's servants! Let us understand you. Do you say God will hold me responsible for Brother A. not preaching the gospel? Yes, that's the point exactly, if you have the means and refuse to give. A is a poor man, has a family to support, he is bound by the word of God to provide for his family before preaching; for he that does not provide for his own household has denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel. Stand from under you that are stinting the servants of Jesus, and are heaping up treasures for the last days.

This parable has special reference to the kingdom of heaven. It is essentially important that we understand the teaching of the Scriptures in relation to the kingdom. There are many of Christ's sayings that are a perfect enigma without a correct understanding of what constitutes the kingdom; any mystical principal of interpretation makes confusion worse confounded. But, understanding it to be a literal kingdom, composed of five elements, and that there will be positions to be filled, graded from the King (the Lord Jesus Christ) down to the subjects or door-keeper in the house of our God, then all is easy of comprehension or understanding.

A few quotations with a few words of explanation will aid us in our understanding. Let us state a case: We select the best, the wisest and smartest men to fill the highest and the most responsible offices in our government, do we not? Will God be any less wise or less particular? I trow not. That was a shrewd request made to our Lord by the mother of Zebedee's children—grant that my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand and the other on thy left in thy kingdom. I think mother Zebedee understood the make-up of God's kingdom much better than Orthodox theologians. The awards in the kingdom will be according to capacity or ability and faithfulness as we have improved our talents. But what of those who know their Master's will and do it not? They will be beaten with many stripes. See the non-improvement of the one talent in connection with our text. But what of the one who knew it not and did it not? He is to be beaten with few stripes. Again, he will be saved so as by fire, but his works shall be burned up. These last named will be gathered into the kingdom as subjects, but do not attain unto a rulership. If we adopt the principal of merit and demerit upon, or by the rule, of knowing and not knowing, and doing and not doing, then all is clear, and infinite wisdom and justice shines forth most gloriously.

A few reflections before going further. If the man with the two talents, or of less capacity, be filled to overflowing, he will be just as happy as the man with five talents. A little plainer still: The humble follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, gathered into the fold in our day, washed in Jesus' blood, will be as happy as Abraham, David or Paul, yet they will not all as high a position. Abraham is called the father of the faithful, and in him and his seed—the Christ—all nations are to be blessed. David is to be a prince or king over Israel. Ezek. xxxviii. 24. The twelve apostles are to be associated with Christ as his cabinet; but what of Paul? He was the apostle of the Gentiles. It is only fair to conclude he will have a rulership over the Gentiles, which will far surpass a rulership over one of the tribes of Israel.

What of the chronology of the parable, or the time of our recompense of reward? When does the time begin with each individual, and when are the awards given? When we hear the gospel or the good news of the kingdom, or, in other words, the word of the kingdom, and understand it, then God holds us responsible, and from that time the reckoning begins and continues through our pilgrimage till we fall asleep in Jesus or remain up to the time of his coming, in the clouds of heaven, to take away his people. This is the first resurrection which Paul was so anxious to attain unto. God knoweth them that are his. They are changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. No necessity, no time nor place for a court of judicature. A great assize of just and unjust. Every one's account is adjusted in the mind of the judge; none but the righteous quick and dead will hear and obey the joyful summons: Away to meet him in the air. Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Well and truly does the Savior enjoin upon his people watchfulness. Eternal vigilance is the price of the kingdom of God.

A few thoughts upon the non-improvement of the one talent. Was the one who received it a Christian? Most certainly. He was a servant, so says the Word, but so far as the record goes he made no improvement. He went and hid his Lord's money. Fearful, indeed, is the statement! It is absolutely true even in our day, and among our people. But he that had received the one talent went and digged in the earth and hid his Lord's money. Verse 18. How suggestive are these words, went and digged in the earth. How many at the present moment profess to believe the Lord is soon coming that are digging in the earth? (let us take off the figure); are wholly absorbed in schemes for accumulating wealth, who never, or but seldom have a word to say about pure Bible Christianity, especially the soon-coming of our blessed Lord; who make no sacrifices for the truth; who give but little for the spread of the gospel and less to the poor, but will make a good bargain every time; who live at their ease, have fine farms, have a good fund in government bonds or bank stocks or of first mortgages; who do not hesitate to take a little usury or unlawful interest, and wash their hands in innocency, and excuse themselves by saying: It's the Gentile custom; I am a money broker; I must make all the money I can out of what I have got. Are you not a little severe? I do not mean to be. If I did not know these things to be true I should not speak thus plainly.

I have named but the one item included in digging in the earth and hiding our Lord's money, or our talent. All the wrongs we are guilty of are, or may be, included under the same figure of speech—digging in the earth. The Scriptures, in their teaching, cover the whole ground. They tell us plainly what we must do to be saved, and, as plainly and as positive what we must not do. To our own Master we stand or fall. Let us heed the injunction in our text, Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.

Feet Washing.

If I then your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. John xiii. 14

Dear Realization:—With your permission I will now endeavor to answer some questions asked by a stranger brother of Oskaloosa, Kansas.

Brother, I have delayed this long because cares are many and sorrows very great. You ask "if feet washing are some of the all things to teach and observe?" In one sense I believe they are, but not, however, in the sense to which you refer. Would it not be very unnecessary at the present day and age of the world, for the brethren and sisters to assemble together to wash each others feet, when there was no necessity for the action, and each one able or should be able before assembling, to purify and cleanse their own; it would be utter absurdity.

In those eastern countries in the time of Christ it was very different from the present time. Most of the journeys were accomplished on foot, and the only protection to the feet were sandals, scarce nothing but a strip of leather bound to the bottom of the feet. Hence, it was customary, and necessary also, when friends came from a distance, to set before them water to wash their tired and dusty feet, and if the guests were honored ones, or the people kindly disposed the act was done by the host or hostess.

Jesus, our blessed example, taught the act as a lesson of charity and humility, and perhaps of faith also, as we have no part with him unless we observe the lessons he teaches. "If I then your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet." Lord and Master! King of Kings! to bow in meek humility to such an humble task. What a lesson! Who of all the followers of the blessed Jesus could hesitate or shrink one moment from duty after such a lesson from such a teacher?

And how shall we carry out this plan in this age? The writer must make practical this lesson for the next few weeks. I must leave my home and family and wash the feet, aye, and the body also, of a dear aged sufferer, who has no other one to do it for her. Duty calls loudest in that direction, and it is only in the strength of the Lord that I dare attempt in my state of health, to preform the task. "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Christ was too wise to give this command for a mere form, when he knew so well the great necessity for such practice, and that there would be in all time.

And in those days how grateful it must have seemed to the weary, aged pilgrims, journeying far, to have their feet washed and refreshed with kindly hands and cooling water. I have sometimes tried the efficacy of this remedy on my dear old father's feet after some long walk or weary day of unusual toil; how gratefully refreshing it seemed to him, and rested those tired feet so much.

Whenever and wherever duty calls, "Wash ye one another's feet." Many a sufferer who now sleeps, might still be with us if this beautiful and charitable example of Christ was carried out to a greater extent. But some poor creatures must fall into the tomb with face scarcely washed, to say nothing of the feet. "Wash ye one another's feet;" not those of the well and strong, but the burning feet of the feverish sufferer, teach it to your children, and your children's children. "For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done," saith our blessed unerring guide.

Yes, brother, I am a strong believer in feet washing. No I am not a relative of Eld. D. P. Hall, that I know of. Yes, L. H. Chase, and also his brother, A. Chase, is sleeping. I believe I have answered your questions, and to the best of my humble ability at this time.

As regards the articles you wish me to pen, I will endeavor to do so if ever the opportunity appears, but, I also am a woman cumbered with many cares, and at present many sorrows and trials, but with the Psalmist I can say, "Be merciful unto me O God, be merciful unto me; for my soul trusteth in thee, yea, in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge until these calamities be overpast." I am not much of a worker for Christ, so do not misjudge me. The little I do has to come in with the daily cares and trials, but so little, I fear I am a very unprofitable servant. But I have great faith in the dear Father, and if he appoints me even a door-keeper's place in his kingdom it is well. His will not mine.

Please accept my sincere thanks for your brief but kind words. Such appreciation fills my soul with gratitude, and helps me feel that the little I write is not all in vain.

Fraternally yours,
MRS. O. P. HALL.

What is Christianity.

I held a discussion lately with a public lecturer upon the proposition, "Resolved, that Christianity has done more harm than good." I, of course, denied. After the affirmative had opened by a tirade against the so-called Christianity, I called for a definition of Christianity. My opponent agreed with me that Christianity proper was the doctrines put forth by the Christ, whether human or divine. Second—What were this Christ's doctrines? I opened the Divine record and showed what Christ and his apostles taught. Then I asked the speaker and the audience, whether those doctrines practiced could do harm? All agreed that those doctrines would make the world better. Then, said I, the debate is closed. If those doctrines promulgated by Christ and his apostles could do no harm, then they never did do any harm.

Then the opposition tried to force the teaching and acts of the so-called churches upon me. No sir, said I, I am not here defending churchianity, but Christianity. That we must distinguish between things that are different. That the persecutions and murders committed in the name of Christ, was a lack of Christianity. That there had been a conversion of the church (to the world). That there was a conversion of the world promised, which was next in order. That the church would finally convert the world.

The second speech was putting forth science as the Savior of the world, to which I replied by calling for evidence that science (so called) had ever benefited the human family. I showed that it had failed to relieve want, to prevent war! Failed to relieve famine, pestilence and death! That it had failed under all the specifications of the indictment! That it had taken the bow and arrow out of our fore-fathers' hands and had replaced it by a "Krupp Gun" that would slay a thousand lives to the one by the arrow! It had failed to give us a righteous government! Failed to give us peace, harmony and plenty! It has failed to utilize the billions of fish in the sea to the benefit of the famine stricken millions of China and Brazil!

Science is the child of yesterday; but from the beginning of the world men have lived by faith. All our dearest interests lie beyond the domains of science in the regions of faith.

The only science which can make you happy, which can bestow peace of mind, nerve you to conquer your evil habits, enable you to live a holy and happy life, and to die with a blessed hope of a glorious resurrection. You know there is no science which makes any such offers, or which you would believe if it did. But the Bible unfolds a science which does, and enables you to believe it too.

Go (so-called science) to Christianity and learn of the father of sciences, and you will then make martyrs that can endure the flame, put all theories to shame, compared with the great scientist, who introduced the only real science—Christianity. Your brother,

J. S. LAWYER.

The Psalms.

He only who knows the number of the waves of the ocean, and the abundance of tears in the human eye, he who sees the sighs of the heart before they are uttered, and hears them still when they are hushed into silence—he alone can tell how many holy emotions, how many heavenly vibrations, have been produced and will ever be produced in the souls of men by the reverberation of these marvelous strains, of these predestinated hymns, read, meditated, sung, in every hour of the day and night, in every winding of the vale of tears. The Psalter of David is like a mystic harpe hung on the walls of the true Zion. Under the breath of the Spirit of God, it sends forth its infinite varieties of devotion, which, rolling on from echo to echo, from soul to soul, awakes in each a separate note mingling in that one prolonged voice of thankfulness and penitence, praise and prayer.—Herbert.

SELECTIONS.

The Rainbow.

God's Evergreens.

"We all do fade as a leaf." True, and as a Scottish divine well remarks, the moment of our birth is but the commencement of our decay. We are in the land of the dying rather that of the living.

"The air is full of farewells to the dying,
And mourning for the dead:
The heart of Rachel for her children crying,
Will not be comforted."

We have but to look at the falling leaves to see our own condition. Pass through the woods at the close of autumn. See around the once luxuriant but now almost naked trees, the heaps of scored and withered leaves! Mark how the few remaining on the branches tremble in the air, ready to be carried away with the next most gentle breeze, and you have a fit emblem of the autumnal phase of life. From the great tree to which we hang how many are being swept! How many are ready to fall! How slight a breeze serves to hurl us to destruction! And in consequence of this incessant fading and falling around us, we in our unbelief, have come to think that it will be ever thus. So accustomed are we to burying our dead, that the grave is regarded as the sure receptacle of all. We have gazed so long and sadly upon the tender vine and the strong, wide spreading oak, alike bereft of their foliage, that we have forgotten the laurel and the holly that defy the wintry blast. Yet because grim death has reigned so long, shall he always sway the scepter? Shall every leaf be swept from the great tree of life ere the eternal summer dawn to save some from destruction? In all God's vineyard shall there be no evergreens to show forth his praise? Yes, certainly, is our exulting reply. We are taught even by natural things. When winter comes and other trees are bare, when there is left no trace of their once rich foliage, there are still the evergreens looking fresh and bright, whose leaves have not faded and fallen with the rest.

And natural things always teach us concerning the spiritual. The Lord has his evergreens. He knows them. He will preserve them from the biting frosts of winter, so their leaves shall not wither, but they shall live for ever. More loudly and fiercely the cruel blasts may blow, sweeping a thousand from our side, and ten thousand from our right hand! With renewed energy may death thrust in his sickle, fearful as the time approaches lest too many escape his grasp! Wider may open the yawning grave, and more sadly toll the muffled bell! Oftener and oftener may we have to bear our beloved ones to their quiet resting place, feeling that we ourselves, it may be, are well nigh falling. Still will we say in joyful confidence and amidst all, "We shall not all sleep."

Not all sleep? No; heaven and earth may pass away, but God's sure word remains. We shall not all fade and fall as the leaf; but just as the laurel, and the mistletoe, and the bright green holly decorate our Christmas homes, so on his second appearing shall the Lord's evergreens adorn the marriage festival of the Lamb. And we should let the natural evergreens tell not only of the joy and and gratitude that fill our hearts in celebrating the first advent of the Lord Jesus, but of our faith and hope that we, as the Lord's spiritual evergreens, shall be preserved unto his coming, that we shall not see death, though living in the midst of the dying. We should let them speak to our hearts of the Lord's power to keep us, and be to us as pledges of what he will yet do for his church.

Glorious hope, bearing us up under the heavy trials of life! Precious balm, binding up our breaking hearts! Beautiful star of promise, illumining the long dark night!

We shall not all die, for the Lord of life appears. He comes to judge the quick, as well as the dead. He comes to be not only the resurrection of the dead, but the life of the living, who will therefore never die. (John xi. 25.) They will not be unclothed, but clothed upon (2 Cor. v. 4), and will triumph not in, but over death. Is it asked who will these redeemed ones be? Not those whose hearts are in the grave. None, in the Lord's love and wisdom, die having cherished the hope of life. We do not question the working of his providence. But we know that though individuals may fall, the hope belongs to God's people as a body, and will be rewarded as it is cherished. But if the heart be fixed on death, death will surely come. The reward can come to those only who have looked and striven for it. Alas, for thee, our brother, who assignest victory to the enemy, for thou must then submit. Alas, for thee, who submittest for the glorious hope of life in Christ the woful sound of death! Death has no part in the glad tidings of great joy. It forms no portion of the inheritance of the saints in light. It follows in the train of sin and Satan, and reigns but in the absence of the Lord of life and glory. It is suffered that its final conquest may be greater. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. xv. 26. The blood of every sleeping saint calls to the Lord from the ground, avenge me of mine adversary. And shall we, seeking to die, enter into covenant with the oppressor who has laid them low? God forbid! Let us rather remember and believe amid the surrounding faithlessness and gloom that we shall not all sleep. And when he who is our life appears, our faith will be rewarded, our hope realized in the gathering of the evergreens in the celebration of his second advent. Then when the last terrible blast sweeps every branch of the tree that already bends mourning to the earth like the willow, the leaf of those thus gathered will be fresh and green, no more fading for the sun of righteousness will have arisen with healing in his wings. Blessed are they that have this hope, and hold it fast to the end!

"Oh then the heavenly sun shall rise,
The heavenly dews descend,
And crown them for the victor's prize
With joys that never end."

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Butler: The greatest friend of Truth is Time.

Tennyson: More things are wrought by prayer than the world dreams of.

THINGS OF TO-DAY.

Burden not thy soul with sadness;
Make a wiser choice,
Drink the wine of life with gladness:
What doth bid thee, man "forbear?"
In to-day's bright sunlight basking,
Leave to-morrow's cares about;
Spoil not present joys by asking,
"Who shall roll away the stone?"

Fuller: Venture not to the utmost bounds of even lawful pleasures; the limits of good and evil join.

A man's virtues should be measured, not by his occasional exertions, but by the doings of his ordinary life.

One great and kindling thought from a retired and obscure man, may live when thrones are fallen, and the memory of those who filled them obliterated, and like an undying fire may illuminate and quicken all future generations.

There is no trial so severe but God's grace is sufficient; no night so dark that the light of his countenance can not dispell the gloom; no sorrow so deep that his voice cannot soothe and comfort: none lying so low his hand cannot reach them; none so weak but in him they may be strong.

Therefore look up; be of good cheer;
The day of peace and rest is near;
A few more weeks of hope and fears,
Of light and darkness, joy and tears,
And we with all the blest shall come
To "our reward, our crown, our home."

New York Evangelist: Short as life is, it is the seed time for eternity. Whatsoever a man sows here he shall reap to all eternity. If he sows to the wind he shall reap the whirlwind. If he sows to the flesh, he shall reap corruption. If he sows in righteousness he shall reap in mercy. If he sows to the spirit he shall reap everlasting life. This life is the day of grace, the season of mercy, when enduring riches may be secured. Many have seized the moments as they passed, and become immensely rich in faith, in good works, in bright hopes, and in a blessed inheritance beyond this life.

There is ever more sunshine than shadow,
In all lives more pleasure than pain;
There's never a year without summer,
And sunshine is brighter for rain.
The roses have fondled and bloomed,
The leaves in their time all turned brown,
Then after the blossoms, the winter;
But after the trials—the crown.

James Montgomery: I dare not say, much as I lament many things which I have done, that I wish anything which I have suffered in the course of providence, and which has not befallen me from my own fault, had not happened. Miserable I may have been made by such events as we usually call misfortunes; but I have lived long enough to see that some of the most effective of these were the means of preserving me from far greater evils. I see wisdom and goodness and mercy guarding and guiding me, and overruling, for my good, things which almost broke my heart when they came upon me, and which seemed at the moment to cut off hope altogether.

THE DAY IS AT HAND.

Poor fainting spirit, still hold on thy way—
The dawn is near!
True, thou art weary; but the brightening ray
Becomes more clear.
Bear up a little longer—wait for rest—
Yield not to slumber, though with toil oppressed.

The night of life is mournful—but look on—
The dawn is near!
Soon will earth's shadowy scenes and forms be gone—
Yield not to fear!
The mountain's summit will, ere long, be gained,
And the bright world of joy and peace attained.

"Joyful through hope", thy motto still must be,
The dawn is near!
What glories will that dawn unfold to thee!
Be of good cheer!
Gird up thy loins; bind sandals on thy feet;
The way is dark and long, the end is sweet.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his H. Prophets since the world began. It advocates also, the personal pre-mil. Advent of Christ, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth, with Christ as King of kings, and the two first and a part of the third item in the generation next preceding the personal Advent of Christ; the literal resurrection of the dead; the restitution of the righteous and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, as preached, and immersion as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

END OF THE WORLD.

O. M. MYERS.

Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshipped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen. Matt. xxviii. 16-20.

Brother Myers:--As much has been said and written among us upon the expression "End of the world," what do you think of the phrase as it occurs in the above text? There are two questions I would like to call to your attention: 1. Were more than the eleven embraced in the promise of Christ's presence? and 2. What age was referred to? Will you please answer through our paper at your earliest convenience, and oblige a DISCIPLE.

REPLY.

With all due respect to those who have written upon the above phrase "End of the world," I will try, to the best of my ability, to answer your questions, and will endeavor to do so without any reflection or preference to what has been written by others, that I may not appear in the field of controversy.

Then, to your first question. From verse 16 of the Scripture above cited, it is observable that the eleven were the subjects of the direct address; but the following circumstantial points are suggestive that more persons might have been present, and might have been included in the promise.

1. That more might have been present the following Scriptures show:

Mark xvi. 14-20: "Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen. And he said unto them, go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. So then, after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen."

Luke xxiv. 49-53: "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high. And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them. And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven. And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy: and were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God. Amen."

Also, it would seem from these citations from Mark and Luke that the ascension followed directly after the delivery of the commission.

Next, from Acts i. 12-14, 21-26, the evidence is positive that Barnabas and Matthias, in addition to the eleven, were there, and the presumptive evidence is, that the 120 were present. "Then returned they unto Jerusalem, from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a Sabbath-day's journey. And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alphæus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James. These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren. And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty,) men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus. Wherefore of these men which have companied with us, all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection. And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. And they prayed, and said, thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles."

2. That the savior's language often admits of a broader application than to the persons of direct address is to be admitted by all Bible students. See for illustration Matt. xviii. 3, 5, 15-17, 21, 22; xxiv. 42; xxv. 13. Many other texts of the same nature might be cited where there is a direct address, and an extended application, applying to all disciples of all time even to the date of the second advent.

But, that our text is one of this kind --having a broader range for application than to the eleven--we do not entirely rely upon the above evidence. For further consideration upon this point then we raise the question, How did Jesus, in the promise, contemplate a presence with his disciples? This question the following Scriptures answer:

"If ye love me, keep my commandments: and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. But the comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." John xiv. 15-18, 26.

"But when the comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me. And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning." John xv. 26, 27.

"Nevertheless, I tell you the truth: It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment: of sin, because they believe not on me; of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged. I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit, when he, the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you." John xvi 7-16.

"For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?" Heb. ii. 2-4.

Since then, it is evident that Jesus did not intend to be with his disciples in person, but through the agency and power of the Holy Spirit, your first question resolves itself into the following: Did more than the eleven--the persons of the direct address of Matt. xxviii. 20--possess the agency and power of the Holy Spirit? That they did, the following Scriptures unmistakably show. On the occasion of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the memorable day of Pentecost we have, "But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words; for these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my spirit; and they shall prophesy." Acts ii. 14-18. We understand that Joel's prophecy will yet receive a more extensive fulfillment in the future, of which this was but the counterpart; but that the more abundant fulfillment will not consist in giving it to more classes than here received it.

That all the characters who are here enumerated did, in the days of the apostles, receive its power, see Acts xxi. 8-11: "And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cesarea; and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven; and abode with him. And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy. And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet, named Agabus. And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, thus saith the Holy Ghost, so shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles."

Further, as to who beside the eleven received the power of the spirit, see Acts vi. 5-8: "And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch; whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them. And the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith. And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people."

After Stephen's miraculous power, as above stated, it is said of Philip that he went to Samaria and preached, "And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed. Then Simon himself believed also: and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done. Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." Acts viii. 6, 7, 14-17.

At Antioch were prophets and those who possessed miraculous power. "Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul. As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away. So they being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus." Acts xiii. 1-4.

Of the twelve at Ephesus who had been baptized unto John's baptism, "When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied. And all the men were about twelve." Acts xix. 5-7.

To the church at Rome it was said by Paul, "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation; he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness." Rom. xii. 4-8.

Paul addressed the Corinthian church, "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the spirit the word of wisdom; to another, the word of knowledge by the same spirit; to another, faith by the same spirit; to another, the gifts of healing by the same spirit; to another, the working of miracles; to another, prophecy; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, divers kinds of tongues; to another, the interpretation of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the self-same spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit. For the body is not one member, but many." 1 Cor. xii. 4-14.

To the Ephesians it was said: "But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things. And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Eph. iv. 7-13.

Thus, it is to be seen that Christ's presence through the agency and power of the Holy Spirit was not only possessed by the eleven, but by handmaidens, by the seven servants (deacons) of the congregation at Jerusalem, by the disciples at Samaria, by many at Antioch, by the Ephesian brethren, and by all at Rome, Corinth and Ephesus.

Your second question, for lack of space, will have to be deferred till next week.

[To be Continued.]

Hope On.

"In your patience possess your souls."

Brethren we are often looked upon as a "weak society" of believers. We are frequently considered far beneath the notice of many professed Christians. We are often looked upon as small in numbers and feeble in strength and influence.

Sometimes the words of hate, scorn, and contempt, of us are spoken by those who should speak words of love, hope and encouragement. To speak words of contempt against us does not tend to strengthen. To withdraw from us and join other societies holding many views we do not believe because they are stronger in numbers and more popular in society does not strengthen our feeble ranks. There are many persons in this world who in times of religious excitement are very enthusiastic and as long as all passes along smoothly can travel along all right. But when tribulation or persecution arises because of the word, by and by they are offended. When the excitement is over, when the flood is passed and nothing but the still and ever moving current is left to pass on they are found like drift wood resting high and dry on the sandy shore, awaiting another flood of religious excitement to carry them on. But only to stop again when another flood of religious enthusiasm has passed. They are never found to form a part of the ever running current which moves on amid cloud and sunshine. O, brethren, let us see to it that we make our calling and election sure.

Remember that the promised reward is to those who continue faithful unto death, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." Brethren the time has now come when to follow in God's commandments and to worship him as the only living and true God, is as unpopular as it was in the days of Elijah and the words which he spake in the ear of the prophets of Baal are as applicable today as then when he said "how long halt ye between two opinions. If the Lord be God follow him. But if Baal (and we might add pride, popularity and a great name) be our god then follow him. We need not be discouraged because we are sneeringly called a "weak society," or because we are but few in number for that is no proof that we are not right, for it is to the little flock that God is to give the kingdom. If we are to be numbered with that little company, then their words will fall sweetly in our ears. "Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Again, "Hearken my beloved brethren hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him. From the above we learn that if true hearted to God and are found rich in faith whether poor or small in numbers we will be accepted by our Father at the last great day. Then let us hope on knowing that "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called," to that high calling in Christ Jesus, that the little flock are to attain. It has ever been to the little and "weak society" that God has reached out and blessed and through them in coming ages he is to show his love and mercy to a sorrowing world. When the flood burst upon a guilty world it was but a weak company in point of numbers that entered the ark and passed beyond the mighty storm. When Elijah kneels before the 400 prophets of Baal and prays saying, "Hear me O Lord, hear me that this people may know that thou art the Lord God and that thou hast turned their hearts back again," it was but a small and weak society that knelt with him as he wraped his mantle about him and prayed to the God of heaven and earth and yet he triumphed. Sodom held but a few faithful ones when the death angel came to Lot. yet that small company was saved and his worship accepted. When Christ was born and while he was resting in the manger but a "weak society of worshipers came to inquire for the young child.

When Christ on the night of his betrayal gathered about his dear and best friends and partook of the passover with his disciples for the last time, before he returns it was but a small company that gathered about him. It was a small company of faithful ones that followed him to the cross and that watched and wept over his grave. But a small company that were found at his tomb on the morning of his resurrection. But few that saw him ascend to his Father from the Mount of Olives and O it will be but a small company that will be found ready and watching for his return. O, may God help us that we may be found with that "little flock" when he returns. Let us speak words of love, comfort and hope to each other, strengthening the feeble knees and the hands that hang down knowing that we shall reap if we faint not. O, let us strive to be found faithful a little longer for the dark night is far spent and the morning cometh. "Hold that fast which thou hast that no man take thy crown." Rom. iii. 11. Yours in hope,

L. G. BRONSON.

WHAT IS PEACE?

Not when our sky is cloudless bright,
Not when our hearts are full, yet light,
Not when for us there seems no night—
Not then; but when
Our heart for other hearts doth yearn,
Our eyes with anshed tears do burn,
And our hope to God alone doth turn,
Yes, in the dark;
Then then to be at perfect rest,
Like infant on its mother's breast;
Serenely, richly, sweetly blest,
Yes, in the cloud.
To have no anxious care, no fear;
To have no bitter in our tear,
But to God's heart to be so near,
From self to cease,
This is true peace!

Spurgeon: A well-built stone gets to be one with the foundation. In the old Roman walls the mortar seems to be as hard as the stones, and the whole is like one piece; you must blow it to atoms before you can get the wall away. So is it with the true believer; he rests upon his Lord till he grows up into him, till he is one with Jesus by a living union, so that you scarce know where the foundation ends and where the upbuilding begins; for the believer becometh all in Christ, even as Christ is all in all to him.

My Savior knows! It is enough,
Even may wealth and friends depart.
As one by one earth ties dissolve
This thought in peace doth keep my heart—
He knoweth best! Why should I grieve
When troubles come, and hopes deceive?

My Savior knows! All, all is well;
Even death's cold hand I do not fear;
When round me roll the waters deep
I then shall feel his presence near.
Oh, Lamb of God, upon thy breast
I'll lay my weary soul to rest.

The Italian government is about to construct a large observatory on Mt. Etna. A site has been selected at a height of 9633 feet above the level of the sea. The purity of the atmosphere is so great at this elevation that the planets can be observed with the naked eye almost as well as with telescopes of low power through the thick atmospheres of towns. Venus, when shining alone in the heavens, casts a distinct shadow. This will be the second loftiest observatory in the world, the United States Signal Station, at Pike's Peak, in Colorado, at an elevation of 14,336 feet, being the loftiest station, and, indeed, the loftiest inhabited building of any kind in the world.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAFFEE, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCT. 22, 1879.

THE present number makes up four issues for October. The next will appear early in November Deo volente.

A NEAT chromo, "crossing the Moor," printed on a cylinder press, has been sent us by Cottrell & Babcock, 8 Spruce St., N. Y., for which we tender thanks.

THE conference at Argos will commence on Thursday evening, Oct. 30, at 7 p. m., and continue over the following Sunday. We hope our brethren and friends will make a special effort to attend.

BRO. C. C. RAMSEY will speak at Goodland next Sunday and attend the conference at Argos commencing the following week, as noticed already. We learn this from H. V. Reed just as we are going to press.

WE give some very interesting epistolary correspondence in our Letter Drawer department this week. Many of our readers express themselves pleased to have this column of our paper well filled.

FROM the following notice clipped from the Cleveland Leader we learn that Bro. Magruder is lecturing in that city. From the same paper we learn that Messrs. Moody and Sankey are holding meetings in the same city. We trust that the people will be led to discern the great difference between the emotional narratives of these revivalists and the satisfactory teachings of Holy Writ, as to the way of life.

BIBLE LECTURES—"The Word of God against the Traditions and Doctrines of Men." A course of lectures beginning on Sunday at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m., will be delivered at Beck's Hall, corner Case and Woodland aves., by A. B. Magruder, of Virginia, to which the people are invited that they may learn for themselves from the Bible the way of life and salvation, and see the broad contrast between the preaching of Christ and Apostles, and the anecdotal, emotional and sensational preaching of modern evangelists, who, however sincere and zealous, show themselves to be unacquainted with "the Gospel of the Kingdom of God," which is God's plan of redemption for fallen man. Come, Bible in hand, and see for yourselves "whether these things be so." Acts xvii. 10-13. Questions and objections allowed and courteously answered at the close of each lecture. Seats free. "He that has ears to hear let him hear."

COMMUNICATIONS.

Emotional Religion.

Allow me to ask if there are not some who, enamored of theory and gospel faith, have forgotten that Bible Christianity is of the heart, and not of the intellect alone; who, indeed say, "I know nothing of any heart; my religion is of the head. I believe with my mind the gospel of the kingdom, therefore I have a hope of salvation!" Now, we would have no quarrel about terms, and do not care to determine the location of what, in the Bible, is called heart. We regard the term as a synonym for the affectional or for the emotional nature. There is such a thing as heart-belief in contradistinction to intellectual perception. The devils have the latter, for they "believe and tremble." Christians have the former, for "with the heart man believeth unto righteousness."

What we wish to write about now, is this heart religion—that which comes when the germ of the divine life is implanted in the human nature—by the begetting of the Holy Spirit; that which exists when Christ abides in the believer's soul; that which is present when Father and Son have come as permanent guests; that which is experienced when "the spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God."

We do not wish to underrate the importance of an intelligent understanding of the gospel, but when this understanding works out no emotional results, we can hardly believe that it has any saving power; when it does not draw the whole heart out in love to God, to Christ, to the brotherhood and to humanity, has it yet accomplished its divine mission?

Can one read the autobiographical writings of any of God's saints of old, and not be impressed with the fact that a deep religious feeling was a part of their very selves; that their affectional natures blossomed in transcendent beauty under the inspiration of their faith and hope. How much of the sweetness of religious life is sung for us in the precious Psalms! What fervor of prayer and praise—"O give thanks unto the Lord," "I will praise thee with my whole heart!" What completeness of consecration, "my heart is fixed;" O God, my heart is fixed!

What a deep sense of sin, and what aspirations for holiness! "Against thee, thee only have I sinned—wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity—create in me a clean heart!" What thirst after God! "As the heart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." What desire for the work of the Lord! "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free spirit, then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee!" What enthusiasm in God's worship! "I would rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness!" What trust in the Lord! "I shall not be moved." In God is my salvation and my glory. What pleasure in God's service—"I delight to do thy will, O my God." What joy in the God of our salvation—"Blessed be my book, and let the God of my salvation be exalted!"

David himself was practical, eminently so,—a wise king of a great nation; his faith was, no doubt, correct; but we read much less, we think, of his theory of truth than we do of his heart-life in the presence of his God. Isaiah, grand rapt prophet of the kingdom exclaims in his intensity of emotion, "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation—he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness!"

If we come down to the disciple whom Jesus loved, we find he was full of heart religion, the religion of a loving life. Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God, and every one that loveth, is born of God and knoweth God. "And Paul, learned as he was, philosophical as he was, engaged as he was in opening up the gospel to the Gentile world, could pray that those to whom he wrote might know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge," and "be filled with all the fulness of God." Amid all his argument, and his exposition, his religious unctions seem to have been intense. And who can know the tenderness and the love of Jesus, who can read that wonderful prayer he said before he suffered, and not feel that, although it is a great, a glorious, a necessary thing in a measure, to know the truth, it is a sweeter, a diviner thing to live near to God, to be filled with all his fulness, and to love, even as he loved, who gave his life for our salvation!

M. P. A. C.

He Ye Holy for I am Holy.

Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. In what sense are we to understand the texts above quoted, there is but one and only one sense in which poor fallen man can be holy and can see the Lord, viz., believe and obey the gospel and be sanctified through the truth washed in Jesus, blood, made perfect by the spirit of holiness, by or through a resurrection from the dead, and thus put on immortality and obtain the gift of eternal life, and thus be made like unto the angels who always behold the face of our eternal Father in heaven. NEWELL BOND.

Report of the Arkansas State Christian Conference.

Pursuant to notice in the Elvis Banner, the ministers in Ark., met at Sutherlan's Chapel, White county, Ark., on Oct. 4, 1879, for the purpose of forming a State Conference. The following ministers were present: A. M. B. Graham, Little Rock; Samuel Roseborough, Batesville; J. N. A. Billingsley, Franklin; J. C. Overstreet, Pleasant Plains; W. M. Bonham, Batesville; A. K. Lewis, Hiram; W. R. Castlebery, Little Rod; J. P. Williams, Batesville; W. H. Lenox, Pleasant Plains; Lewis Hilger, Hiram. After reading, singing and prayer, Samuel Roseborough was chosen chairman, and W. M. Bonham, Secretary. Moved and carried that the chairman appoint a committee of three to draft a constitution and by-laws. A. M. B. Graham, J. N. A. Billingsley and J. C. Overstreet were appointed.

The committee submitted a constitution and by-laws which were read and adopted after a friendly, animated discussion in regard to the name by which we should be known. The suggestion of A. M. B. Graham prevailed and it was voted that our conference be called, "The Arkansas State Christian Conference."

The conference then proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: President, A. M. B. Graham; Vice President, Samuel Roseborough; Secretary, J. N. A. Billingsley; Treasurer, W. R. Castelbery; J. C. Overstreet was elected director. A. M. B. Graham, was by acclamation, elected state evangelist and representative to the "National Second Advent Christian Association."

Voted, that D. F. Sallis of Hot Springs, Ark., and J. H. Melvan of Little Rock, Ark., at their request be received as members of this conference.

Moved and carried that 1,000 copies of the constitution and by-laws, together with our minutes be published in pamphlet form, by the secretary.

Voted, that the secretary prepare a synopsis of our deliberations for publication in the Bible Banner, THE RESTITUTION and World's Crisis.

Moved and carried that our next annual meeting be held at Mt. Vernon, Faulkner county, Ark., commencing on Friday before the third Sunday in September 1880. The following resolution which met the approval of the conference was offered by W. H. Lenox.

Resolved: That the members of this conference offer their hearty thanks to, and prayers for, the families in this vicinity who have shown kindness and hospitality to us during its sittings.

After singing and prayer, the benediction was pronounced by President A. M. B. Graham, and the conference adjourned. J. N. A. BILLINGSLEY.

Secretary.

P. S. Meetings were held for three days in connection with our conference. The greater part of our preaching was by our able and earnest Brother Graham, whose timely gospel utterances cheered the hearts and strengthened the faith of the pilgrims, and faithfully warned the sinner of impending danger. God bless us all.

Conference Report.

The Michigan quarterly conference convened as per announcement at the brick school house, near Bro. Lemons three miles northeast of Vicksburg, at 7 o'clock, p. m., Friday, Oct. 3rd, and closed the following Sunday evening.

There was a fair attendance of brethren from different parts of the state. Bro. G. M. Myers, from Belle Plain, Iowa, preached the opening discourse from Romans viii. 16, at the close Bro. Woodward appointed as a committee of arrangements, Bro. L. Chessebrough, J. Lemon and Wm. McCrodon. On Saturday after an interesting social meeting in the morning, Bro. L. C. Chase from Racine, gave a discourse from Psalms xxxix. 5. In the afternoon Bro. Myers spoke from Matt. xxiv. 15, and in the evening expounded the 2nd of Acts. After the social meeting Sunday morning, Bro. H. R. Kendall from Galesburg, spoke of the importance of becoming Christians and what must be done to insure salvation.

In the afternoon Bro. Chase spoke upon the promises of God unto the fathers which constitutes the gospel. Bro. Myers gave a discourse in the evening upon the authenticity of the Scriptures, after which the Lord's Supper was observed which closed a very pleasant and interesting meeting.

After the close of the afternoon discourse on Sunday, the following financial system as suggested by Bro. Chase was read, viz., that each brother or sister having taxable property pay one-fourth of one per cent., of the assessed valuation of said property after deducting one-third of his or her indebtedness, also that each brother pay fifty cents annually, and each sister pay twenty-five cents annually.

On motion it was voted that this system be recommended to the church of God in Michigan, in its several capacities for adoption.

The following brethren were appointed to look after the matter in their several localities.

H. H. Chamberlain, J. A. Simonds, Wm. McGrodon, M. Daniels, W. R. Rogers, G. W. Coats, E. Chesebrough, E. Miller. D. F. SPENCER.

FOREIGN NEWS.

TROUBLE IN SYRIA AND ALBANIA.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 17.—A disturbance has occurred in Lebanon, Syria, between the Druses and Maronites, in consequence of the abduction of a girl. Several Maronites have been killed, and the governor has asked the Porte for more troops, to be employed in restoring order.

The Albanians appear determined to use every means to prevent the cession of Epirus to Greece. The attitude of the Albanians also renders it difficult for the Porte to accomplish the cession of Albanian territory to Montenegro, as stipulated in the treaty Berlin.

RUSSIAN EXPEDITION TO CENTRAL ASIA.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—A dispatch to the Daily News from St. Petersburg says; "Gen. Torgukasoff, having obtained extensive re-enforcements, will undertake a new and largely developed expedition next spring."

AFGHANISTAN.

SIMLA, October 20.—The independent tribes between Ali Kheyl and Shutargurdan are still assembled and making hostile demonstrations. Reinforcements are proceeding thither from Cabul and Kurrum for united action in case of need. Gen. Gough has occupied Kushi.

The cholera has appeared among three British regiments; two cases fatal.

NEW CABLE.

LONDON, October 20.—The Anglo-American Cable Company will lay a new cable in 1880.

AT UFA.

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia, October 21.—There has been an immense fire at Ufa, in the government of Orenboorg. More than the fifth part of the town was consumed, and many persons were killed. The loss of property is enormous.

The expedition to explore the ancient bed of the Oxus, with the view to connecting it with the Caspian Sea, has been abandoned, the difficulties in the way of such connection being found practically insurmountable.

THE FLOOD IN SPAIN.

A dispatch from Paris says the total damage by the recent floods in Spain is estimated at 60,000,000 francs. Three thousand five hundred houses and 120 mills were destroyed. King Alfonso has subscribed 50,000 francs for the relief of the sufferers, and the Princess Asturias 5,000 pisatars. The Bank of Spain has collected 60,000 for the same purpose.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The Daily News understands that the government have decided on the immediate construction of a railway to Candahar, and are already purchasing material.

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—A correspondent at St. Petersburg says he learns from an absolutely trustworthy source that England has informed Russia that British influence must dominate in Afghanistan's foreign relations.

CONFLAGRATION.

The fire at Samarcand, Independent Toorkistan, destroyed the great bazar, seven caravansaries, and seventy shops.

BREVITIES.

A SWORD FROM A METEOROLITE.

The Springfield Armory have just made a sword from a piece of meteorolite. It bears this inscription: "Made from iron fallen from the skies of Mexico, and presented to G. Trevino, General of Division, by his friend, Gen. Ord, U. S. A."

The Echo newspaper says that in the central prison of Moscow during the summer just elapsed no fewer than 11,854 persons were incarcerated, of whom 10,477, including both sexes, were condemned to be sent to Siberia. These being drafted off into exile, upward of half a thousand remained in jail, the remainder being admitted into the hospital owing to illness resulting from the incredibly filthy state of their cells.

In Switzerland a general day of prayer for the relief of the country has been appointed. The Synod of the Canton of Berne, in its proclamation in reference to the observance of the day, says: "A feeling of gloom pervades the whole world. In our own land great distress exists. The unfavorable weather has made the yield of field and meadow, of orchard and vineyard, very questionable. The paralysis of all industries, which has now continued for years, becomes daily more oppressive, and weighs down mind and heart. Many who formerly enjoyed wealth, or at least a sure income, now look ahead to a dark future. Poverty and suffering often show themselves in shocking shapes. In our political life also discontent and distrust are visible." This is a picture that would apply to a large part of Europe.

FRENCH TRADING SOCIETY FOR EAST AFRICA.

The Boges are a people, numbering from 10,000 to 12,000 souls, who inhabit about twenty villages in Upper Nubia, to the west of Massowah. Their chief place, Keren, numbers 300 to 400 huts, and lies higher than the other villages. Their government is patriarchal, and Christianity has many adherents in all parts of the country, although Islam is making considerable progress. Lying on the sea coast and the caravan routes between Khartum and Massowah, this fruitful and hitherto little explored land presents all the conditions for the successful establishment of an agricultural and industrial colony. Under the superintendence of MM. Demont and Andre a society is in course of formation in France, the purpose of which is the exploration of this region.

BIBLE HISTORY CONFIRMED.

The following is an extract from "Ancient Literature," by J. D. Quackenbos, A. M., M. D., pp. 111, 112:—

"But the mounds that so long covered the site of Nineveh have recently surrendered their treasures. Clouds that environed the history of the past have been dissipated; ancient nations, for ages wrapped in obscurity, we no longer "see through a glass darkly;" and the narrative of the inspired writers of the Bible has been in many places confirmed by the inscriptions disentombed in the East. Among the most interesting fragments found scattered through the ruined 'Chambers of Records' of the Assyrian palace, are the tablets relating to the creation, the fall of man, and the deluge, copied from Babylonian records hundreds of years older than the Pentateuch."

A "SEA MONSTER."

Captain J. F. Cox, master of the British ship Privateer, which arrived at Delaware Breakwater on the 9th inst. from London, says: "On the 6th ult., 100 miles west of Brest (France), weather fine and clear, at 5 p. m., as I was walking the quarter-deck, looking to windward, I saw something black rise out of the water about twenty feet, in shape like an immense snake, about three feet in diameter. It was about 800 yards from the ship, coming towards us. It turned its head partly from us, and went down with a great splash, after staying up about five seconds, but rose again three times, at intervals of ten seconds, until it had turned completely from us and was going from us with great speed and making the water boil all around it. I could see its eyes and shape perfectly. It was like a great eel or snake, but as black as coal tar, and appeared to be making great exertions to get away from the ship. I have seen many kinds of fish in five different oceans, but was never favored with a sight of the great sea snake before."

PHARAOH'S ARMY IN THE RED SEA.

At a sitting of the French Academy upwards of five years ago, M. Lesseps stated, upon the authority of the reports made by his engineers, that "at the time the Israelites left Egypt under Moses's leadership the ebb and flow of the tides of the Red Sea reached up to the foot of the Serapeum, near Lake Timsah." If this be correct, it follows that the spot where the Israelites crossed the Red Sea was situated not to the south, but to the north of the present extremity of its northern arm. In his paper, Les Mondes, Abbe Moigne has traced the course of the Children of Israel day by day, in accordance with these new data, and he asks the whole Christian world, since the spot is now known where the Egyptians were swallowed up, with "the horse and his rider," chariot, and everything to subscribe the requisite funds to enable excavations to be made and "the relics of the army overcome by the Almighty himself to be brought to light." The learned Abbe will undertake the work if he succeeds in getting together 360,000f., "because the finding of the remains of Pharaoh's army would be a powerful reason in favor of the truth of the Holy Scriptures."

THE MODERN CHILDREN OF ISRAEL.

The total number of the Hebrew race to-day is about what it was in the days of King David, between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000. There are in Europe, according to the latest statistical information, about 5,000,000; in Asia, 200,000; in Africa over 80,000; in America from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000. More than half of the European Jews (2,621,000) in Russia; 1,375,000 in Austria, (of whom 575,000 are in the Polish Provinces of Galicia); 512,000 in Germany (61,000 in the Polish province of Posen); Roumania is credited with 274,000, and Turkey with 100,000. There are 70,000 in Holland, 50,000 in England, 40,000 in France, 35,000 in Italy; Spain and Portugal have between 2,000 and 4,000; 1,800 in Sweden, 25 in Norway. Nothing is said about Denmark or Switzerland. The number of Jewish residents in Berlin is given at 45,000—nearly as many as in the whole of France, and more than in Italy, Spain, Portugal, and the whole of the Scandinavian peninsula altogether. The majority of the African Jews live in the Province of Algiers. But they are to be found in Abyssinia and all along the north coast, and even in the Saharan oases, frequently acting as intermediaries between the Mohammedans and Christians. Of the Asiatic Jews, 20,000 are assigned to India and 25,000 to Palestine. The population of Jerusalem is given at 7,000 Mohammedans, 5,000 Christians, and 13,500 Jews; these last are classified as German, Spanish or Arabic Jews.

Hidden Ones.

Yes, there are such; many of them. "The Lord knoweth them that are his." There are quiet, retiring, lowly followers of Jesus of whom the organized church knows nothing—the Lord's violets, concealed from public view, and revealed only to the careful student of the Christian life by the fragrance of their modest piety. They are found in obscure nooks and corners, in thatched cottages or mud huts in country lanes; or in attics or cellars in great towns, whence the incense of their heart worship ascends to heaven with acceptance because they themselves, have already been accepted in the Beloved One. It may be that this simple piety flourishes in a room next door to a demoniac who makes the air tremble by his ribaldry and blasphemy. It is of no use to deny the Divine Sovereignty. Facts are excellent exponents of doctrine. How comes it that a thin partition is all that separates a lowly loving child of God from a boisterous and odious child of the devil? I almost envy these hidden ones. It seems so poetically attractive to get away from the perpetual tumult, and to live alone with Christ. But this looks selfish. I wait until an honorable discharge comes from my Commander. But I wish these hidden ones would not remain in concealment. They lose the blessed feeling of communion with brethren in Christ, whose hands and hearts their presence would strengthen in the duty of testimony. I am certain that the organization of great hierarchies has damaged the Christian faith enormously. The sublime simplicity of apostolic institutions has been destroyed by this crafty device of the enemy. But this is no reason why any disciple of the Lord should become a practical hermit. Every saint should seek the fellowship of "the sons of God."

The question is not one of personal safety; that is a settled matter in the Lord's hands; but it is one of fellowship and witness-bearing. The hidden ones should not continue hidden in these days. They think their light feeble. Probably it is; but it is thoroughly genuine, even from the divine shekinah; therefore it should be "set upon a table" that others may see it and glorify God. The disappearance of the smaller stars from the splendid roof which the Divine Builder has placed over our heads would sadly dim its midnight glory. So we want the little lights to come into the church for the benefit of the dark world, and the honor of that Wonderful One who holdeth the stars in his right hand and walketh among the golden candlesticks.—Dr. Lacks.

Complimentary to the Jews.

The Jews are among the most moral and law-abiding citizens of any community, and are no public expense whatever, either as criminals or paupers. It is the exception when one of their number is found in any of our prisons; none of their children are in our houses of refuge; none of their adults in our almshouses. They have their own hospitals for their sick, and homes for their friendless children. They are loyal people to any government in which their lot may be cast. As a tangible proof for their loyalty to our land, they have our coat-of-arms embroidered on a velvet curtain, which hangs in front of the holy places in their synagogues, in which are deposited their scriptures; and always at the end of their Sabbath religious services they repeat a prayer (in English) for our president and all in authority. There is a yearly record kept by the Jews of all crimes committed by their members in every country; and it is asserted by one of their highest officials that not more than one Jew in fifty years is hung for murder throughout the whole world.

POETRY.

His Sign.

L. M. BURGESS.

I never look at the midnight sky,
Or watch the white clouds floating by,
But unto my heart these words are given:
"His sign—His sign shall appear in the heaven."

If I look at the silent stars, serene,
Or watch the lightning's angry gleam,
Be it stormy night or evening clear,
"His sign shall appear in the heavens," I hear.

And I wonder oft what that sign shall be,
And if 'twill be seen and known of me;
But this I know that my heart has striven
And watched for His sign to appear in the heaven.

Striven, that I might faithful be,
And watched for the joy that I hope to see
When His peace—I trust—shall to me be given
When His watched-for sign shall appear in the heaven.

For there is a crown for all who wait
And love His appearing; and, oh, how great
The joys to be we can measure alone
By the sorrows, perhaps, that we here have known.

Oh, welcome the hour when the night shall die
And the morning break on a cloudless sky,
Bright with the sign of our coming King,
Filled with our shouts of welcoming.

Waiting and watching that sign to see,
Oh, dearest Lord may we ever be;
Forgive and keep us Thy presence near
Till the day when Thy sign shall at last appear.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find fifty cents for three month's subscription to THE RESTITUTION. I like the paper so well that I wish to have it on my stand with my other papers, The World's Crisis, Bible Banner, etc. I received thirty copies of THE RESTITUTION recently, containing my two articles on "The Glorious Consummation." I was much pleased to see it in print. I contemplate writing more articles for your paper. I have already written two articles on "Preparation for the Glorious Consummation," which, I think, would be very suitable for the times we live in. I have examined the Scriptures very thoroughly on this subject, and what I have said on preparation I have taken Scripture for. I shall soon write two articles on "The Glorious Consummation Near," in which I shall take up our Lord's great prophecy and other prophecies to show that that event which we look forward to as our only hope, is near. I have believed this doctrine with all my heart for about one year and six months, and love it as ardently as I once hated it. I am young in the service of the Lord, but hope to do much for him if I am spared. I do not think we shall have a much longer time to work, so what is done, must be done quickly. I am young but not too young to work in the Master's vineyard, as he has entrusted me with some talents. My age is seventeen, and I do not believe I shall grow very old before the Lord comes. I could write much more if it would not take up too much room in your paper.

Your brother in Christ,
GEORGE E. PULLEN.

Benton Harbor, Mich.

Editor Restitution:—I now send to you a money order of one dollar and fifty cents, to apply on Geo. A. Griffith's subscription, his address is Yuba City, California. When I moved to this county, or, to Bangor, two years ago there were none of our faith here. But through our influence, and Bro. R. Corbaley's preaching we now number nine in our organization, with good prospect of soon to have more added. I think if you can look at the list of THE RESTITUTION, sent to this state, we are improving very fast. I think that the first number taken in California, was sent to me in 1869, at Yuba City, we cannot get along without it, may it live and prosper till the Lord comes. Oh, how I do enjoy the notes from our scattered brethren and sisters through THE RESTITUTION. May we all prove faithful and all meet in the kingdom of God, that there we will no more part, but, be happy forever.

JAS. J. CORBALEY.

Bangor, Cal.

Editor Restitution:—I read the most that the paper contains, with a deep interest, especially those articles that touch on our duty to God and love to our fellow man. Some of our brethren who write for the paper seem to dwell almost exclusively on doctrinal points. While I do not condemn this yet I think that if a part of the effort thus put forth was made to show up a true Christian character and Godly walk; would have the effect to win more souls to Christ. Our blessed Lord has told us to learn of him. Follow him if you please through all his ministry and you will find that every act of his life was to do good to man. Even the message of the angel announcing that a Savior had been born was sounded on the ear of the shepherds. Good news of great joy—peace on earth and good will to men, was the message that filled the shepherds with delighted astonishment. May we not dear brethren feel our hearts overflow with love to God that this same Jesus is our Savior and Redeemer.

It certainly seems that those who truly and sincerely love the Lord should cry aloud and spare not; and set forth to dying men and women the love that God had for the world, that he gave his only begotten Son to die, that through him the world might be saved. Brethren teach men and women to love God and his appearing. Let all unprofitable contentions cease and be united and show to a dying world that all your fighting is done under the banner of King Emanuel and that his laws alone are your guide. Brother I am much pleased with the humility that is manifested in your articles, it says to me that you have been taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of all such. May the Lord bless you; and all who love his appearing, yours in hope of the crown of life.

JARED BENJAMIN.

Rensselaer, Ind.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find postoffice order for five dollars as a free will offering to the Lord, for the dissemination of the gospel as taught by Christ and his Apostles. I have been delinquent; should have sent long since; hope it will be acceptable now as at any other time; I am still on the earth though my time may be short, I am getting aged and know not when the time will come that I must pass away and it makes no difference, for I have on the wedding garment; ready for the bridegroom. Oh my brothers and sisters let us be ready for that solemn hour that awaits us all. Let us search the word of truth to know what is the mind and will of God concerning us, we are passing away and we may never meet again in this land of sorrow and trials. It would, be in my isolated condition a great pleasure to meet brothers and sisters in church capacity, to mingle our voices in prayer and praise together. I think sometimes I will try again to meet them once more, provided my health is good in the next year.

I have had it in my minds view for years that the seventh thousand year will be the year of jubilee, when Christ is to reap till he puts all enemies under his feet, all that reject his gospel, for their view. I may be mistaken; I hope it will be soon; there is so much wickedness and crime it makes me unhappy, but I have this to console me the Lord will do right and come in the appointed time. I must close and yours as ever, your sister in Christ.

CHRISTENA JAMESON.

Edom, Ohio,

Editor Restitution:—A most terrible disaster took place the 2nd instant on our fair grounds. The grand stand, a new and untried structure, which was estimated to hold, on the seats, alone, one thousand people, fell about ten minutes to three, Oct. 2nd, when filled with people below and above. Some were taken out dead, and others in a dying condition; and, as far as we have been able to learn, between three and four hundred were wounded, of which many have died since. Several funerals were held in our city yesterday, and four two days after the event. Our business places were closed and draped in mourning. The cause of the falling of the structure is being investigated. MRS. O. F. HALL.

Adrian, Mich.

Editor Restitution:—I am just recovering from a quite severe attack of flux, contracted while I was holding a series of meetings in and near Franklin, Sacramento county, Cal. The meetings were quite interesting attended with some good results, with good prospects for the future. B. F. Bowles, Universalist Minister and Pastor of the First Universalist Church of San Francisco, and myself are engaged to commence a discussion at Healdsburg, on the 20th inst., to last at least eight evenings, on the final destiny of the human race. A large theatre building has been secured for the occasion. I will write something about it hereafter. Indications now are that it will be largely attended. The cause of truth is gaining on this coast. More anon. R. CORBALEY, Healdsburg, Cal.

Editor Restitution:—You no doubt saw a notice in THE RESTITUTION, that on the third Sunday in October, Gospel Grove Meeting House, would be dedicated to the service of the Lord, but you will hardly be prepared for what I have to tell you of the result of that announcement. My heart almost bounded into my throat as we caught sight of the place. Vehicles were hitched everywhere, and from every avenue, north and south, east and west, more were coming. On entering the house, the seats were found already full. It was a perfect jam. My lips were full of praises, and I said to myself, this thing has surely been of the Lord. He put it into the hearts of this people to build the house, to his name, and they have gone forward according to his word, trusting in him to finish the work.

As fast as the means were needed he put it into their hands. There is more than enough proffered to pay for everything. And as it was in the offerings made for the tabernacle, we shall have to stay the hands of the willing givers. Oh is not the Lord good? Is he not bountiful in blessing? Praise him! Praise him! And may mercy and peace be upon and abide with those who have given their time and means to the work. May each and all find an abundant entrance into the kingdom.

A place has been built where the pure gold of truth may be proffered to men; an altar set up where his people may worship him in spirit and in truth. Yet no shackles be put upon the lips of any man who may preach in that pulpit. No keys will bar out any minister of any denomination. It is free to all.

We had a blessed good time, although disappointed in not having our dear brethren Halstead, Wagoner and others, whom we had expected with us. But few of the faith from a distance were present, the coming of these rejoiced our [illegible] Bro. Hatch did good service in presenting the truth, and will continue the meeting through the week; we hope with good results.

As a little church we feel like consecrating ourselves anew to God, we feel more than ever the proximity of the advent, and the burden that rests upon us, as a people, to have that word spoken faithfully, that shall "be meat in due season," "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." We want the blessing. Pray for us.

Thanks are now due to the Pastor of Eel River Church, (Christian) and to his people, for dismissing their own meeting that they might attend ours. How much we appreciate their kindness and Christian courtesy they may never know, the Lord reward them. We would also thank our German Baptist friends, and friends of the Disciple Church, and many others, for their attendance, and help in dedicating our house. J. L. and S. R. WINUS.

Editor Restitution:—Dear brother, It is with feelings of pleasure that I am again permitted to report that on Sunday, Oct. 10, at Austin, Ill., I had the privilege of assisting Miss Carrie Hett, of Chicago, to the new birth—the birth of water—the "washing of regeneration," and was the same day added to the church worshipping at Austin. On this occasion we were made glad by the presence of Sister Hett, Sister Robertsenow and Brother Gabrielson of Chicago; Brother Booth and sister, of Ashton; Sister Applegand, of South Northfield; Sister Button, of West Northfield; and Sister Woodworth, of Roger's Park. It is always a pleasure to us to have the company of our fellow travellers to the kingdom of God.

O, brethren, think of those solemn words of Jesus: "Ye must be born again." What idea does that little word "must," convey to your minds? Does it not convey the idea of authority, command, and obligation that we are not permitted to set aside? Who utters the command? Jesus, in whom all power and authority in heaven and earth is centered. And what is the penalty for disobeying the command? —"Ye cannot enter the kingdom of God." Can it be possible that our dear Lord has expressed his command in such an ambiguous way that we cannot determine what he means by being "born again?" O, no. It is not like our loving tender-hearted Redeemer to do that. It is only the conduct of a tyrant to give a command, and attach a fearful penalty, and at the same time express the command in such a way that it cannot be understood. Jesus' words are plain. It is only those religious teachers who desire to waste the force of the command, who darken the counsel of God by their foolishness.

The words "born again," express to us plainly the idea of a new life. Now if the Scriptures, expressly connect Baptism and new life together, what right have we to say that that is not the birth of water Jesus alluded to, as that is the only time in all the Christian experience in which we come in contact with water? Read Rom. vi. 4; "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we should also walk in newness of life." Does not the follower of Jesus commence to live a new life when his sins are "washed away?" See Acts xxii. 12-16. "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, wash away thy sins." You will see that remission of sins is consummated by coming in contact with the water. We all know that we cannot inherit God's kingdom clothed in sin, and as they are only remitted when we come in contact with the water, is it not fair to conclude that this is the birth of water the Savior alluded to? See also Titus iii. 4-7. "He saved us by the washing of regeneration." This testimony connects salvation, washing and regeneration together. We learn from this text that come into the saved condition by submitting to the "washing of regeneration." When we wash we must have water, and "regeneration" is new birth. Therefore, cannot we see clearly what the Lord means when he says: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water, and of the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God."

I have spoken only of the birth of water in this article, but some time in the future, God willing, may write with regard to the birth of the spirit. Yours waiting for redemption,

WILLIAM H. WILSON.

Austin, Ill.

Editor Restitution:—With a heart full of gratitude to our heavenly Father I write, that you, and all who read this, may rejoice and be glad with us who stood by the water's side and saw two more sisters and a brother go down into the water and put on the saving name—the only name given under heaven whereby we must be saved. The sisters were wives of brethren who had previously come out from the world and taken up their cross; and, oh, how their hearts rejoiced to embrace their wives as sisters in Christ Jesus, to walk the same road together, seeking for glory, honor, immortality and eternal life. How encouraging to husband and wife to go hand in hand through life in expectation of that inheritance promised to the faithful. The brother was once a Methodist preacher, but when he saw the Bible did not teach Methodism, and began to teach the people the wholesome words of truth, they cast him out and his name, as evil. They had no further use for him or his doctrine, but that did not discourage him, and having come to a full understanding of the gospel of the kingdom, he has obeyed. I never saw a brother or sisters better satisfied with the step they have taken. The brother is a man of great intellect, and may be the means of doing much service for the Master. After coming from the water, we partook of bread and wine at Brother Gulliteaus. How pleasant to be thus engaged every First Day of the week. May the sisters and brother walk worthy of the name they have taken upon them and prove faithful unto the end, that they, with us, if we, too, are faithful, may have an entrance into the kingdom of God, is the sincere prayer of your sister in Christ Jesus.

Editor Restitution:—Although not a subscriber for your paper, I have been a reader of it for the past six months. Now, I want the paper sent direct to me, for I feel that the perusal of its pages "through God," has been the means of bringing me from natures' darkness to the marvelous light of the Word of God. Six months ago I was a skeptic of the worst stamp, having no faith or hope in Christ, and all confidence lost in mankind; with no comfort in the present and without any hope of a future happiness beyond the grave. With such thoughts, I resolved to leave the haunts of man, and seek a home in the solitudes of the forest. At that time I was staying in Michigan, and spent the last night "of my stay there" with a brother, who has been a believer in the One Faith for some time; and from him I received my first knowledge of THE RESTITUTION doctrine. He gave me a bundle of your papers with a request that I would give them a careful perusal. I went to Missouri, and up in the Ozark mountains I found a place where I thought I could find rest; and, here, in the solitude of my mountain home, "with no human being near me," God sought me out; and now, my prayer is, Lord, what will thou have me to do? One thing I have left undone that Jesus has commanded, I have not been baptized; but, unlike the eunuch of Ethopia, I have no Philip to perform the work, although there is plenty of water here. Is there any organized body of the One Faith in south-east Missouri? I get my mail at Annapolis, it being the nearest point to my mountain hermitage. Please let me hear from you soon by letter, or through THE RESTITUTION.

Plain Facts.—No. 1.

1. The gospel preached by Christ when on earth had reference to the kingdom of God, as you can plainly see by the following: Mark i. 14: "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the Gospel of the kingdom of God." Matt. iv. 17-23: "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Luke iv. 43: "And he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent." Luke ix. 1, 2: "Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority, and he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." Luke viii. 1: "And it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God; and the twelve were with him." Additional testimonies can be found by noticing the following passages: Matt. ix. 35; Luke ix. 2, 6-11; also Mark xvi. 15, 16.

2. The gospel that was preached by Christ and the apostles had reference to the kingdom of God that was promised to all that prove true and loyal to his commands. Acts viii. 12, 25: "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women."

In several instances the proclamation made by Christ as concerning his kingdom, are in this form: The kingdom of God is at hand, or has approached. This cannot mean that Christ established his kingdom at the time he was on earth, for it is not yet established. It can only mean that it came nigh in the first appearing of Christ. The proclamation that it had approached was confined to his personal ministration in the days of his flesh. We never find that the apostles made use of this form of proclamation after his ascension. In what sense had the kingdom come nigh or approached when Christ appeared? In two senses. He brought near the kingdom for offer as an inheritance. The kingdom had never before been preached. The law and the prophets were until John; since, that time the kingdom of God is preached. Luke xvi. 16. Secondly, Jesus was the kingdom in the germ. See Mark xi. 10: "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, which cometh in the name of the Lord." He was the little stone that was destined to become a great mountain to fill the whole earth. The original word translated kingdom, is basileia, and has this comprehensive signification in its secondary sense.

Parkhurst gives this as royal power: majesty, kingly dignity. Jesus the manifestation of God's power, which was afterwards to bloom into a universal political administration was among the people, had approached, and brought the offer of the kingdom with him. Parkhurst further says: The kingdom of heaven or heavens, is a phrase peculiar to Matthew, for which the other evangelists use the kingdom of God. Compare Matt. iv. 17 with Mark i. 14; Matt. xix. 14 with Mark x. 14; Matt. xi. 11 with vii. 28; Matt. xiii. 11 with Mark iv. 11.

Patient Waiting.

MRS. PENNEFATHER.

Not now, my child—a little more rough tossing;
A little longer on the billow's foam;
A few more journeyings in the desert darkness,
And then the sunshine of thy Father's home!

Not now; for I have wanderers in the distance,
And thou must call them in with patient love;
Not now; for I have sheep upon the mountains,
And thou must follow them where'er they rove.

Not now; for I have loved ones sad and weary;
Wilt them not cheer them with a kind'ly smile?
Sick ones, who need thee in their lonely sorrow;
Will thou not tend them yet a little while?

Not now; for wounded hearts are sorely bleeding,
And thou must teach those widowed hearts to sing;
Not now; for orphans' tears are quickly falling;
They must be gathered 'neath some sheltering wing.

Go, with the name of Jesus, to the dying,
And speak that name in all its living power;
Why should thy fainting heart grow chill and weary?
Canst thou not watch with me one little hour?

One little hour! and then the glorious morning;
The golden harp-strings, and the victor's palm.
One little hour! and then the hallelujah:
Eternity's long, deep thanksgiving psalm!

SELECTIONS.

[The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.]

THE COMING TRANSLATION.

Heavenly Citizenship—The Church Caught Up Seven Years before the Judgment—The Three Assizes of Judgment—Christ in the Synagogue—The Antichrist.

The saints living at the time of Christ's coming will be translated suddenly. The salt of the earth, the light of the world, will be suddenly taken away. The law of gravitation keeps me here on this platform, but the moment Christ comes I shall be caught up to meet him in the air. Read Phil. iii. 20, 21: "For our (citizenship) conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ."

Our citizenship is not in London, not in Melbourne, but in heaven. He shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things to himself. Dean Alford suggests the "body of our humiliation" instead of vile body. He is able to subdue all things to himself. We have probably no conception of our first parents' beauty before the fall, humiliated as we are by sin and wickedness, and liable to all the ills that flesh is heir to by reason of sin.

"He shall change our vile bodies." It will be accomplished in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye—it will compare in the quickness of its accomplishment to the flash of lightning. "When this corruptible puts on incorruption, and this mortal puts on immortality," Christ is our great centre of attraction. The law of gravitation holds me where I am; but when Christ comes, the spiritual law of membership in Christ will gather us into the heavens. When we are gone, what then? The world still goes on; churches are left; Bibles will be still here; but, mark, the church of God will be gone.

Then understand how the platform will be cleared for the lawless age in the last few years of this world's history. Infidelity will then have its sway on earth. As certain as this book is true, man has asked God to let him alone, and he will yet have a taste of what human power can do unrestrained by the grace and fear of God. The carnage which is now decimating the population of the earth in various parts may be the first sound of the fulfilling of the time when nations shall be consumed of nations. How striking! nations devouring one another, and disease sweeping them down. I ask you to be on the alert. Of that day and hour knoweth no man. But of the times and seasons we are bound to know them.

Then will follow a scene which I venture to think is about seven years after the church has been taken up. Turn to 2 Thess. i. 7: "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance upon them that know not God," etc. Read 1 Thess. iv. Here we have two events totally dissimilar. Where do you get the coming of Christ for his church? In the first epistle, the fourth chapter, he comes for the church. In the second epistle, and the first chapter, he comes with his church.

They will have been carried to the bridal city, the bride which John saw coming out of heaven adorned for her husband. The Bride's incorruptible life and beauty is not for earth, but for the "prepared [place,"] reserved in heaven for you. John xiv. 3. After that great union of the church with Christ, we dwell not on earth but in his glorious home. The church has gone! The world goes on for a few brief years, but I would rather die ten times over, were it possible, than be on earth when those judgments spoken of in Revelation, from chapters vi. to xix.—all as I believe, in their chief real fulfillment yet future—shall come.

I do not wonder at Christ saying, "So walk that ye may be accounted worthy to escape the things that are coming upon the earth." Notice that we come with him. How do we prove that? Specially see Jude 14, 15. Read 1 Cor. vi. 1, 2: "Having a matter one against another, dare ye go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? Do you not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? Know ye not that ye shall judge angels, how much more things pertaining to this life?"

But I believe some of you thought you were to be tried at the end of this life? Then how comes it that no one upon the judgment seat? "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?" It is perfectly clear. Where is there reference made to it? The Scriptures declare three assizes of judgment. First, his own people in his presence at the judgment-seat of Christ (2 Cor. v. 10). The second is referred to in Matt. xxv.: Christ's judgment of the living Gentile nation; it has nothing to do with the dead, but the living Gentile nations (Christendom).

The third judgment we have in Rev. xx.: the judgment of the great white throne. Remember the saints are distinctly told that they will judge angels and the world also. 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3: Christ said, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things." 2 Cor. v. 10: "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

There are some of God's children who will have their works burnt up. If you are faithful from the time of your conversion till the close of your life, be assured of this, that in eternity your reward will be not only of unutterable enjoyments, but as kings unto God. Our faithfulness here will advance us to high positions in the future glory.

In concluding this important thought let us refer again to 2 Thess. i. 7, 8: "And to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." What a terrible thing persecution is, and how it arouses in us a spirit of vengeance if we allow our evil natures to avenge ourselves! There is nothing the Lord Jesus Christ so entirely enforces as the absence of that in us: "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." The Lord rebuked his disciples when they wanted to call down fire from heaven (Luke ix. 54).

Let us now notice an exceedingly interesting fact that possibly has escaped your observation. The Lord Jesus goes into the synagogue at Nazareth. Luke iv. 16: "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read. And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias.

"And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, the spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister and sat down." Turn to the chapter Christ quotes from, Isaiah lxi. Following the prophecy quoted by Christ, see the second verse: "And the day of vengeance of our God." Does Christ say a word about vengeance? No, not a word. He closed the book abruptly, gave it to the minister, and sat down, saying, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears."

When the Lord came before he came as the Lamb of God, the Savior, to declare the mercy of God, to make known the free proclamation of pardon to the sons of men; there was neither wrath nor vengeance, but, in his days, "peace on earth, good-will to men."

A single comma divides the day of salvation now closing from the day of vengeance speedily coming. What says 2 Thess. i. 7? "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of our Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."

These are solemn words, and I remind you they are not mine. I am thankful to be able to put before you those testimonies that cannot be confuted—testimonies of the Word of the living God. Now I will point you to the close of this age. Read 2 Thess. ii. 1: "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him." Mark the words: "By the coming of our Lord, and by our gathering together unto him." It is really astonishing to read the New Testament and see how full it is of the great truth of the Lord's coming for his people. Again: "That ye be not shaken in mind, or troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, that the day of the Lord is [already come] at hand." This is not the correct rendering. Dean Alford has it: "The day of Christ is come."

A great many persons said that the day of Christ's coming had passed, and they thought they had missed his glorious calling. Says Paul, "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." This is not popery. Popery has never denied the Father and the Son. I believe the papal system an antichrist, but not the antichrist.

That infidelity will be headed up in a man known in Scripture as "the man of sin" before the dispensation closes, I have no doubt. 2 Thess. ii. 5, 6, 7: "Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way." The taking away of the church is the thought here expressed. Then that wicked one will be revealed, whom "the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." Not by the preaching of the gospel, but by "the brightness of his coming."—Rev. Henry Varley.

The Immortality Conference.

Rev. G. A. Brown, of Lincoln, delivered an address on RESURRECTION: IS IT NECESSARY TO A FUTURE LIFE?

He said: Mr. Chairman,—the subject before us this afternoon will necessitate our going into points which perhaps all here will not agree with, but which are in themselves essential to the subject. If we were to ask what we term an orthodox believer it resurrection is absolutely necessary to a future life, we might get a reply that it was not, but occupying a different basis entirely to the orthodoxy of the nineteenth century, resurrection with our views becomes absolutely necessary to a future life. It cannot be denied that in our day the grand theme of preaching is the immortal, the never dying, the imperishable soul or spirit. Salvation from hell, and going to heaven at death, is the all and in all of our modern theology. But in what part of the Bible do we find such language or sentiments? Besides, do you not perceive that such sentiments throw the doctrine of Christ's resurrection into the shade, and are calculated to lead all, whether Jew, Deist, or Pagan, to hope for future life, founded on the immortality of the soul? On this very ground of the doctrine of the inherent immortality of the soul, some of the heathen did hope for future life; on this ground many Deists hope for a future life, for if man have immortal souls they must exist for ever, even if the alleged fact of Christ's resurrection was proved a falsehood. But I appeal to you my friends if the apostle ever held out any hope of future life but what arose from the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead? Well did William Tyndall the translator say in his reply to Sir Thomas More, "In putting departed souls into heaven, hell, and purgatory, you destroy the argument wherewith Christ and the apostles proved the resurrection." We must state here that it becomes a thought mixed with sadness as we think of the thousand pulpits in our land where the gospel is preached without the grand theme of resurrection, which inspired the apostles in days of old: in fact, the doctrine of resurrection becomes a hinderance to orthodoxy instead of a help. They could dispense with it; we are chained to it. (Applause.) We must take our place and our stand with Him who declared himself at the grave of Lazarus as the Resurrection and the Life, and our message carries no hope apart from resurrection. If you can destroy the resurrection you destroy our hope and we are of all men most miserable. (Applause.) We claim relationship with apostolic succession, we take our stand upon this platform and other platforms with the Apostle Paul, and we go with him as he pens the fifteenth chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, and on that argument we base all our arguments for a future life. Sometimes people tell us that our views are so cold, so bloodless. To think that those who sleep are not with Jesus is to some a thought which they think would make them unhappy; but, my friends, however dreadful the thought may be that our loved ones sleep in the dust of the earth, never let us forget that humanity is suffering a penalty for sin. No penalty in itself can have anything beautiful about it. Anything cheering, anything hopeful, in the penalty of, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," still obtains in the world. We do not, neither can we for a moment entertain the thought of any intermediate state of consciousness. For what is there to be conscious? If the man which God made and formed out of the dust returns back to his original elements, what is there to be conscious in the intermediate state? God tells us nothing about this assumed soul or spirit of orthodoxy. He never speaks to it, He never gives it any promise: it is the man that He made out of the dust that He appeals to, that He speaks to, that He pronounces penalty upon, and to whom He holds out a hope in a resurrection for the future. (Applause.) When we tell some people that resurrection is absolutely necessary for the future life, their unbelief at once stops in, and asks us, "How can the identity of man be preserved unless God stows away somewhere in some under-world that which will keep the identity intact?" We are not bound to answer that. We cannot tell what laws God has at His command: we know nothing about His power as yet; but we arch, or bridge, or span that chasm by a promise that God has made, that, "Though a man die, yet shall he live," and we are not bound to supply the intermediate evidence. But let us, for a few moments, consider the argument produced by the Apostle of the Gentiles on the necessity of a resurrection from the dead. The apostle, in the seventeenth verse of the fifteenth chapter, introduces to our notice a thought like this, "If the dead rise not, and if Christ be not raised, ye are yet in your sins, and they who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished—they are not, nor ever will be." The apostle never colors that expression with a single thought that they could exist at all apart from a resurrection; and, in fact, the apostolic argument in the twenty-fifth chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians crumbles to the very dust if they live while they are dead. Perish! Would you introduce another interpretation to that word, and would you tell us that the word "perish" in any way contains in itself the essence of life? You would not. I say it in all kindness, and I speak to those who still retain in their theology an idea that the dead are conscious—you cannot for a moment place one atom of life in the word "perish," for when you are on the platform of the other theory of the destruction of the wicked, you give the word "perish" its fullest force every time you use it. The Apostle Paul there predicates the whole of the future existence of man upon a resurrection from the dead. If there be no resurrection there will be no future conscious existence of any kind for humanity. If the spirits or the souls of the righteous are conscious and in glory, Paul could not, he would not, have asserted that they had perished unless there be a resurrection. This knowledge cannot be reconciled in any way with the dogma of the conscious, separate existences of the spirit. Then we take for instance the argument that it is necessary to resurrection to have this intermediate state. We say it is not necessary to resurrection to have this intermediate state, and then we claim too that you have no reasonable place to put them. God has fitted up no place for these good spirits to dwell in in the intermediate state. The place called Hades is represented to us as a place of darkness; where there is no knowledge, no wisdom, no device. If our friends prefer a place of that kind in consciousness, I prefer the other—the sleep of death, and I would say with Job, "Hide me, but remember me in the morning, that I may be awakened."

We will now pass to the twenty-ninth verse of the fifteenth chapter of the First Epistle of the Corinthians—that obscure passage. The Greeks, mark you, were logical enough to construct an argument that if the soul be immortal the resurrection of the dead is unnecessary. Therefore, many of the Greeks introduced this subject into the very heart of the Christian church, and it is to this class the apostle is addressing himself—those who repudiated the resurrection of the dead. In the twenty-ninth verse he says, "If there is no resurrection why were you baptized for the dead, or why were you baptized to represent your hope in the death and the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and not only Christ's but your own—why were you buried with him in figure, and why are you raised with him in figure as an emblem of your own resurrection when the graves shall give up their dead in the resurrection morning?" He throws this back to them as if they had once believed in the resurrection—that in baptism there was a grand confession of their faith, that they believed that they would be raised again from the dead.

Again, the apostle begins to bring up stronger arguments yet, and to make it a personal question, and a very practical one too, for in the thirtieth verse he appeals to them. We take for granted that they were aware of all the self-denial practiced by the apostle, and all the dangerous positions the apostle had placed himself in bearing testimony to this truth; and he appeals to the Corinthians in this way.—"If the dead rise not, what advantage is it to me after I have fought with beasts at Ephesus? If the dead rise not let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die, and that is the last of it."

We cannot give any other construction to the apostle's argument. We will give it its full weight wherever it takes us and whatever theory it may shatter. Again supposing that the apostle had any idea of the separate existence of the spirit, could he have used such language? Do you think that an orthodox brother could use it in this nineteenth century? Do you think he would use it? No, sir, his faith is not based upon resurrection as was the Apostle Paul's. If an orthodox divine were placed in the same position as the Apostle Paul he would say, "What advantage is it to me if the soul is not immortal? For if the soul is not immortal, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die, and that is the last of us." But it was resurrection on which Paul based the grandest of all the arguments that he ever penned on a future life.

Again, let it be kept in mind that language of this kind is never introduced into the Scripture—the reunion of the soul and body. That is resurrection now; but it was not reunion of this immortal soul or the soul at all with the body: it was the dead raised to life again. That was resurrection. It was the relieving and the restanding up from the dead that was resurrection in Apostolic times; but this theological twaddle of the nineteenth century introduces language into the divine vocabulary that was never known in those days. (Applause.) Do not you think that Paul would have reproved any man in his day who had so shamefully perverted his phrase, "resurrection of the dead," into the phrase, "reunion of soul and body," which is so flippantly used in these days of fables, with the cutting but appropriate rebuke, "Foolish man, the seed which thou sowest is not re-quickened unless it die"? Paul goes a little further, and proves that all the life which we naturally possess is derived from a man made of earth, who was only a living soul or a living animal—for the meaning is exactly the same—and as the father was only of an earthly, mortal, and corruptible nature, so must be all his children. If we have nothing but what has been derived through the first Adam, we shall necessarily perish in the corruption derived from our earthly father—death will be the everlasting end of us; but the believer is to derive his future, perpetual, conscious existence not through a spiritual or incorruptible nature procured for him by the Author of this kind of life whom the Jews killed, but whom God raised from the dead; and before we can procure this incorruptible nature we must be born again from the dead, for that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit or spiritual.

I would here state how very illogical some of our orthodox friends are. For instance, they tell us that the new birth is conversion; and there are thousands of our Methodist friends who believe in a hundred conversions in a lifetime: instead of there being a second birth they have fifty or a hundred births. We read that Christ was the first-born from the dead, and if Christ's resurrection is a birth, my resurrection will be a birth also, and therefore the second birth out of which there will come that unending life that flows through Christ from God to us. Again, Paul reasons like this. He exclaims, "Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural or animal, and afterward that which is spiritual," as though he had said, "No man can derive any spiritual, that is, incorruptible and immortal, nature from a father who himself was made only of dust; and as the first nature, the only one we at present are in the enjoyment of is not a spiritual, that is, an immortal nature but it is only a natural or animal nature, and afterwards when we are raised from the dead then Christians and Christians only will possess an immortal nature. For he argues, "When the trumpet shall sound the dead in Christ that sleep shall be raised incorruptible, for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Now death has the dominion, but when this is accomplished then death will be absorbed in victory. Mark well, those who are now corruptible and now mortal are to put on something which they do not now possess, that is, incorruptibility, which is immortality. They do not possess it now, but they will put it on when the Lord shall be revested from heaven.

If it could be proved that man has about him naturally, or derived from any source whatever, any principle, call it body, soul, or spirit, which in this present state is incorruptible and immortal, it would overturn the masterly arguments of the Apostle Paul. I will just say a few words more relative to the Master. What did he preach? I have often thought that our orthodox friends have lost a grand argument by Christ not having shown himself between his death and his resurrection. If he had, it would have established the conscious existence of man between death and resurrection, but he did not: he kept himself out of the way; he was dead; he could not, for he was dead. When he placed before the minds of the eager listeners of that century of superstition and hopelessness the hope of a future life, what was it? Was it dying and going to heaven at once? He never uttered such a sentence, but "I will raise him up at the last day." Six times do you find the same language in the sixth chapter of St. John, and when he would please those who denied themselves for His sake he said, "You shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," and he not only talked of the resurrection, but he illustrated it by his own power, and demonstrated it at the grave of Lazarus and at that memorable funeral procession where his heart of sympathy was touched for the widow of Nain, when he called her dead son to life again. But I want for a moment just to find out where the Master got Lazarus from. You remember well that he went right to the grave of Lazarus, and said, "Lazarus, come forth." That which came forth was Lazarus. That is resurrection. (Applause.)

"Oh! but," says one, "how can you resurrect men when they have gone into cabbages into grass, and the grass has been eaten by some other animal, and then that animal has been killed and has been eaten by the larger animal, man, and so you may go the round?" My friends, the chemistry of this world is no more to the infinite God than a glass is to us. Is it impossible for a human chemist, if it were necessary, to get every particle that you could grain into a glass, however much it was mixed up? It would be possible for him to get all the particles out and re-arrange and give them back their proper places. The chemist of the Universe has promised resurrection. "But," says one, "do you believe in the resurrection of the very same particles?" I do not care anything about the same particles as long as it is me. May God interest us all in the resurrection life, and let us stamp this sham immortality beneath our feet, for God's sake. (Applause.)

The Influence of Temper on Health.—Our English contemporary, Capital and Labor, which is generally correct in its assertions, thinks that, while excessive labor, exposure to wet and cold, deprivation of sufficient quantities of necessary and wholesome food, habitual bad lodging, sloth, and intemperance, are all deadly enemies to human life, none of them are so bad as violent and ungoverned passions. Men and women have survived all the former, says the writer, and at last reached an extreme old age; but it may be safely doubted whether a single instance can be found of a man of violent and irascible temper, habitually subject to storms of ungovernable passion, who has arrived at a very advanced period of life. It is, therefore, a matter of the highest importance to every one desirous of preserving "a sound mind in a sound body," to have a special care, amid all the vicissitudes and trials of life, to maintain a quiet possession of his own spirit.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the possession of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as preparatory to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Matthew xxviii. 16-20.—No. 2.

END OF THE WORLD.

C. M. MYERS.

Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshipped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen. Matt. xxviii. 16-20.

To Disciple.—I will now give attention to your second question, "What world, or age in the above Scripture is referred to?"

The Greek—aion, rendered age—signifies, according to Bagster, "A period of time of significant character; life; an era; an age; hence, a state of things marking an age or era, the present order of nature; the natural condition of man, the world." Groves says: "Eternity; an age, life; duration, or continuance of time; a period; a revolution of ages; a dispensation of providence; this world, or life; the world or life to come."

Without stopping to argue the point, it is evident that the word aion, in our text, is used in the sense of a period of time or dispensation. The Bible speaks of an antediluvian, a post-diluvian and a millennial or restitution period. People talk of a patriarchial, a Jewish and a Christian or Gentile period or dispensation.

While the Bible would recognize the division of the post-diluvian period or age into other periods and would mark these by changes in laws and ministrations, it says nothing of the beginning, duration, or ending of a Jewish age. Under the reign of Rehoboam as king the kingdom of Israel was divided into two parts, one part still retaining the original name, and the other known as the kingdom of Judah. Shortly after this the citizens of the latter kingdom were called Jews. Of the removal of this Judaical kingdom, and of the end of their nationality Jesus could have had no reference in the text. Of its close or end where shall we place the date? Of it the prophet wrote, B. C. 593: "And thou profane wicked prince of Israel whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, thus saith the Lord God; remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 25-27.

After the return of the Jews from Babylon, passing over other minor occurrences, B. C. 172, Antiochus, the illustrious, took possession of the country, and the city, and of the temple service appointing his own priests; and B. C. 170, he offered upon the altar swine's flesh. Again, B. C. 65, Pompey the Roman general, reduced the country to a Roman province. B. C. 40, the last of the Asmonian dynasty was beheaded, and Herod, the Idumean, reigned in his stead. And next, A. D. 66-72, the city was besieged and destroyed by Titus the Roman general. And then, in A. D. 135, Barchochebas, who claimed to be Messiah, instituted a rebellion for the purpose of holding the city against the Romans, and he augurated a war, says Kitto, "Scarcely inferior in horror to that under Vespasian and Titus." He says: "This was brought to a close by the capture of Jerusalem at which the Jews had obtained possession. This was in A. D. 135, from which period the final dispersion of the Jews has been often dated." Now, to which of these events one could refer in speaking of the close of the Jewish age would be hard to tell. Therefore, we repeat that, to the close of the Jewish nationality Jesus, in our text, could not have made any reference.

But, as we have remarked, the Bible recognizes the division of the post-diluvian period or age, into other periods or ages, it might be well enough to ask and to examine if to one of these he referred. Of these periods, characterized by promises, changes in laws and ministrations we read:

1. "The Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, in this shall all nations be blessed." "And to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." Gal. iii. 8, 16.

2. "The law was added—to the promises—because of transgressions." This brings to view, then, in addition to the promises made to Abraham, not a Jewish period or age, but a law period or age added at a date 430 years later than the promises. This law period or age, we find, had its limitation. "It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promises was made." "Wherefore the law was our—Israel's—schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But, after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster." Gal. iii. 19, 24, 25.

Now, that Jesus could not, in our text, have referred to the end of this law period, age, or world, is evident from the following Scriptures:

1. "And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; blotting out the hand writing of ordinances that was against us, which was against us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross." Col. ii. 13, 14.

2. "Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman which hath an husband, is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then, if while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress, but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." Rom. vii. 1-4.

3. "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him—the beast—whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation—katabolee—casting down—of the (a) world (kosmou)." Rev. xiii. 8.

4. "Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world, but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Heb. ix. 25, 26.

But, of this last text, it may be claimed that the phrase "in the end of the world," is somewhat indefinite and may signify, just before the close of the world or age, or during the end, or during the time of the end. But scholars have not so understood it, and have not so rendered it, as the following renderings will show:

1. Diaglott—At the end of the ages.
2. Macknight—At the conclusion of the ages.
3. Rheims—At the end of the ages.
4. Wesley—At the consummation of the ages.
5. Sawyer—At the consummation of the world.
6. Wakefield—At the conclusion of the ages.
7. A. Campbell—At the conclusion of the ages.
8. Improved Version—At the conclusion of the ages.
9. Belsham—At the conclusion of the ages.

Thus it is to be seen, unmistakably, from the above citations, that the end of the world, so far as it pertains to the law period, took place when Christ died, when he was sacrificed, when he expired upon the cross, when he was slain as a lamb from the katabolee—casting down of a world. With this point so firmly settled, it follows necessarily, as the commission, which our text records, was given after the Savior was raised from the dead, that he could have had no reference to the end of this law period or age.

One other age, marked from the one just considered by a change of law, priesthood, and mediatorship remains to be considered. This had its beginning as referred to by Peter shortly after the law age closed. "And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning." Acts xi. 15.

Let us gather a few texts together to elucidate this point more clearly.

1. Our text—"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations."

2. "And ye are witnesses of these things, and behold, I send the promise of my father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv. 48, 49.

3. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the spirit gave them utterance." Acts ii. 1-4.

This age, then, is characterized and measured by the proclamation of this message, and by the duration of its laws, and, therefore, must reach to the end of Gentile times, till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, till from among the Gentiles a people for God's name is secured, which work, when accomplished, will have prepared the way for the Savior's return to rebuild David's tabernacle and to usher in his kingdom. But I have, in all probability, already said enough upon these questions. The positions taken in these two articles opens up the way for, and renders necessary at some future time another article, and on the perpetuation of miraculous power. This I will write.

Meekness.

By Scriptural examination, we find that one of the greatest characteristics, and also one of the greatest essential mediums of our salvation, is meekness. Jesus, the author of our salvation, shows us a grand example of meekness, which we would do well to follow if we wish "to dwell in him, and he in us." "He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before his shearer is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart. Meekness is one of the links of the great chain of salvation, which if left out of the grand combination, would cause the rest of the required duties to be of no use; and as they would be of no avail without meekness, then, meekness would, by being separated from the other essential duties, become weak and sickly and at last die out, leaving the persons who have all that God requires of him, except meekness which he has allowed to become dormant in an unsaved state. If we would become participants of the "joys unspeakable" which will be given unto those who may be accounted worthy of the kingdom of God, we must put on meekness "and all humility of mind," subjecting ourselves to all the many trials of this world, to principalities and power, and to obey magistrates, and all others of authority; looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ. There is a promise given unto the meek, and it is, that "they shall inherit the earth." Then we find from this, that this earth is to be the final abode or dwelling place of the meek. If then to the meek this is promised, then this is "joy unspeakable and full of glory, and that fadeth not away." Therefore "seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness, it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger," "The meek will he guide in judgment, the meek will he teach his way." "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away reserved in heaven for you." You will meet with many hardships on the way, you will be reproached for the name of Christ, but "happy are you, for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you." But if you conquer and overcome all these obstacles that will beset you on all sides, you will be endowed with the wisdom that is from above;" which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy. The influences of the world and the evil thereof, has a great tendency to keep us back; it is a great struggle to overcome these, but we must persevere in meekness, and then with the help of God, we will overcome. We must keep up our courage, for we have God before us in the way; therefore let us not get disheartened but be of good courage, and he will strengthen our hearts. "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Love not the world (says Jesus), nor the things that are in the world. "If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him." "If any man suffer as a Christian let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf." For "the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer. I remain yours, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Heresies in the Apostolic Church.

Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ Col. ii. 8.

Even at the dawn of its existence the Christian Church was harrassed and injured by heresies, or serious errors in doctrine—a mournful and instructive fact. Under the very eyes of Apostles they crept in; working deformity, divisions, and ruin. They emanated chiefly from two quarters—Judaism and Heathendom; and many of the converts, Jews and Gentiles, being preoccupied with old ideas when they embraced Christianity, thoughtlessly blended the new and the old, distorting gospel truth, and gospel institutions. Sometimes, in their imperfect acquaintance with the Messianic religion, they appear to have imagined that it would be improved by the additions of maxims and dogmas familiar to them from childhood; the consequences of which were dreadful alike to the innovators, and those under their influence. That was nothing short of the high crime of dictating to the Holy Spirit; mingling light and darkness; the water of life with the fountain of death.

An error called forth the epistle to the Romans, in which grace—favor to the death-deserving—is magnified as the essence of the gospel, in opposition to the fatal view that justification could be obtained, in whole or in part, by obedience to moral instincts or requirements. As a result of a train of reasoning against that pernicious doctrine, the mighty spiritual thinker lays this down as an immutable rule; "a man is justified by faith," that is, freely "without the deeds of the law." Rom. iii. 28.

A kindred error—heresy as we call such now—moved him to write to the Galatian church, condemning a Jewish importation, viz., that the salvation of guilty men depended, in any degree, on keeping the abrogated ceremonial law. That, to an equal extent with the former, was fatal. In as much as it annihilated the absolute freeness of pardon; and maintained in effect that the Son of God had not "finished" on the cross the work he was commissioned to perform. "I testify to every man that is circumcised"—depending on that as a condition of salvation—"that he is a debtor to do the whole law," which no man can sinlessly observe. "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law"—that is, seek to be justified and accepted on the ground of obedience; "Ye are fallen from grace"—ye are rejecting the divine method of a free deliverance, and will perish at last. Gal. v. 2, 4.

Then we have the heresy of Hymeneus and Philetus—that the resurrection was past already, which overthrew the faith of some, 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18.

Actually at Corinth some who professed to be disciples, running to an opposite extreme, gave him, whom Robertson of Brighton considers "the sublimest of the human race," occasion to demand: "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead"? 1 Cor. xv. 12. Christians, and no resurrection! What they became Christians for, or what they imagined Christianity to provide, is beyond our ability to determine. Possibly, they continued to hold by their heathen notions about souls, and Tartarus, and the Elysian fields; and dreaming of a departure to the blissful climes at death, saw little to be gained from a resurrection; nay, probably they ascended to the idea that it was undesirable, and allowed it as a Christian doctrine to slip from their minds, or sink into contempt. But the Apostle had as little sympathy with heathen relics, as with a positive and unreserved antagonism to the gospel, and he hurled his arguments against their conceits: "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain—you have believed a lie; "ye are yet in your sins. Then, they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18.

It seems that sections of the church in our time, are rapidly approaching—in effect, at least—the condition of those misguided adherents to the cause of Christ in the famous Grecian City. The resurrection is not now the indispensable hope: in some quarters it is rarely, if ever, adverted to; and since what is meant by it in this benighted period is only a shadow—a ghost of the reality—we do not wonder at the silence. Towards the beginning of this year—1879—seven letters by distinguished clergymen belonging to the United States of America, representative men in their respective communions, appeared in the North American Review on the subject of "The Future Life," and especially on "Eternal Punishment;" and, strange to tell, the resurrection was never once mentioned by any of the writers, from first to last! Even by accident, neither the word nor the thing, ever came within the sphere of vision.

In the church at Thessalonica there was a prevalent sorrow, arising from a misunderstanding of the divine purposes, which threatened to chrystalize into a heresy. There it was conjectured that departed saints who were slumbering in the dust would be deprived, for a longer or shorter time, of the blessed vision of the Savior on his return to earth. That notion had to be counteracted by the Apostle, and in the course of his first epistle (1 Thess. iv.), he assures the brethren that they were afflicting themselves without a cause. Of course, he does not tell them their deceased friends were alive and already before the throne; but testifies that the "dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain will be caught up together with them, to meet the Lord in the air." In a word, he taught the mourners that there was no preventing, that is, on one going before another—no priority in the matter and privilege of beholding their common Lord. They pass not into his presence before us, we pass not before them; we behold him at once and altogether; we begin our heavenly life and experience at the same date to the future.

To mention but one more: in the 1st Epistle of John, chapters 2d and 4th, we discover references to another error, derived from Asiatic speculations, that Jesus though manifested to men, was not manifested "in the flesh." The oriental philosophy, parent of this heretical tenet, educated its disciples in the belief that terrestrial matter was sinful, or the cause of human depravity. Hence the moral perfection of the Redeemer, as one clothed with ordinary humanity, was not compatible with that system of thought; and to save his immaculate being and character, the Docetæ, as they were called, denied the materiality of his person, or his literal incarnation. They promulgated instead the notion that he was fleshly only in appearance, not in reality. The spectator was the subject of an ocular deception; he thought he saw a man exactly like other men, so far as humanity was concerned; but in that he was mistaken. Thus once more a baseless and chimerical system of human thought, called by the sounding name of philosophy, made the truth of God, and the facts of nature, yield to its overbearing supremacy.

In opposition to that dogma, and the seemingly good intention of its authors, the aged Boanerges, now bending over the tomb, turned his face and his energies with all his earlier zeal and persistency. He styles the promulgators of the opinion "false prophets" (iv. 1); in verse 3d, he declares that "every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God;" and chapter iv. v. 6, refers, in confirmation of the true doctrine, to the physical phenomena attending his Master's death; when, on his inanimate body being pierced, blood and water, and not the semblance of the two, or something like them, issued from the wound: "This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus the Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the spirit that beareth witness, because the spirit is truth."

If at so early a date the Christian society was literally infested with heresies, poisonous weeds springing up amidst the good grain—need it astonish us if some of the ancient errors still exist, and that during the long intervening centuries many new ones have been introduced by opinionative and ambitious spirits into the vast community bearing our Lord's name? The first epoch of the church was its best, and was singularly favored by the presence of inspired Apostles; but conspicuous errors even then distorted the simplicity of the revelation, and neutralized its healing efficacy. We venture to complain sorrowfully of the grievous impositions that faith is invited to recognize now. Those familiar with the literature of the Life and Death controversy know how surely it has been established that our age is afflicted with tremendous delusions, as to soul, and death, and resurrection, and immortality, and the end of the impenitent, to mention no more, that ought to overwhelm their patrons with the deepest regret; and to raise and cry, not to be allayed by consecrated blandness, or stifled by any ecclesiastical garrote; a cry for the ancient and Bible truth on all such matters, that would be like life from the dead to the church itself; and anew bring forth saving knowledge to the perishing millions, mystified to weariness with pious inventions, and driven to unbelief and despair by ruthless and immeasurable terrors, said to be divine, but unknown amid the alarms and outrages to Infinite Justice and Love. The wealth of the Rothschild family, which is supposed to be the richest family in the world, has been the accumulation of a comparatively short time. It is said that the founder of the family fortunes once traveled to a country fair to dispose of a roll of cloth which constituted his sole stock in trade. On the way he was overtaken by another pedlar, going the same road, with an ass to carry his stuff. He said to Rothschild, "Ease yourself of that burden, and put it on the ass." This was done, and they journeyed on till they came to a deep and narrow ravine, across which a single plank served as a bridge. The ass was going over, when the prudent Rothschild said, "Wait a moment I will take back my cloth; it is all my fortune, and accidents often happen at such places as this." So saying he took his load from the ass's back. The ass and his master stepped upon the plank, which sank under their weight, and they disappeared into the chasm. M. Rothschild remained in safety on the bank, bearing with him that single bale, from which has grown the enormous fortune of his family now so large as to control the policy of nations.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOV. 6, 1878.

SOME articles are necessarily deferred till the next number.

THE conference at Argos closed on Sunday evening. Brethren J. P. Weeber, C. C. Ramsey and J. M. Stephenson, were in attendance from abroad. A fuller report will probably be furnished next week.

THE number of the Bible Examiner for October has come to hand after a suspension for five months on account of the severe illness of its editor, Brother George Storrs. His daughter, Miss H. W. Storrs, has become assistant editor and thus writes concerning her father:

"Many of the readers of the Bible Examiner will wish to know something of the nature of the editor's severe illness, suffering, for months, the most excruciating pain day and night. He has borne it all with unexampled patience, believing that the dear Lord, who saw it all, was thereby preparing him for a glorious work in the ages to come.' He remains very feeble and devoid of strength, which is not strange, considering the utter prostration of his nervous system."

He proposes to start a new volume of the Examiner, commencing Jan., 1880, but the first number will be issued in December.

Balaam.

One of the grandest episodes in Sacred History is the narrative of that mysterious prophet whom Balak, in agonizing terror, summoned from his distant home, in the "mountains of the east," to come with his enchantments, and devote to destruction that invincible host, whose tents spread over the plains of Moab, amid the "lign aloes and cedars" which the Lord had planted on the east of Jordan over against Jericho. On the morrow after the arrival of the poet seer, the terrified king led him to a rocky pinnacle, where were the high places of Baal, and from these crested heights he saw the outermost of the goodly tents of Jacob, and the tabernacles of Israel in the retreating distance. From his mountain observatory, as the diviner turned his glance toward the rising sun, the outlook was across a desert that stretched away to the great river beyond which was his native Aram. On the south was the Dead Sea whose stagnant waters covered the sulphur-burnt cinders of old Sodom and Gomorrah, and, where, low down in the bituminous slime, were urned the calcined bones and ashes of their horrible sinners. Away further down were the mountains of Edom where the lofty masses of igneous rock-porphyry were overlaid with red and variegated sandstone, which gave the cliffy heights the most striking features and remarkable colors. To the north was the valley of the Jordan through which flowed the innavigable river, upon whose banks no commercial city has ever been built, and whose course was over rapids till its waters were lost in that sea of "unfathomable brine" that has "never known a port." Beyond this river his vision took in the land of Palestine, with its rising hills and intervening valleys, beyond which, though lost to sight, rolled the waters of the great sea embosoming islands, and laving countries, whose name and renown were to become the themes of later times. In the orient land of his nativity the "coasts of Chittim" conveyed the only indefinite idea that Balaam had of the maritime lands and islands connected with the Mediterranean. Twice had Balak's messengers traversed the great Assyrian desert, with "the rewards of divination in their hand," before the Magian from the Orient, with his enchantments and the son of Zippor, king of Moab, met on the pinnacles of Abarim, and together surveyed the dim and vast outline of that grand panorama of desert land and mountain height, of cultured vale and wooded water-course, of the precipitous rushing Jordan and that sullen sea of death, that met their vision from the different quarters.

But sublime as nature was in these, her grandest exhibitions, yet to the seer in his trances, but with open eyes, the sublime forms of empire in rise, progress, and ruin, as they loomed up in the "visions of the Almighty" before the intuitive inner senses of the rapt spokesman of God, were infinitely more transcendently wonderful. The future fortunes of the nations that peopled the lands spread around the mountains of vision, the Queen of Empires seated on the rivers of the east, and the maritime monarchies enthroned on the peninsulas and islands of the great sea, as naval conquerors, all pass before the scrutinizing contemplation of the inspired Gentile sage. Filled with "the knowledge of the Most High" his prophetic scope took in the course of time, till, in the distant future, he beheld the rising of a "star out of Jacob" whose splendors by far outshone the brightness of that orb that sparkles on the frontlet of the dawn. Before the luster of Israel's luminary, the "stars of earthly empire" pale and go out in the gloom of an eternal night. Moab, Balak's fatherland, is fated to be smitten through and through to its utmost corners and bounding extremities. Over the children of Sheth, those sons of war and tumult, the dark brooding wings of destruction are seen to hover. Edom and its wild precipitous ranges of Mount Seir succumb to the conquering invaders, and palaces and temples whose entablatures, pilasters, and columns were carved in the long rock ranges become the desolations of ages. The rock-rooms become tenantless; the living go to the "petrified city of the dead."

Amalek, whose primal history is lost in the depths of an unrecorded antiquity, was known to the fate-predicting prophet as the "first of the nations" but the voice of destiny pronounced that his latter day doom should be—"to perish forever." The Kenites, too, had an unrecorded origin, and a history, in later times, somewhat singularly connecting them with the promised land; but though they became strongly fixed in their fastnesses, they were to become the captives of the great prophetic empire whose seat was on the river floods, and which would, like a swelling deluge, finally break over all these countries from the remote east. Last of all the wonderful prophet turns his enquiring eyes, so strangely opened and strengthened as to penetrate remote space and time, westward to behold a tempest of war and conquest rising out of the "coasts of Chittim" before which the glory of Asshur should be crushed, and his own nation Eber—"the people over the river"—perish, forever. This last scene, that showed that his own people would finally pass away in the revolutions of the coming ages, extorted from the lips of Balaam the wild cry of distress and despair—"Alas, who shall live when God doeth this?"

Before the vision of the strangely inspired Gentile, principalities, kingdoms, and empires, disappear and perish from the earth, as the scroll of ages is unrolled before his divinely quickened perceptions. But there is one people that outlives revolutions and empires. Standing on his mountain eminence the irrepressible words break from his lips as he looks down upon Israel's encampments in the vales below; "How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy whom the Lord hath not defied? From the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him; lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be numbered among the nations: who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel?" Here is the amazing prediction concerning a nation that it would never become blended with other nationalities, and, also, that it would remain an undiminished multitude of people not only through all the internal vicissitudes, and changes that might await it in coming times, but also through all its deportations and scatterings among all other nations. For another survey, in order to malediction, Balaam climbs the lofty pinnacle of Pisgah, and the prophetic impulse enforces another blessing upon the chosen of Jacob: "Behold I have received commandment to bless; and he hath blessed and I cannot reverse it. God brought them out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of an unicorn. Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel; according to this time it shall be said of Jacob and of Israel, what hath God wrought!"

Once more from the heights of Peor, to whose more lofty and sacred summits Balaam was conducted to essay for the last time his occult powers, but when he saw that it pleased the Lord to bless Israel he ceased to seek enchantments, lifted up his eyes and saw Israel abiding in their tents in tribal order, and the spirit of God came upon him, when he once more takes up his parable and predicts the future prosperity and royalty of the chosen tribes: "He hath said which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open; how goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel! As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as the cedars beside the waters, he shall pour the water out of his buckets, and his seed shall be in many waters, and his King shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted."

The star-heralded One has not yet taken the sceptre of Israel. As King, his dominion is yet future. The monarch and nation are never dissociated in prophecy. "Out of Jacob shall he come that shall have dominion," and over the nation that has survived the ruins of empires, and the death of the mightiest nationalities, will he sway the sceptre of an everlasting kingdom. The star of Bethlehem, like the star seen by Balaam, was the herald of a future monarch destined to rule the same people—and that people is ISRAEL.

Judah and Israel.

For the three subjoined short articles we are indebted to the last number of the Prophetic Times. The first is only the closing part of a longer article contributed to the paper by S. Bonhomme, who has written a number of quite interesting communications for the above named journal on prophecy, and particularly on predictions relating to Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem. The two short extracts following this first will be particularly interesting as indicative of the present condition of Jewish affairs. The set time to favor Zion approaches, and the Lord promises concerning Israel—"I will plant them upon their own land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them saith the Lord thy God.' Amos ix. 15.

THE PERPETUITY OF ISRAEL'S ORDINANCES.

Gentile Christians are apt to say concerning Israel and Judah, "The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off;" but on referring to the passage where the Lord takes notice of this saying among the Gentiles, Jeremiah xxxiii. 19, we shall find that which may well make us lay our hands upon our mouths. Thus it runs:—"And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah saying, thus saith the Lord; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the levites, the priests, my ministers; and why the levites and the priests in conjunction with the Son of God upon the throne of David, but for the perpetuation of Israel's ordinances?

As the host of heaven cannot be numbered neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, "and the levites that minister unto me." Moreover, the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah saying, considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, the two families which the Lord hath chosen he hath even cast them off? thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord, if my covenant be not with day and night, and I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them. "I know and am sure from the word of the eternal God that however now dispersed, scattered and peeled, this people, terrible from their beginning hitherto, may be, while strange rivers spoil their land, they are a nation still, "in God's right a nation;" and am sure as the sun sets in the twilight in the west, is still that orb of light, on whose rising to-morrow we can calculate with the confidence of simple certainty, so sure it is that Israel and Judah, as a nation, "as the chief of nations, shall again repossess that very land of Canaan, those very mountains of Judea, that very holy city of Jerusalem, now in all its blight and barrenness, until the promised word shall be verified. "But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people Israel; for they are at hand to come," yea, we see already the beginning, and note the progress of it. For behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown; and I will multiply men upon you, "all the house of Israel," i. e. the entire nation, and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded; and I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit, and I will settle you after your old estates, and I will do better unto you than at your beginnings, and ye shall know that I am the Lord." Ezekiel xxxvi. 8-11.

A REMARKABLE MOVEMENT AMONG THE JEWS.

There was an indescribable yearning in the Jew toward the land owned by his ancestors. At this moment, this indescribable yearning had turned to Jerusalem in such a stream of emigration that some of the Jews were proposing to arrest it by assisting the pauper emigrants to turn to their own countries. The Jewish Chronicle, while lamenting the influx, said that they might as well attempt to turn the course of the Atlantic as to stem this irresistible tide. He stated that in the total population of 35,000, the Jews in Jerusalem were reckoned two years ago to have increased 13,000, and now they are numbered at 18,000; and the contributions for their support from the Jews of other countries were estimated at £60,000 ($300,000) a year. Dr. Moody Stuart stated, at the late general assembly of the Free Church, quoting a very remarkable statement which was recently made by one of the Jewish organs in England, namely: "If it is the good will of providence that there should arise out of the accumulated ashes of desolation which covers Palestine, an era of glory which shall unite the Jews in the cradle of their race and their religion, that consummation could not take place under happier auspices than those of England, although it was remarked that the time for this was not yet. In addition to the growing desire of the Jews to return to their own land, and signs of desire elsewhere to hasten their return, there was, he thought, another element in the hope of the world's peace being cemented by their occupying the lands of their fathers.

A leading London journal has recently thus adverted to this: "The possession of Palestine and a part of Syria by a people who have retained an indestructible nationality, while they have learned a complete cosmopolitanism during some eighteen centuries, a nation at once European and Asiatic—Asiatic in its origin, and European in its education, would not be by any means a bad arrangement. It might not be impolitic on the part of the European power to assist in placing so influential a people in so important a position, as the inevitable decay of Turkish power renders a change of government necessary. All the difficulties and jealousies incident to any project of joint occupation would be avoided; for the Jew is at once of no nation and of all. No people could better solve what before many years must become the Syrian difficulty.

THE JEWS AND PALESTINE.

The following was translated from a French newspaper: Judging by reports, which appear tolerably well confirmed, the Jews are a little by little retaking possession of their ancient patrimony. Eighty years ago the sublime Porte permitted residence in the Holy City to only three hundred Israelites. Forty years ago this number was raised; but the Jews were obliged to reside in a special quarter of the city which bore their name. This last restriction, however, disappeared in its turn ten years ago, and since then the Jews have bought up all the land in Jerusalem that could be bought, and have even built entire streets of houses outside the walls. Synagogues and Jewish hospitals have multiplied. The German Jews have no less than sixteen charity associations, and in the interior of the city one may count already twenty-eight congregations. Two journals have been established. In the Rothschild and other Jewish hospitals, six thousand patients are ministered to annually; a Venetian Jew has given 60,000 francs to found a school of agriculture in Palestine. Baron Rothschild, at the time of the last loan of 200,000,000, made to Turkey, accepted a mortgage on the whole of Palestine. Owing to the Jewish emigration the population of Palestine has doubled during the last ten years.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Plain Facts.—No. 2.

"And he (Paul) went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God." Acts xix. 8-10-20.

"Paul dwelt in his own hired house, ... preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him." Acts xxviii. 30, 31, 32; xxvi, 6, 7.

"And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more." Acts xx. 25.

3. What is this kingdom? The answer derived from the following testimonies is, that it is a divine, political dominion, to be established on the earth with the object of upsetting and superceding all existing governments, and bringing the world into subjection to God. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. ii. 44. "And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen nations." Haggai ii. 22.

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi. 15.

"I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him. (Christ); his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom which shall not be destroyed." Dan. vii. 13, 14; xviii. 23-27.

"For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." 1 Cor. xv. 25.

"And the Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one." Zech. xiv. 9.

"Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen (nations) for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them on pieces like a potters vessel." Psa. ii. 5, 9.

"The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath." Psa. cx. 5.

"And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called faithful and true, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. .... Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords." Rev. xix. 11-13-15, 16.

The following passage is supposed to discountenance this doctrine: "Neither shall they say, lo, here, or lo, there," Prof. Whiting, a learned Greek scholar, renders it, "the King is among you." Even the margin substitutes "among" for within, which puts a very different complexion upon it. Dr. Adam Clark says, on this passage: "Perhaps these Pharisees thought that the Messiah was kept secret, in some private place known only to some of their rulers; and that by and by he should be proclaimed in a similar way to that in which Jesus was by Jehoiada, the high priest." See account 2 Chron. xxiii. 1-11. Also, some think the kingdom of God is the church. This idea is gathered from Col. i. 12, "who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated, changed, (metestesen) us into (eis for) the kingdom of his dear Son." The Greek participle eis rendered "into," also means "for." For instance, it is so rendered in the Common Version, Luke ix. 62. "No man having put his hand to the plow, and looking back is fit for (eis) the kingdom of God." The passage under consideration, therefore, literally stands thus: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness and changed us for the kingdom of his dear Son?" That kingdom is not yet manifest, and flesh and blood cannot inherit it. See 1 Cor. xv. 50; 2 Peter i. 11; 2 Thess. i. 5; Acts xiv. 22.

The Result.

I have been much interested in the discussion of the state of the dead and resurrection in our paper for the last few months, and regretted to hear that it was soon to be dropped. The readers have been much benefitted and are now much better posted on this subject than our co-religionists with their years of schools of divinity. Resurrection, and who are to be the subjects of it, has caused most of the divisions that have arisen among those looking for the personal coming of Jesus. It caused the Christadelphian organization and its various divisions, until now its almost a lifeless body, as cold and barren as an iceberg. Our own brotherhood are much divided on this subject. I have been these twenty-five years studying the Bible trying to find the light it clearly reveals, with my way now clear, and this is the result: As we can have no life or birth here in this present life without begettal or parentage (generation), so we can have no future life without begettal, birth, regeneration, and as Christ is the only life-giver, all those out of Christ, by a begettal, if dead, can have no birth or resurrection. No life out of Christ is the Bible idea. A resurrection of the wicked would be a new creation. That would be impossible, because creation's work was finished in the first couple—Adam and Eve. Some think that man, in his natural state, is indispensable to God's glory, but he is just as much value in God's estimation as any other animal. He becomes valuable in God's sight just as he develops character. God is taking out a people for his name and glory, and the many called are now on trial, and the few chosen are those that hear the word, understand it, and keep clear from this world's corruptions; but, brethren, why should we differ on this question? We are saved, if saved at all, by believing and practising just what the apostles teach us. They were chosen by Jesus, instructed in just what to tell us, filled with and led by the spirit, Jesus in them speaking to us Gentiles, and Paul tells us he kept nothing back. Now, where did Paul, or any of the chosen teachers ever tell us that a certain belief or any belief as to what is to be the fate of the wicked is essential to our salvation? Well, if any particular belief as to God's plan as to the wicked other than that they will be shut out the kingdom, is nowhere made a question by the chosen instructors sent out by Jesus, why should we raise the issue now? Jesus at one time said to Peter, follow me, but Peter seeing John at a distance (much like many of the professed disciples now) wanted to know first what Jesus was going to do with John. Jesus replied, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." Brethren, let us profit by this, and not take many others, die out, refusing to follow Jesus, until we know just what he is going to do with some others. Some insist on feet-washing, others on a yearly passover, and so on. Well, if all these were so important, why did not Paul or the other apostles tell us so? Did they forget it, and we left in the dark for ages, until some one gets up an improvement on God's plan, now obtaining a patent on it without one of the apostle's gifts to back up the same, and thereby throw discord and division among the fold?

Yours, for a full and free examination of this, and all other subjects that interests the body of Christ, but all in a kind and brotherly manner,

The Second Death.

The word second is from "Secundus," a Latin derivative from sequor, I follow. It is a deponent verb, having the passive form. It is called deponent because it deposes or lays down its passive sense and expresses the sense of an active verb. "The second is next in rank—the second in order and in number. It always expresses the fact of succession. Thus, the second advent—the second covenant—embodies the idea and fact of foregoing first advent, and first covenant. Hence, it is idle and quite out of the range of both Bible truth and all fact, to speak of the second death except as it follows the first,—the once to die." Heb. ix. 27.

JOHN.

A Frightful Story from the Arctic Ocean.

Captain Sands reports a frightful story from St. Lawrence Island, in the Behring Sea. Almost the entire population of the southeastern end of the island has perished of starvation.

A party landed from the Collins and were horified to find 250 corpses in one field. The living had carried the dead away from the huts until at length, overcome themselves, they in turn died in the huts, and no remained. Everywhere the scene was frightful. One little girl the Captain speaks of seeing stiff in death, with her head resting on her hand, while the body leaned over the remains of a whale.

Mr. Sands attributes the starvation to rum. Nearly every "trader" goes to the Arctic loaded with it, and so long as the liquor lasts the natives will not go fishing. Then it is too late, and starvation follows. On the northwest end of the island about 200 natives are still alive. He says that revenue steam cutters are of no use to stop this traffic. The "traders" see the smoke, and get out of the way, or get rid of their contraband liquors before they can be reached. A sailing vessel of a hundred tons, he says, could end the traffic.

Women and Wine.

Any woman who drinks alcoholic liquors as a beverage casts a doubt upon her character.

The action of alchohol on the brain is to deaden reason and caution, and to stimulate passion. To protect her honor, a woman's head must be clear—her reason must control her. Alcoholic liquor weakens her reason and stimulates her passions.

Wine, beers and other alcoholic liquors are the most common drugs used by libertines to assist in ruining the fair girls of our land. Probably more than nine-tenths of the fallen women have fallen after using alcoholic liquors as a beverage. These facts prove: First, that woman by using alcoholic liquor weakens the higher elements of her womanhood, and places herself in a condition where she may easily become the victim of a libertine. Second, that no respectable man will offer a lady he respects alcoholic liquors of any kind.

POETRY.

We Shall Know.

When the mists have rolled in splendor
From the beauty of the hills,
And the sunshine, warm and tender,
Falls in splendor on the rills,
We may read love's shining letter
In the rainbow of the spray;
We shall know each other better
When the mists have cleared away.

We can err in human blindness,
And forget that we are dust;
We miss the law of kindness
When we struggle to be just;
Snowy wings of peace shall cover
All the pain that clouds our way,
When the weary watch is over,
And the mists have cleared away.
We shall know as we are known,
Never more to walk alone,
In the dawning of the morning,
When the mists have cleared away.

When the silvery mists have veiled us
From the faces of our own,
Oft we deem their love has failed us,
And we tread our path alone;
We should see them near and truly,
We should trust them day by day,
Neither love nor blame unduly,
If the mists were cleared away.
We shall know as we are known,
Never more to walk alone,
In the dawning of the morning,
When the mists have cleared away.

When the mists have risen above us,
As our Father knows his own,
Face to face with those that love us,
We shall know as we are known.
Low beyond the silent meadows
Flists the golden fringe of day;
Heart to heart we bide in shadows
Till the mists have cleared away.
We shall know as we are known,
Never more to walk alone,
When the day of light is dawning,
And the mists have cleared away.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—The Lord Jesus says: "It is the spirit that quickens; the flesh profits nothing; the words that I speak unto you, are spirit and are life." John vi. Then said Jesus to those Jews that believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, ye are my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." John xviii. "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." John xv. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth," John xvii. "The word of God is quick (life-giving) and powerful," etc. Hebrews iv. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." 1 Tim iv. "Sin no more lest a worse thing come upon thee." John v. "I have hid thy words in my heart that I might not sin." Psalm cxxix.; see also 1 Psalm.

It may be affectionately suggested that the preceding passages justify the belief, that the diligent study of the Holy Scriptures is calculated to make the present life happier, and, consequently, longer. This study will bring one more and more into fellowship with the prophets and the apostles, and, consequently, into fellowship with the infinitely perfect One, and with the Lord Jesus anointed. The undersigned is well acquainted with an old disciple long in the habit of reading the Holy Scriptures through and through many times in the course of every year, when sitting, and of getting portions by heart, when walking or riding alone. He is thus enabled to concentrate his thoughts upon the sanctifying and life-giving word of God. He thus raves a great deal of precious time. According to that comprehensive prayer in Psalm xc., "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." The disciples thus exercised, may shine as light-bearers in the midst of a sinful world, and be prepared for their coming Lord.

ALBERT ANDERSON.

Editor Restitution:—Information wanted on Matt. xvi. 19. In what way did Jesus give Peter the key of the kingdom of heaven? What is the binding and loosing spoken of?

(Will Brother B. Wilson please reply?—ED.)

Editor Restitution:—I have a little leisure and am inclined to improve it by writing you a short friendly letter, as brethren of the one faith and in the one Christ; no others should be written. I am asked by some here why has several of our leading brethren laid down their pens and we hear no more from them; several of these brethren I have corresponded with for many years, but have had no letters from them for several months; I cannot answer the question but hope it is only a temporary suspension. I should indeed be very sorry to loose Bro. Westbee and Wilson, to say nothing of others; brother W., remarked in one of his letters when we urged him to write for the paper that there seemed, to be no lack of reading matter; another question is asked, if there is such a press of written correspondence, why are so many long articles taken from other papers? This same brother asks, would it not be well to first give the correspondence, and then give the balance of such as you may deem proper from other papers? I do not pretend to advise for I do not know, one thing is desirable if it can be done, where there is a series of articles on the same subject they be continued without a break. I have had no experience in editing and publishing, neither do I care to have. The lack of patience if nothing else would totally disqualify me for any such work, if what we read be true.

I regret my inability to do for the support of the paper as I have formerly done; it always has been a pleasure and still is to do the extent of my means, it is one of the most convincing proofs of showing our faith by our works; it is a profound mystery how men holding the one faith with the constantly accumulating evidence of the near-coming of our Lord, can bend their whole energies in making money and laying it up for a future day—lional and urgent and oft repeated calls to keep the dear RESTITUTION from going under—are passed by unheeded, one copy taken is sufficient to ease the consciences. I fear you may think by my referring so often to these things they have become chronic, be it so, nevertheless they are painfully true; how oft have we heard the illustration from those that a dry limb may belong to a green and flourishing tree, or a branch to the vine and bear no fruit—when we become chilled in our affections, and carriess in our obedience to our Savior's teaching, we do not want even our best friends to remind us of our remissness in duty, and we are very apt to think it if we don't say it; look at home, or he that is without sin; let him cast the first stone—to reprove judiciously and rebuke in the spirit of the great teacher is a qualification but few possess, to keep the old man of the flesh under or in the back ground is a herculean task and especially when we become old and tortured with chronic rheumatism, how often do we praise and thank God that we have an Advocate at the Father's right hand, who was in all points tried and tempted as we are yet without sin. What should we do, who have left all to follow Christ and are striving to enter the kingdom; do without an intercessor. Allow me to repeat what we have said, there would be no necessity for the editors constant call for money to publish the paper if the members of the body gave as God has prospered them; alas how few are living by the scriptured rule. Paul says "he that defileth the temple of God, he will God destroy," if the use of the filthy weed is not one of the very things that defiles the temple of God then I do not understand the use of words. Enough money is spent in the body to publish the paper, and flood the land with tracts. Do what you think proper with this. Respectfully and fraternally, Yours, NEWELL BOND.

Dear brethren and sisters, rejoice again with us. Another dear soul has taken upon himself the precious name of Christ, and is now an adopted child in the great Abrahamic family of God, William Stevens, firmly persuaded of the truth of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus, and of the necessity of taking the legal steps to become an heir to the promised inheritance, last night, forsaking all, to follow Christ, went down into the water and came up to walk in newness of life. He is young in years, but has proved himself a brave soldier by coming out alone on the side of his God. Blessings be upon him, now and evermore! Pray for him. The hundred fold—the life shall be his. More will follow in his steps. Our meeting has closed, with good interest manifested throughout.

In the faith, S. R. WINGS.

Editor Restitution:—Please let me announce to the brethren of southwestern Missouri and southern Kansas that we are now in Carthage and expect to hold a meeting here. Would like all our people to attend, and as we have no way of finding out their whereabouts we hope they will come and make themselves known; also brethren at a distance that would like us to visit them before returning to Iowa, can address us at Carthage. Now, brethren of south-west Missouri, let us strive hard to let the people hear the gospel of the kingdom in this vicinity. Please be prompt in letting me hear from you.

A witness from the grave against the inquisition was found recently in the corpse of a Prince of the Imperial family of Montezuma. The Prince had been condemned to death by the Spanish Inquisition, and had been seized and forced into the niche of a wall and built in. The exclusion of the air had preserved the body during the many years which have since elapsed, and the perfect remains witness to the horrible cruelty of the inquisitors. The body, which resembles a wooden statue, was sold by auction and purchased by the trustees of an English museum.

NEWS ITEMS.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, October 27.—The Ghilzais have again been repulsed by the British force in the Shutargardan.

A dispatch from Cabul says: The forces here will occupy Balkhab the 1st of November. They have commenced the opening of the communication through Khurd and Cabul with Candamuk.

The late disastrous floods in Murcia and other provinces of Spain, which were believed to have passed their worst point, are again increasing, and the rivers are rapidly rising. It is now believed that the number of lives lost will reach fully 3,000 while the value of property destroyed will amount to many millions.

ANOTHER OVERFLOW.

MADRID, October 30.—The River Agly has overflowed its banks, inundating the villages of Maury, the neighboring territory and the town of Estagile. Great damage was done to property.

MADRID, October 31.—At Ballabardat, in the province of Huesear several persons have been drowned and twenty-six houses destroyed by floods.

A Vienna telegram says that in order to retain only a small part of Kuldja, Russia has undertaken to protect Chinese merchant-men against Japanese men-of-war in any war that may break out between those two countries.

There has been an immense fire at Ufa, in Russia. More than a fifth part of the town was consumed, and many persons were killed. The loss of property was enormous.

A dispatch from Cabul says the Ameer has finally placed his abdication in the hands of General Roberts. It will probably be accepted.

A Paris correspondent says 200 inhabitants in Injupoint, in Eastern Siberia, have perished by famine.

BELGRADE, October 31.—An offensive and defensive alliance has been concluded between Servia and Bulgaria.

NAPLES, October 31.—Small streams of lava flowed from Mount Vesuvius yesterday.

JAPAN.

Yokahama, Oct. 12.—The cholera is rapidly subsiding. Official returns show upward of 160,000 cases since the outbreak in April, and 85,000 deaths. The suppression is now attributed to the energetic efforts of the the government and the unprecedented expenditures for sanitary purposes. The authorities claim that if their endeavors had been seconded, instead of openly opposed, by the European representatives, the epidemic would have been under control two months ago, and probably thousands of lives saved.

Pesth, Oct. 21. The distress in Hungary on account of the bad harvest is very great. The government has suspended the collection of taxes until the next harvest is gathered. In fifty-seven towns and villages in Temes county, the greatest distress prevails. In Saros county, where some cases of starvation have occurred, forty parishes are threatened with famine. Frightful accounts are also received from the counties of Albani, Heves and Zempiln.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—A dispatch to the News from Cabul reports that eight lacs of treasure have been unearthed, chiefly gold coins. It has all been confiscated for the present.

Eleven prisoners have been executed for participation in the massacre of the British embassy, and sixty prisoners have been examined since the trial began.

A dispatch from Constantinople reports that Mahmoud Nedim Pasha will doubtless soon become Grand Vizier, but the state of affairs on all sides indicates that if something is not done quickly there will be a catastrophe.

Another Constantinople dispatch announces that a band of Greek brigands, who have been robbing and murdering in all the villages surrounding Tricala, have been completely annihilated by a company of soldiers. Twenty-five brigands were killed and several wounded.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Two very distinguished Americans died very suddenly last week. Hon. Zachariah Chandler, of Michigan, was found dead in his bed Saturday morning in his room at the Pacific Hotel in Chicago, having retired in apparently good health the evening before after having addressed a very large audience at the McCormick Hall; and Gen. Joseph Hooker died at his hotel at Garden City, L. I., from a sudden attack of illness, surviving only an hour after being taken ill. Thus the statesman and warrior pass away.

The yellow fever has so far abated that it is now confined to the colored people and those whites who have returned to Memphis since the quarantine has been raised. A late dispatch is to this effect:

MEMPHIS, October 30.—Noon.—No new cases or deaths reported since yesterday forenoon.

The weather has again turned cold.

November 2d was a day of serious losses by fire. In Chicago, Andrews & Co's school furniture factory was destroyed, at a loss of about $50,000, and the warehouse and showrooms of Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine Company were damaged to the amount of $12,000. About one-third of the town of Mound City, in southern Illinois, was consumed, including the Pulaski county court house, with all the records, and some sixty other buildings—loss about $75,000. At Dubuque a sash and door factory, a freight depot and an elevator were destroyed—loss about $100,000. A wagon factory at Logansport (loss $40,000), and a railroad depot at Michigan City, Ind.,—(loss, $20,000), were consumed.

SELECTIONS.

[Cleveland Leader.]

Light Wanted.

Editor Leader:—Will you grant a little space in your paper to enable an humble inquirer for truth to ask a question or two of Mr. Moody, the evangelist now daily and nightly addressing the great crowds that throng his services.

I have been one in this multitude for days past, and have been waiting patiently for him to tell his inquirer what it is to come to Christ, and how sinners may become Christians. Striking sayings, pithy anecdotes, copious quotations of texts of Scripture, emotional narratives of incidents and events in his own experience, and sharp criticisms on the failings and conduct of professing Christians, interspersed with spirited songs and fervent prayer, are no doubt enjoyed and appreciated by some of his numerous hearers. Is not something wanted more than this? There are undoubtedly others present—serious and earnest men and women—who look for something more practical and more instructive.

The writer hoped on Thursday evening, when he announced his purpose to answer the question, (which he said had been asked quite a number of times) "How a person is to become a Christian," that we had at length got to the point we wanted to understand. How great was my disappointment when all the answer was an admonition to "trust in God." How vague and unsatisfactory; such an answer to a question so vital and imposing: for, as to what it is to "trust in God" every religious popular preacher of the day will give you a different answer, and therefore we inquirers are left by Mr. Moody just where we were before the answer was given. Cannot the great evangelist answer the question more plainly and definitely? Does not his knowledge of God's word of salvation and way of life enable him to be more satisfactory, especially when he so often reminds us of the prophecy (which he supposes to be fulfilled) that "the way of salvation is so plain that a fool cannot err therein?"

I was explaining to a friend to-day my regret that these doubts and difficulties seemed not removable by the evangelist, when he came to my relief by opening the New Testament and referring me to the several occasions therein recorded on which the same question was asked of the Apostles, and of their clear, plain and definite answers thereto. These occasions were recorded in Acts ii: 37-45; Ib. iii: 19-22; Ib. viii: 5, 12, 26, 35, 40; Ib. x: 22, 34, 48; Ib. xi: 14; Ib. xvi: 30, 40; Ib. xxii: 10, 17.

These instances have helped me to see the light for which I was waiting, and have enabled me, by believing and obeying the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, to rejoice in the remission of my sins, and, like the Christians at Thessalonica, "to wait for His son from heaven, even Jesus, who has delivered us from the wrath to come." I. Thess. i. 10.—Timothy.

Convent Schools.

When Madame Campan inquired of Napoleon, "What does France need to elevate her?" his reply was, "Mothers." The Jesuits have discovered that to lay this Republic where Italy, Spain, Belgium, Mexico, Canada and South America have lain, priest-ridden at the feet of the pope, they must secure the future mothers of America to be pliant tools in their hands. For this purpose they make their convent schools "attractive," not by thorough education, but by imparting showy accomplishments and by giving a pledge—constantly violated—not to interfere with the religious convictions of their pupils.

The New York Herald says there are 35,000 Protestant girls in Roman Catholic schools; and the Romanists claim that one out of every ten of these girls is converted to their faith, and that three out of ten are taught to hate Protestantism. So this is the way the religious convictions of pupils will not be interfered with. 'Twould be just as sensible to put your finger in the flame and not expect to be burned.

The "American Colony" is the name given to the Americans living permanently in Paris. Families reside there for years to educate their children, but there are hazards attending it. The number of young American girls that have become "converts," as they are called in the Roman church, is surprising to those who do not know the process by which the change is accomplished. Day by day, year after year, the proselyting process is ingeniously carried on, not, perhaps, by persuasions and arguments, but by familiarity with the Popish services, a keen hunger for something to break up the monotony of such a life, and above all, by those innumerable artful devices plied too successfully by the "sisters."

Gavazzi styled convent life the "moral assassination of our sons and daughters." In the time of Henry VIII. numbers of these nests of iniquity and hiding-places of sin were broken up. A correspondent of the London Record writes:—

"Having traveled considerably in Roman Catholic countries, I find that the monastic and conventual systems are fast dying out, while I regret to say that they are increasing in England and North America. Being in North America last year, I was very much grieved to find those 'canker-worms' of society spreading all over the Republic."

There is a warning in all this to parents; if they would keep their daughters free from all Jesuitical influences, and within the church where they have received their first religious impressions, they must not place them within the reach of those whose whole lives are given to the cause of Rome, and whose principal object in existence is to seek proselytes. There is a warning, also, to our citizens. In every State there should be a law similar to Pennsylvania's, providing for an annual inspection by examiners appointed by the Judges of the district where situated. Perhaps by putting these iniquitous institutions under rigid official espionage we may make them less formidable, if we cannot diminish their number.

Ancient Glass.

The London Saturday Review is of the opinion that the oldest specimen of pure glass known is a little moulded lion's head, bearing the name of an Egyptian king of the eleventh dynasty, in the Slade collection at the British Museum. It was probably fashioned more than 2,000 years B. C., and the skill displayed in it is sufficient evidence that the art of glass making was not then in its infancy. Glazed pottery and beads as old as the first Egyptian dynasty have been found.

Of later glass there are numerous examples, such as the head found at Thebes, which has the name of Queen Hatasoo or Hashop, of the eighteenth dynasty. Of the same period are vases and goblets and many fragments. It cannot be doubted that the story prepared by Pliny, which assigns the credit of the invention to the Phœnicians is so far true that these adventurous merchants brought specimens to other countries from Egypt. Dr. Schliemann found disks of glass in the excavations at Mycenæ, though Homer does not mention it as a substance known to him. That the modern art of the glass blower was known long before is certain from representations among the pictures on the walls of a tomb at Beni Hassan, of the twelfth Egyptian dynasty; but a much older picture, which probably represented the same manufacture, is among the half obliterated scenes in a chamber of a tomb of Thy at Sakhara, and dates from the time of the fifth dynasty, a time so remote that it is not possible, in spite of the assiduous researches of many Egyptologers, to give it a date in years.

Worse than a Pestilence.

Speaking before the Social Science Congress at Manchester, Dr. Norman Kerr said that 120,000 persons died every year in Great Britain and Ireland from intemperance—40,600 dying from their own excess and 70,600 from the indirect consequence of the excess of others. Dr. Kerr reviewed the fortieth report of the Registrar General with reference to deaths from alcoholism, and suggested that the Social Science Association should ask confidential returns from 500 medical men in different parts of the country, with a view of arriving at approximation of the truth. It was significant that gout was more fatal now than it was ten years ago, and that Italy, a most temperate nation, had only 240 per 1,000,000 of violent deaths, while England, an intemperate nation, had no less than 757 per 1,000,000.

Men who think for themselves may not believe quite so much as those do who take what they have from hearsay; but it is apt to be a better quality of faith.

Christianity is not a thing to put on or off at pleasure. It is part of the life of the man—the good in him developed—and this it takes time to do; it is growth. We may be enamored with it momentarily; it is not enough; it must be made the controlling principle of life.

DIED.

HOBBS.—On the 23d inst., Mrs. Nancy M. Kirkendall, wife of Frederick Hobbs, aged forty-four years, three months and seven days.

She was born in Macon county, June 16, 1835, and was married Oct. 6, 1851. She was the mother of eleven children, and leaves a husband and four little children to mourn her loss. She was immersed into Christ about sixteen years ago, by Brother Hornaday, and has been in the church ever since that time, and died in full hopes of the resurrection.

[The Christian.]

Yet a Little While.

D. T. TAYLOR.

Heb. x. 37.

What tho' the tears are in our eyes,
And grief lies heavy on the heart;
What tho' we gaze on darkening skies,
And palms are crossed to part:
What tho' we tread the dang'rous ground
That sloping leads from life's high noon,
And lean toward the tomb profound—
'Twill all be over soon!

The sun may leave the vale below,
Yet kiss the hills in softest light;
God's wisdom, which we all may know,
Will lead us through the night.
Oh, for the strength of soul to rise
Above earth's deepest, darkest gloom,
With eyes fixed on the matchless prize—
'Twill all be over soon.

There let no room for doubt unbind.
Oh, fellow-traveler to the tomb!
Then clasp thy brother's hand in thine,
And walk in love toward home.
God knows what's best for him and thee;
Then thankful be for every boon;
Pass calmly toward eternity—
'Twill all be over soon!

COMMUNICATIONS.

"The Vision Established"—As to Its True Date.

Yes, but where and how? Answer: By the more sure word of prophecy to which we do well to take heed till the day dawn and the day-star arise. In your hearts, knowing its progressive fulfillment and that it is given by inspiration. 2 Pet. i. 19-21.

Time and space are precious. Brevity is imperative. Discussion avails nothing on the plane of opinion. We can not get one step beyond the revealing "word" and its corresponding facts through history.

"The judgment message" has reached me. Its subject commands my regard, and its character deserves a response in the light of revelation.

1. One point is surely wanting—"one thing (brother) thou lackest."—to render the argument conclusive. This was the missing link and the needful welding stroke in '43, and at every subsequent "definite time." This want may be expressed in its place.

2. There is a "time appointed" for "the end" of Gentile government—for "the judgment." Dan. viii. 11-19; Acts xvii. 31. Yet "the wisdom of God" says, "Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the time is! Of that day and hour no man knoweth; neither the Son, but the Father." Mark. xiii. 32-37. Ye may know much, ye may know when it is nigh, at the door, and thus not be in darkness, nor be taken in the "snare." Luke xxi. 35.

3. This is dispensational truth. Hence, his faith embracing the overwhelming events (the second coming, at "the time appointed of the Father," the first resurrection and kingdom of God) should surely not complain of others' unbelief, while it ignores the co-relative revelation, as to not knowing the precise period of the herald angel's trumpet!

Is it reverence? Is it faith? Is it love of Christ? Is an assertion of self-will (that refuses instruction and correction) to preach and publish, in such palpable contradiction of his "word?" "Faith"—Abrahamic faith—staggers not at such positive parts of truth.

4. My faith does not waver as to any of the grand points of prophesy and promise. Nay, more, I must add, to avoid misunderstanding, that my faith has been a little like the "mustard seed!" Through great grace it appears to my feeble apprehension as if it had grown "exceedingly," and my charity abounded toward my brother so that I feel bound to give him this boost "up his hill difficulty" and supply what is wanting in his argument.

"The '43 movement," like the late prophetic conference in New York, is to the second coming and consummation, something what John the baptist's mission was to the introduction of the gospel age. John knew enough to herald the first advent, and I bless the Lord that he has counted us faithful, putting us (you and poor me) into this glorious ministry to herald his second advent and kingdom and glory! Amen.

John's personal expectation was not realized, yet his mission was made of God—"the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ." This was honor and glory enough, exceeding that of all who had then "been born of woman." Hence, I pray, "be patient" (brother) unto the coming of the Lord, for the coming glory of our "great King" will crown his waiting ones and encircle and fill the world!

5. Thus, in my view, the true date of the vision is established to our faith by what is revealed plainly by the accomplishment of its outline of earthly kingdoms, by the exhaustion of its arch of time, and now, by the rush to and fro, with increase of knowledge, so that we wait and watch understandingly. Dan. xii.; 2 Pet. iii. 17.

Had our brethren had it all at once there would have been no increase; hence, let us not fling hard words at each other, nor any one, but be at peace, for "the God of peace" is to send Jesus, the prince of peace, and so give peace to our waiting world. Amen.

To my faith, "the vision" may speak sooner than in 1880; but, it has been, and yet is, with God, to make known "the moment of time." The readjustment of the salient points of prophecy, after untold and unnumbered like efforts, can not add one ray of light. The one want in your argument is "a thus saith the Lord." It is, to me, delusive, to imagine that my readjustment of prophesy is, in itself, "one white" more reliable than any former one.

His growth seems not to be in his trust and rest in God, but in his ability to excel and supercede all his brethren in demonstrating that he does "know the time"—far enough, at least, to call them "apostates." We read that, "knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth." 1 Cor. xiii.

"The elders of the Jews builded, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes, king of Persia" Ezra vi. 14.

Here are three regnant sovereigns, two of whom succeeded Cyrus, while yet "the king and the decree" (rendered commandment) are singular! Now, what avails your exclusive confidence for the date in "the first of Cyrus?"

This, to begin with, seems as unobliging a servant of facts and as irrelevant to "establish the vision" to our faith, as the utter suppression of Christ's word—"ye know not the time"—is to end with. This mistake of fact at both ends gives this "message" its proper character and value. It lacks both prudence and intelligence.

Yet, I like to get every fact and ray of light that bears on the time of the second coming, and, of course, I commend every rational effort to unfold the subject to myself or others. But, a remuddle of a thousand-fold mistake can not be after any "pattern shown in the mount." You are not yet "Joseph by birth-right," to whose sheaf all others have done obeisance in divine vision. Hence, it is perilous to play "Joseph's" part prior to his heavenly calling. You seem to contemn your predecessors and better informed teachers who have "learned, by experience," some primal truth which you yet want. We have learned to "know that he is nigh, at the door," and yet further, that we must wait and "watch, because we know not the time." God has not yet told us "the time" of the last trump.

"The '43 movement" was based on "the four-beast kingdoms" fulfilled—embracing both event and time, as in the received chronology. The lever of truth on that fulcrum moved the mind of the world. Now, we look at every and all data, but await orders from above, rather than arrogate the judgment seat.

Hence, I am sorry to say that, in my humble apprehension, your "message" is misconceived, and that the time, toil and cost seem worse than lost. Please read 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17; Jas. v. 20. In sympathy with yourself and the blessed hope of Christ's soon and certain coming, I am yours, JOHN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit.....John xiii. 10.

The words of our Savior—"it is finished,"—calls attention to the "blood that cleanses from all sin." Here is salvation guaranteed and the gospel to the world is for turning men's thoughts to this "one sacrifice offered for sins forever"—that he may believe and be saved. Then he is "washed" cleansed from all sin, "clean every whit." Jesus says to his disciples, "Ye are clean, but not all," for he knew who should betray him; therefore, said he, "Ye are not all clean." I believe the eleven were washed clean every whit. One had never passed under the cleansing blood; faith was lacking. To be girded with a towel, to have a basin of water, to wash the feet and wipe them, is an act in its outward appearance understood by all; but that there was a deeper significance Christ's words to Peter show, "What I do thou knowest not now."

In studying this chapter entire, I am led to believe that the two most prominent features of the redemptive plan are therein set forth, and that the text under contemplation embodies all, namely; a believers salvation in the sacrifice offered "through the veil, that is to say, Christ's flesh." Without shedding of blood is no remission. Christ died, from it a believer rises—"completed in him"—hearing his voice, he knowing them and they following him, and he declaring, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish;" these are they that are "washed," "clean every whit." Yet a believer does many things he ought not, and leaves undone many things he ought to do while walking through this world; he daily trespasses; for these failings he has a living Savior, who liveth evermore, Christ risen, touched with a feeling of his infirmities, an advocate with the Father. Thus believers work out their salvation. Saved, working out what God has worked in, when Christ finished the work given him to do.

Our lesson takes up the two grand thoughts, "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." The original rendering of this verse will be clearer, as follows: "He that cometh up out of the bath is clean every whit, and needeth not save to wash his feet." The death of Christ I compare to a bath, cleansing whosoever believeth. It has made a sinner a child of God, clean every whit, left in the world, walking through it, stepping into forbidden paths at times, he needs correcting. A father hand can turn his child's footsteps aright. "He chasteneth every son he receiveth;" he is "washed;" no sin in him, but sin on him; "the flesh warreth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; these are contrary the one to the other." The lower part of a child of God contracts defilement: the flesh, the feet, as passing through the world. He has come up out of the cleansing blood—the bath—and steps forth, coming in necessary contact with the world. He is defiled more or less; justified, accepted in the beloved. His daily walk needs cleansing, the "bruised heel" needs to be borne to Christ, the feet must be washed, for Jesus says, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."

Our lesson was taught just as Jesus was about to leave the world. It was his last supper. A few words shows how much he loves his own—"he loved them unto the end." Having loved sinners, who were haters of God, and so much as to die for them, then when they believed in that love, he loved them as his own flesh and bone, though they deny him as a Peter, or leave him alone as others, wandering, back-sliding children. He knew what they were when he came into the world, and he loved them, when they were without God, and he loves them knowing what they would be. Yes, matchless love, beyond finite minds, he loves them "to the end." He not only dies for man, but he lives for him. This love "to the end" is love through everything. All for whom Jesus died, all believers have a part with him, and must use him as an advocate against their imperfections, therefore the man or woman who does not let Jesus wash their feet, their daily sins, has never been washed, has never believed that Jesus died for them according to the Scriptures. Christ came into the world that whosoever believeth, might not perish, but have everlasting life; and the great evidence of true faith is, that we feel Christ interceding for us in heaven, washing our feet, removing from us all our daily commissions and omissions, as we feel them warring in our members. As this feet-washing was the last act of our Lord toward his disciples just previous to his death, and that death was for them, he seems to desire to impress upon their minds that he would not only die for them, but that he was going to live for them—their mediator in heaven. I think this is all the act signifies. What he did they understood not, as the Scripture saith, but ye shall know it hereafter. As referring to the sending of spirit at Pentecost, as once he had said to them, "it shall bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you."

A few more words as to our Lord's words. "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet." "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." Our Lord's prayer teaches us to say "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." Do we wash one another's feet? Do we forgive and overlook the failings of our brethren and sisters, bearing one another's burdens, seeing their infirmities, weaknesses and failings, do we let the light of the gospel shine upon them with the harmlessness of the dove, by gentle reproof and loving rebuke, and by interceding for them? In these and many other ways we can follow Christ's example, comforting some heart, enlightening some mind, lifting some burden from a troubled home, we can wash many feet every day. As Christ continues to cleanse our daily walk, we should do the same to others, not only seven times, but "seventy times seven." We that are spiritual ought to restore such an one if overtaken in a fault. Oh, that this lesson might teach us to know these things that we may do them, then happy are we. We should take everything to Jesus; the moment we do wrong tell Jesus, then all will be well. What a glorious thought that sinners have been called unto liberty! We must use our liberty as sons to glorify our Father in heaven. Oh, that we realized this relationship more; for the more we realize our family tie, the more ready we shall be to enter into the work of love toward our neighbor and the spirit of going about and doing good, as Jesus said to our Father, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." Let us endeavor to help poor sinners into the bath that they too may be clean every whit; believing that the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin, they then can lift their hearts heavenward, being kept ready to be revealed at the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—You will find enclosed, one dollar, for which you will please send THE RESTITUTION to the above address, so long as the above sum will pay for the paper. It is for a poor woman who is deeply interested in the paper, but is not able, at present, to subscribe for it herself. She will make good use of it by distributing it to others, and I can then distribute mine elsewhere, and I pray God some good may be done. I cannot tell you how much we enjoy its weekly visits, or how much we should miss them. May God bless the editor in his faithful efforts to spread the truth, and, also all the dear brothers and sisters whose writings make THE RESTITUTION such a welcome and profitable visitor to so many homes, sending out a warning cry to those who are out of Christ's kingdom, and a word of comfort to all those who are patiently waiting and watching for it. It is so hard to be in the world and not of it, but "my grace is sufficient for thee," our Savior has said, and trusting in that blessed promise, we cannot fall.

Yours, in the hope of eternal life,

MARY G. INGRAHAM.

North Sydney, Cape Breton.

Editor Restitution:—You will find, enclosed, one dollar, to apply on my subscription. I feel sorry I cannot send an offering this time; hope I shall be able next time. I am poor in this world's goods, but strong in faith. There are few of like precious faith in this city. We meet once a week to strengthen and encourage one another and to build up one another in the faith. I have attended about two years, and have heard more Scripture read and explained in our little meetings than I have in the Baptist church in thirty years that I attended it. I feel that I can never thank God enough for all his mercies to me in bringing me to a knowledge of the light and truth of my Bible, and of the glorious age to come. I feel as though I had only got the light just in time to be saved, for I believe the coming of our Lord to be very nigh. Our presiding elder, I. L. Jackson, is a very faithful, able Christian teacher. May the Lord bless him, and strengthen him, and guide him to do his duties right.

Praying that much good may be done through your valuable paper, I remain your sister in Christ,

M. A. MALLALIEN.

Aurora, Ill.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find one dollar, to which apply on my subscription. My heart is troubled and I feel the need of the coming of the Son of Man, for death has again taken another little one of mine, aged three years and eleven months. It was sick four days and a half. It choked to death with the membranous croup, but I have a hope of meeting my little ones in the resurrection morning, and may that time not be far distant, is my prayer. I am poor in this world's goods, but shall do all I can to help support THE RESTITUTION, for I value it next to the Bible.

This, from your sister, waiting for the return of our blessed Lord from heaven.

MRS. AMANDA E. RATHBURN.

Joker, Iowa.

Editor Restitution:—My subscription for THE RESTITUTION is past due. I am very sorry that it is so. I pray the Lord will very soon open a way so it will be provided for. Money is very scarce with me. I have followed on and taken the Advent paper ever since Miller started the Advent doctrine. The Lord has blessed me with means to pay for it. I hope and pray that I may not be deprived of reading THE RESTITUTION; it is all the gospel preaching I am blessed with. Oh, how I love to read and hear from the brethren scattered abroad throughout the land, proclaiming the literal coming of our risen Lord and Master. In a few days I shall be seventy-eight years old. It is my prayer that our Lord may come before I leave his vineyard and go down into silence, where there is no praising the Lord; no knowledge nor device in the grave. Since I commenced these few lines I have been blessed and received one dollar to send a part of my arrearages for THE RESTITUTION. It is my prayer the Lord will give you grace to surmount all difficulties you have to encounter with. Praying your increased success in all your work for Christ.

Respectfully yours,

C. M. TIBBETS.

BREVITIES.

The highest inhabited house in the world is believed to be the one erected for the miners employed on Mount Lincoln, in the main range of the Rocky Mountain, Park Co., Col. It is 14,157 feet above sea level.

An interesting discovery has been made at Nassenfuss, in Styria. At a depth of a foot and a half under the soil of a field attached to an ancient farm a boy found a vase, in and around which were 5,000 gold, silver, and copper coins bearing the effigies of Severus, Gallienus, Flavius, Claudius, Marcus, Aurelius, Aurelius and Probus.

The oldest timber in the world, which has been used by man, is supposed to be that found in the ancient temples of Egypt. It is found as dowel-pins in connection with stone-work which is known to be at least 4,000 years old. These dowels appear to be of tamarisk or shittim wood, of which the ark is said to have been constructed, a sacred tree in the ancient Egypt, and now rarely found in the valley of the Nile.

The Czar has permitted the publication in his empire of two Jewish weekly newspapers recently started: Russkyy Korel (Russian Jew) and Hazaret (Dawn). Both of them are dedicated to the improvement of the condition of the Hebrew population of Russia. They advocate thorough and liberal education, close association with the Christians, and sincere fulfillment of all the duties imposed on the subjects of the Czar.

A Moscow letter in the Cologne Gazette states the canal between the Caspian and the Sea of Azoff, a preliminary survey of which is now being made for the Russian Government, is estimated to cost 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 rubles. Two rivers and a chain of lakes facilitate the work, which, besides the advantage for the coal beds on the Don, would be of greater importance if, conjoined with the restoration of the Amu Darya to its old bed, it gave a water-way from the Euxine into Central Asia. Sultan Selim three centuries ago commenced a canal between the Don and the Volga, and Peter the Great resumed it, vestiges of the canal being still visible.

In several provinces of Russia the wolves make havoc among the cattle; even children and men sometimes fall victims of their rapacity. The Kleo-Hanlan reports the following case: "On Aug. 15, at noon, a wolf made his appearance on the streets of a village in the province of Vilna, and, seized a boy three years old, who played in the yard near the house. On hearing the cry of her child the mother ran out of the house and was shocked at seeing her boy in the teeth of a wolf. Her screams at once attracted many people, who, together with the unhappy mother, started in pursuit; but the wolf with his victim in his teeth succeeded in escaping to the neighboring forest. The authorities and the villagers searched the forest for two days, but without discovering any trace of the child."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ at King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Do the Scriptures Teach a General Resurrection?

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Three positions are held by us as a people; differing widely and radically. These points of difference are. 1. All in the graves will be raised. 2. Two classes of responsible men, called "the good and the bad, the just and the unjust," will be raised from the dead. 3. None but the righteous will be raised from the dead. It is impossible that these antagonistic can all be true, three opposite views may all be false, but they cannot all be true. Is it possible that brethren equally intelligent can be governed by the literal rule of interpretation (while we above all others profess to be governed by) and yet by a fair exegesis of the texts of Scripture quoted can find support for these widely divergent theories. I was perfectly willing to rest the entire issue upon Bible language without admixture of the uninspired wisdom of man: but neither of the other two parties would accept this proposition; therefore I crave about four columns of the precious space of our paper to give a careful exegesis of the texts I adduced in support of the resurrection of all the dead, which is most unequivocally affirmed in Bible language. And first I invite careful attention to Brother Myers' position on Job xiv. 14.

As to his translation referred to by Bro. Myers, Universalist, Unitarians and Swedenborgians have no trouble in translating away the literal resurrection of any of the dead. The most cursory reader of the context going before, cannot fail to see that the noun man is used in an unrestricted sense. Thus, we read "man that is born of a woman is of a few days," etc., "Man dieth and wasteth away: yea man expires." "Man lieth down and riseth not," etc. If a man die shall he live again?" Are not all men born of women? Do not all men die and waste away? Do not all men expire? Do not all men irrespective of character lie down in the death state? With what show of consistency can we affirm that the same word referring to the same thing is an exception to the rule. Certainly nothing but the inexorable demands of a theory would demand the wresting of this text from its entire context. Nothing is clearer than the fact that Job uses the noun man in the same unrestricted sense, in its fifth occurrence that he had done in the previous four occurrences of this same indefinite noun. Therefore the conclusion is irresistible, that in the interogative form Job intended to affirm his belief in the resurrection of all the dead. Either that, or he wished to express by the subjective "if" a doubt as to whether any shall live again. An infidel would place the latter construction on Job's language. All Christians must place the former construction on Job's language. The indefinite article "an" is the equivalent of any as all grammarians understand. Thus, if any man die shall he live again? Job xiv. 14.

I next invite the critical attention of the reader to John v. 28, 29. Let us first investigate the context and understand what Christ is talking about. Was his theme the restoration of a few Jews at that time from political thralldom as a pledge that at a future time he would restore the whole nation to national or political life, and destroy the disloyal. Was it that he would raise a few from figurative or moral death then, and all at some future time. Surely the context will throw a flood of doubt upon the context without leaving erring mortals to guess at our Savior's meaning. That which gave rise to this discourse of Christ was a great physical miracle wrought on the impotent man at the Pool of Bethsaida, in literally healing a literally diseased man. Referring directly to this great physical miracle Christ says: "And he (the Father) will show him greater works than these, that ye (the Jews) may marvel." In the the next verse he tells us what these greater miracles would be which would cause them to marvel. He says, "For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will," v. 21. Thus Christ being his own expositor, the greater works the Father had done and which the Son was about to duplicate, and which would cause more astonishment than the healing of the impotent man was the literal resurrection of dead men to life; being a greater exhibition of physical power than that which had excited wonder at the Pool of Bethsaida. The Jews greatly marveled at this declaration of Christ. He continues without a transition, or interregnum in this chain of argument. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. For as the Father has life in himself; so hath he given the Son to have life in himself," Vss. 25, 26.

The people marveled at the declaration of Christ that the time had come in which he was going to raise the dead. They greatly marveled at this declaration also. Thus he again exclaimed, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God. And shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." John v. 20, 21, 25, 26, 28, 29. Please observe. 1. All the wonderful things Christ had done; and which he purposed to do were and are to be literal physical miracles, and not moral or figurative wonders. The resurrection of the dead, both by the Father and the Son were the literal resurrection of the literal dead to literal life. Brother Myers would not claim that it was figurative life the Father had in himself, and which he gave the Son to have in himself. If not, with what show of consistency can it be affirmed that the life Christ gave to the dead was figurative life as involved in the declaration that the "hour had come in which the dead should hear his voice and live. The life of the Father, the Son and the dead whom both raised was either literal existence or figurative existence."

2. The literal rule of interpretation must always have the precedence, and should never give place to the figurative unless there is an obvious necessity. No such necessity exists, and therefore it is not admissible to substitute the figurative rule, because it is an undeniable fact that both the Father and the Son did raise, literally dead men to literal existence. Why pass by the literal fulfillment of the foregoing language of Christ, and then vainly try to guess at the meaning of as plain language as Christ ever used?

3. If the few whom Christ raised were restored to literal life must not the many be raised to literal life also. This conclusion is unavoidable.

4. Christ said "the hour is coming in the which the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." At the 28th verse he says that "all in the graves shall hear his voice;" therefore Christ's word for it, all in the graves shall live. This harmonizes with Rev. xx. 5, that the "rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were fulfilled," clearly teaching that when the thousand years shall expire the rest of the dead shall live.

5. It does not follow because among the all who shall hear the voice of Christ and come forth, that there will be two classes who will have positive characters of loyalty or disloyalty, that therefore they are the all in the graves. Christ does not contradict at the 29th verse what he had affirmed at the 25th verse. These two classes are mentioned as the special subjects of reward or judgment. The rest of the dead having no characters or responsibility will simply hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth to the Adamic life.

6. It does not follow because the hour is approaching in which all in the graves shall come forth from the graves that therefore they shall all come forth within the same hour, or at the same time. I may have two sons in California, who shall write me that the time is coming in which they shall both come home. Now if the time should ever come in which both these boys should return this promise would be literally fulfilled. A thousand years may intervene between the resurrection of the righteous and the "rest of the dead" and yet if the time shall ever arrive when all in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth, then the foregoing language of Christ will be literally fulfilled. The greater number contains the less but the less does not contain the greater.

7. It is just as necessary that all actual sinners should come forth from the graves to suffer the penalty for their sins, as that the righteous dead should come forth therefrom to receive the promised reward. The gospel "is a savor of life unto life or of death unto death." Either the first life and death settles the whole account of all responsible men, or there must be a second life or second death for saints and sinners. That which happens to all men alike irresp[onsible] of character [illegible] not be a pe[rfect] ment [illegible] the gression. O[ne] of two things is [illegible] either there is no responsibility resting upon man or no amenability to the law of God, or there must be future punishment while none but actual sinners will suffer.

8. Why not harmonize the 24th verse with its context instead of figuring away the whole context to force an unnatural, and unnecessary harmony with a supposed figure of speech or an enigma to be guessed at. Those poisonous herbs in the pot, referred to by Brother Myers, would have produced literal death but for a literal miracle which prevented literal death. Using the cause for the effect death was in the pot. A sword is a deathly weapon because it produces death. A criminal against whom the sentence of death has passed may be called a dead man. But when the governor shall have taken him from under the penalty of death and restored to him the life he had forfeited he may appropriately be represented as having passed from death unto life. Paul places life and death in contrast, one as a promised reward and the other as a threatened penalty, and both future. He says "for if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the flesh ye shall live," Rom. viii. 13. Speaking of the same death threatened for transgression at the 6th verse, he says, "To be carnally minded is death—that is, it is the transgression of the law which leads to death," v. 6. Thus the Apostle uses the death in the present and future tense synonymously. Paul never affirmed anything more positively and definitely than he affirmed that the resurrection of the just and the unjust was his hope.

The Apostle affirms these things—1, "But this I confess." 2. "So worship I the God of Fathers." "And 3. I have hope, which (hope) they allow that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Acts xxiv. 13, 14, 15. It does not change the sense to read it, "And I have hope that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust, which hope they allow. The Apostle says he has hope which hope they allow. As far as the hope is concerned it don't matter, which had, the hope first if the other party indorsed that hope. It would in either case be one and the same hope. Paul did not have one hope and the Jews two. They all had one hope, and this expectation embraced the resurrection of two classes. By reference to Acts xxvi. 6-8, it will be seen that Paul and the Jews had the same hope. To deny that Paul expected the resurrection of the just and the unjust is to deny what he says in as plain language as he or Brother Myers could use to convey such an idea.

SELECTIONS.

[The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.]

PROPHETIC SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Closing part of an Address by Colonel Rowlandson at the Prophetic Conference in England.

Sir Isaac Newton foresaw the great interest now taken in these subjects. He said in his time they had not light enough, but he believed a time was coming when God would raise up an extensive school of students of prophecy, to whom he would give light, and to whom much more would be revealed. The interest now taken in prophecy is a sign that the Lord's coming is nigh at hand.

There are seven signs of the close proximity of Christ's Second Coming, and it must be remembered that the Lord reproved those who were keen to notice natural signs, and neglected to observe these signs of the times. It may be asked, why is the coming of the Lord more likely to occur now than it was in the last century? In reply the following facts may be mentioned as indicating the near approach of the end:

1. The world is now covered with a network of Christian Missions. Such institutions as the Bible societies are spreading over the whole earth a knowledge of the truth. They sprang up suddenly at the beginning of the present century, and were the fulfillment of our Lord's prediction in Matt. xxiv. 14, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come." This passage shows that it is an error to expect the whole world to be converted, before the second coming of Christ; for the words expressly say that the gospel is only to be a witness to all nations before the end comes, and that the world is to be at that time as wicked as in the days of Noah, or the days of Lot.

Professor Gesse, in a book recently published by him, has shown that there is not a nation on the earth in which there is not a witness either by the word of God, or by living missionaries.

2. Another sign is the deep interest now taken in God's ancient people the Jews. The Palestine Exploration Fund was organized expressly, as was stated in its prospectus, "to pierce those mounds of dust and stones round Jerusalem," and was a fulfillment of a prediction in Psalm cii. 14, that "God's servants shall take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof." The Jews are now flocking back to their ancient home in great masses, and four building companies in Palestine are not equal to the task of raising houses fast enough for the incoming people.

3. It was predicted that there would be a great running to and fro in Daniel xii. 4—a sign abundantly fulfilled in this day. The Russian ambassador, it might be read in that day's newspaper, was in London one day and at St. Petersburg almost the next day. In his (Colonel Rowlandson's) boyhood it took him 128 days to go to India, while now twenty-eight days sufficed for the journey.

4. Another sign is the interest now exhibited in education, for was it not prophecied that before that day "knowledge should be greatly increased" (Daniel xii. 4)? By means of the telegraph the different parts of the world have been brought into near contact, and knowledge is widely diffused by the printing press.

5. Most noticeable also is the decline of the Papal apostasy—Great Babylon. In Daniel vii. 26 it was prophesied that its dominion would be taken away. By the recent wars between France and Germany, and its loss of temporal power, that was beginning to be fulfilled, and at exactly the time predicted, viz., 1260 years from 532 A. D., which was the reckoning of the words "time, times, and the dividing of a time" in their year-day fulfilment. The dominion was to be taken away, not the existence of the apostasy, and that is just what the world is witnessing.

6. The numerous conferences of God's people were foretold by the prophet Malchi (iii. 16), who predicted that "they who feared the Lord would speak often one to another." And now the fulfillment is evident, for no former days have seen so many conference meetings and congresses.

7. A seventh sign is the withering of the Mohammedan power. This is predicted (Revelation xvi. 12) under the figure of the drying up of the river Euphrates. The Turkish power holds the keys of Palestine, and it is this fact that makes the present position of Turkey a fact so significant to students of prophecy, for as the Turk goes down the Jew will rise up. There has never been in past days such a simultaneous fulfilment of prophecy, and it is not what scientific men called a fortuitous concourse of atoms, but it is a solemn concurrence of providential signs, full of premonition of the Lord's speedy appearance.

Spiritualism.

In an article on Mr. Kiddle's book in Scribner's Magazine, Dr. Holland writes:

For every man interested in the question of immortality, we have the profoundest sympathy. It is a question which has intense, abiding interest for every thoughtful mind. At this time, particularly, when the immortality of the soul is questioned more sharply than it has ever been before in the history of Christianity, the precious faith of the churches has to be fought for with all the weapons that can be laid hold of. From the fact that there is really no evidence of immortality except the resurrection of Christ himself, and his declarations, many minds have reached about them on every side for everything that offers help. In the desire to know something positively about the matter, modern spiritualism had its birth and has held its life. It promised to do just the thing that millions of minds desired to have done; so that when it assumed to demonstrate the existence of life after death, it had a tremendous audience in readiness for it. The marvel is that there was a man or woman in a generation that was unwilling to hear what it and its promulgators had to say. That it has millions of believers and followers today is probably, due less to its real, inherent strength, than to the greedy want which it assumes to satisfy—a want so greedy that it accepts as fact that which only has its lying semblance."

The foregoing coming from an immortal soulist, is more than simply an admission that the Bible does not teach the doctrine of inherent immortality. It admits that those who hold the doctrine know that the Bible does not teach it. "There is really no evidence of immortality" except as modern spiritualism reveals it; and this he says in the "precious faith of the churches." The "precious faith" of the Orthodox churches, therefore hangs on modern spiritualism.

[Hall's Journal of Health.]

Drunkards are made in two ways—by habit or by inheritance; the latter is the more hopeless form, because the appetite is more remorseless, more unappeasable—it is in fact a part of the nature of the unfortunate. Three-fourths of the idiotic children in a Massachusetts asylum were born of parents one or both of whom drank liquor. But if the father and mother were strictly temperate, yet during the nine months previous to the birth of the child the mother uses spirituous liquors for any cause, just in proportion as she does so the child will inherit the appetite for strong drink. But if the mother is strictly temperate during the whole time previous to the child's birth, yet, while she nurses it, drinks ale or beer, or porter, or spirits, "to make milk," or for any other cause or gives the infant food or drink mixed with liquor, the child will be impregnated with the love of it. Thus it is that the surroundings of the mother, during gestation and nursing, impress upon the child its physical and moral character; hence the regeneration of the race must come from maternal influence; hence the hopes of mankind for the amelioration of the condition of society in the future, its improvement in the physical constitution, in mental vigor and moral power, are founded in the proper education of our daughters for maternal and domestic duties, and a higher appreciation of their vast responsibilities in the directions above suggested. On the other hand, man comes in for his share in the great work, as a father and husband, by giving his cordial co-operation to the same great end by all the means possible to him in labor, self-denial and generous sympathies.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

It is easier to blame than to do better.

There is no promise to unbelieving prayer.

To change and to be better are two different things.

Time is short; and if your cross is heavy, remember you have not far to carry it.

To the careless sinner God says, fear; to the returning sinner, he says, fear not.

The Bible is a mine of wealth, but no mine will yield its treasures without labor.

The happiness derived from doing deeds of kindness is the purest, the sweetest, and the most lasting of all human enjoyments.

When one sin is admitted, it is generally found that it has a companion waiting at the door; and the former will work hard to gain admission for the latter.

We raise ourselves by adoring that which is better than we are. It is the one virtue of the soul which is always tending upward by its proper motion—upward to something higher, purer, better.

As our globe is made up of grains of sand, and as drops of water form the ocean, so history is made up of facts and incidents, small in themselves, which, when blended together, make the historical record. And history is the voice of God in providence.

He then has no bridle on his tongue, has no grace in his heart.

When sinks the soul—subdued by toil—to slumber,
Its closing eye looks up to thee in prayer;
Sweet the repose beneath thy wings o'ershadowing;
But sweeter still to wake and find Thee there.

So will it be at last, in that bright morning—
Oh! to the hour fairer than daylight dawning—
Shall rise the glorious thought—I am with Thee!

My faith is that there is a greater amount of revelation given to guide each man by the principles laid down in the Bible, by conscience, and by providence, than most men are aware of. Is it not the light which is defective, it is an eye to see it.—Norman McLeod.

A Roman Catholic writer says: "Who will say that the uncommon beauty and marvellous English of the Protestant Bible is not one of the great strongholds of heresy in this country? It lives on the ear, like music that cannot be forgotten; like the sound of church bells, which the convert hardly knows how he can forego. Its felicities seem often to be almost things rather than words. It is part of the national mind, and the anchor of national seriousness. * * * The memory of the dead passes into it. The potent traditions of childhood are stereotyped in its verses. The power of all the griefs and trials of a man are hidden beneath its words. * * * It is his sacred thing, which doubt has never dimmed and controversy never soiled."

Lowliness of mind is not a flower which grows in the field of nature, but it is planted by the finger of God in a renewed heart.

We are so helpless, Lord,
Thou art all power and might,
Our path is often dreary,
Be thou our light!
We have no hope but Thee;
Oh leave us not alone,
Till life's brief day is o'er,
Will guard Thine own.

It is the bubbling spring that flows gently, the little rivulet which runs along day and night, by the farm-house; that is useful, rather than the swollen flood of warring cataract. Niagara excites our wonder, and we stand amazed at the power and greatness of God there, as he "pours it from the hollow of His hand." But one Niagara is enough for the continent or the world, while the same world requires thousands and tens of thousands of silver fountains and gent flowing rivulets, that water every farm and meadow and every garden, and that shall flow on every day and every night with their gentle, quiet beauty. So with the acts of our lives. It is not by great deeds, like those of the martyrs, that good is to be done—it is by the daily and quiet virtues of life, the Christian temper in good qualities of relatives and friends, and all, that is to be done. Rural Home.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOV. 12, 1878.

BROTHER C. C. RAMSEY preached in Plymouth on Monday evening, Nov. 3. His theme was "The Fifth Universal Monarchy." Brother J. P. Wecthee remained till the 10th, and preached on the evenings of Nov. 8th and 9th, on "The Coming Age and its Proximity." Quite full audiences were in attendance.

A BROTHER writes: "There are subjects taken up by the brethren which I think should not appear in the paper. The paper should be made up of such pieces as would be beneficial to learners—such as need the sincere milk of the Word."

We hope that we shall now very soon reach the close of a discussion that has occupied more space than we intended, concerning which there is some complaint. We have given our correspondents the most ample opportunity to express their own sentiments regarding the future destiny of the wicked. Be patient, brethren, as a concluding article is due to one at least of our special contributors. We all, as a result, shall have the advantage of hearing both sides.

WE want shorter and more comprehensive articles. And a variety is very desirable. To keep our brethren posted on the march of events, we have to give selections, and these occupy space. To make a paper acceptable to the majority it must be made up of something more than contributions or one or two hackneyed themes, however important they may be. The Bible is largely practical. While it fully sets forth a soon coming kingdom, it as fully teaches the requisites of moral character necessary for heirship in that kingdom. While it as fully teaches conditional immortality and eternal life through Christ alone, it, at the same time is very specific in teaching us that we must be conformed to the image of God's dear Son to become immortalized, and inherit that everlasting life.

PLEASE give in your paper all the information you can on the common translation of the Greek words "katabole and Kataballo!" Too Bingleft renders both foundation and casting down which are both meanings given in the Greek dictionaries that I have. I would like to learn what the general signification of kata is when joined to [illegible] rather a strained construction of the words, and that "casting down" was more in accordance with the meaning of the two words.

Yours in the faith, Z. SWIFT.

Nokoa, Florida, Oct. 13, 1878.

The verb καταβάλλω—kataballo—occurs but three times in the Greek New Testament, and is rendered, in 2 Cor. iv. 9, cast down; in Heb. vi. 1, laying again the foundation; and in Rev. xii. 10, is cast down. The noun καταβολὴ—kataboleˊ—occurs eleven times and is translated foundation in Matt. xiii. 35; xxv. 34; Luke xi. 50; John xvii. 24; Eph. i. 4; Heb. iv. 3; ix. 26; 1 Pet. i. 20; Rev. xiii. 8, and xvii. 8. In Heb. xi. 11, it is rendered conceive. As to the primary meaning of the verb it means to cast down; in a secondary sense to lay down a foundation.

Schleusner says: "Est verbum proprium de fundamentis, quæ additio extrusoque pomuntur;" i. e.,—It is an appropriate word for the foundations which are placed in building edifices—applying, of course, to the locating or placing down these foundations. As authority he refers to Josephus, Polybius, Dionysius Halicarnasus, and Porphyry.

The noun is defined a casting down in the primary sense, but in the secondary sense. Schleusner says: "Est verbum architectonicum, fundamentum ædium, cui superstruitur ædificium; fundatio;" i. e.,—it is a word in architecture for the foundation of houses on which the building is superstructed; a "founding." The sense of founding comes from the middle voice of the verb, and this sense passes over to the derived noun.

The preposition Kata signifies from above, down, and with the genitive denotes motion from a higher to a lower place; with the accusative it has sometimes the sense of Extension. It is used in these senses in composition with verbs.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Miraculous Power.

O. N. MYERS.

To Disciple:—As you requested me to attempt an answer to your questions on Matt. xxviii. 20, I will write you a third article as gratuitous.

In my second article notice again, 1. That the Bible says nothing about the introduction, duration, or close of a Jewish age; 2. That the Mosaical or law period closed with the death of Christ, and therefore, 3. The age or period referred to must have been the Gentile age—the age to be characterized by the testimony borne forth by the apostles—which brings the promise of the text—"I am with you even to the end of the age"—down to Christ's second coming.

In my first article notice that Jesus did not intend to be with his apostles and disciples in person, but through his representative—the Holy Spirit. Therefore it must have been the divine order to give to, and to continue with the disciples of Christ to the end of the Gentile age this divine spirit of power, which enabled the apostles and primitive Christians to perform miracles.

2. Or next, it appears by consulting the Ephesian letter, i. 13, that they were as disciples "sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." Then by turning to Acts xix. 1-6, and especially verse 6, we learn how they were sealed and what powers they were made to possess by the reception of the spirit. Arising out of this case are three questions of importance:

1. If these disciples were sealed, was it not the divine order that all disciples should be sealed?

2. If these disciples were sealed by "that Holy Spirit of promise," was it not the divine order that all disciples should be sealed by the same power; or did God have, and bring to view, two or more ways and instrumentalities for sealing his people?

3. And if these disciples received miraculous power and performed miracles, ought not all sealed ones to receive the same power and perform miracles?

4. The next verse informs us that this Holy Spirit of promise which these Ephesians received was the earnest of their inheritance. Earnest—from arrabon—defined by Liddell and Scott—"Earnest money, caution money, deposited in case of purchases." See Gen. xxxviii. 17, where the word occurs as a security. Now, if this Holy Spirit of promise was given to these Ephesians as an earnest of their inheritance, was it not the divine order that all disciples have it? And if it enabled them to perform miracles would it not enable all others to do so?

3. By consulting Acts x. 38, we learn how that God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit at his baptism. Now, as Jesus stands as the head of the metaphorical body, would it not follow that the whole body who are to stand connected with him ought to be anointed with the same anointing. [illegible] be urged that only the heads of prophets, priests and kings were anointed, and therefore only Jesus as the head of the metaphorical body need be. To which we reply with Aaron such was not the case; the anointing oil ran down upon his beard, and even to the border of his garments. Again, the disciples are to be—each one—king and priest, and therefore should be anointed. But the objection may be urged, wait till resurrected, immortalized and ready for action. We reply, such was not the case with Jesus when he was anointed—it was at the beginning of his trial before he was perfected, through suffering that he received it, and not after his resurrection. But that it was the divine order that disciples should be sealed, should have the earnest of the spirit in their hearts and should be anointed as Jesus was, read: "Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the spirit in our hearts." 2 Cor. xxi. 22. This was written by Paul A. D. 60. At a subsequent period—A. D. 90,—John wrote: "But ye have an unction (an anointing) from the Holy One, and ye know all things." 1 John ii. 20. And that this anointing brought miraculous power, read: "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in it." 1 John, ii. 27.

6. Paul, in addressing the Ephesians, iv. 8, 11-13, says: That Jesus led up a multitude of captives and gave gifts unto men, as also we see in Rom. xii. 4, 6; 1 Cor. xii. 8-18. And among these gifts given to men he mentions in verse 11, apostles, prophets, evangelists, shepherds and teachers. Now the purposes of these gifts appear to be.

1. For the perfecting of the saints;
2. For the work of the ministry;
3. For the edifying of the body of Christ.

And how long to continue?

1. Till we all come into the unity of the faith;
2. Till we all come into the knowledge of the Son of God;
3. Till we all come into a perfect man;
4. Till we all come into the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

Now, when will this be accomplished? Can it be accomplished this side of the close of this age when the Lord will be raised from the scattered parts of the earth and fully joined together, and Jesus takes his place as its head? Can the body become a perfect man before all the members are developed? If not, then it was the divine order that these gifts should continue until that date.

5. But we learn from 1 Cor. xiii. 8, that prophecies, tongues, knowledge, etc., were at some period to cease. Question: When? Paul answers: "For partiatively we know, and partiatively we prophesy, but when the perfect thing comes, that which is partiative will be done away." But what is this perfect thing or order referred to? Can it be anything or order this side of the incoming age? Consult the next verses. Here he puts the child-like speech, the child-like understanding, the child-like thought, the image presented in the dark or hazed glass, and the partiative work all together on the one side; and the man speech, the man understanding, the man thought, the perfect image or eye to eye sight and the perfect things, or order on the other side. Now, can the last side of the antithesis attain this side of the golden age? If not, then it must have been the divine order that these miraculous powers should continue.

But then we are met with the thought that they have not continued and that no one now possesses miraculous power. All of this I will grant, and for all of this will I contend. But that like the withdrawal of God's communications through Urim and Thummim, on account of a departure from apostolical ground, and on account of the true import and power of the name God has seen proper to withhold the seal, the earnest of the inheritance and the anointing. But, question, when may we expect the return and the reception of the power? Not till we come to understand correctly the true import and power of the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ and get back as to faith and practice completely on apostolical ground. Whether this will be done before the Lord's return and we have Joel's prophecy fulfilled in its counterpart to Pentecost or not remains yet to be seen. As to conclusions as to our destitution, as to what ought to be done, as to what we can do I venture not. I will, for myself, watch and pray and search the truth for apostolical ground.

OBJECTIONS TO THE NON-RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.

Rules of Interpretation.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

1. The law given to Adam was to have jurisdiction over his race for ever. The penalty of that law was death, and nothing beyond.

2. After sin came into the world, the same death was passed upon all men, and nothing more.

3. This appointment to death was made after the promise of the seed had been given, and was therefore to be the punishment of the wicked under the gospel for ever.

4. The gospel being subordinate to the law given to Adam, cannot change penalty of the law, or add it to another punishment.

5. These judgments were to be complete and final. They were true and righteous altogether.

6. God being immutable, cannot deny himself, or alter the thing that has gone out of his mouth.

These propositions are self evident, as well as scriptures and furnish (as we think) the only basis upon which this whole subject can be harmonized.

In harmony with these rules I will endeavor to answer the leading arguments which are urged in favor of the resurrection of the wicked.

1. It is said, that if the wicked are not raised from the dead they cannot be punished according to the deeds done in the body.

If to die once will not punish men according to their deeds, how will that object be any nearer attained by another death? If one death would not be a sufficient punishment for some, might not two deaths be too great a punishment for others. If these are reasons why one death is not a punishment according to our works, might not the same reasons be urged against any subsequent death. But this cannot be the sense of "being punished according to our works." In the law given to Adam there were but two classes brought to view, the one class was obedient, the other class was disobedient. The obedient were to eat freely of the tree of life for ever, the disobedient were to be excluded from the tree of life, and died so as not to live. This was treating all of both classes according to their works, and yet the disobedient were not to die but once.

In the New Testament, "The wages of sin is death," "but the reward of obedience is eternal life." Here are the same two classes. All of one class receive eternal life, and all of the other classes die so as not to live. There are no degrees in the life that is promised, and there are no degrees in the death that is threatened. This is judging every man according to his works and yet there is but one life, and but one death mentioned. The objection, then, is without force, as it lies against all death as being a suitable punishment for sin.

2. Dan. xii. 2, is urged as being in favor of the resurrection of the wicked, it reads, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." The class that awake will have everlasting life, the class that do not awake will have shame and everlasting contempt, but not life. It is claimed that this passage teaches that all the wicked will be raised from the dead to be punished again. If this is so, they will be punished once more than is described in their sentence. The sentence reads, "In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground, for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," and nothing more. This punishment had been fully executed upon them when they died once and returned to dust. The additional punishment is without authority, as it is no where else threatened, or even mentioned in the Old Testament.

If it is true as is claimed, it is out of harmony with the general tenor of the threatenings in the Old Testament against the Wicked. The judgments seem to be complete, and final, and nothing further is intimated.

If the wicked are to be punished again, after having suffered all that is demanded of them by any law revealed in the Old Testament, what must we think of the righteousness of such a punishment? Is it true, that to every threatened punishment, there is another punishment beyond, no where expressed, or implied?

If this passage does teach that the wicked will have another punishment, besides the one punishment which has passed upon all men, then, we have this unaccountable fact before us, that God has allowed the world to pass through a period of more than 4,000, years without giving a single warning of this second punishment, except in this single pa[illegible] in this only by figure. If it [illegible] claimed, [illegible] punishment with the reason of every man, and the common sense of mankind. But, it may be that this passage does not teach what is claimed from it.

Whatever this passage may mean belongs to Daniel's people, the people of Israel, and not to the world at large. The verse next preceding this one, speaks of a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time. This trouble was to be on Daniel's people.

The same trouble is spoken of as the "abomination of desolation," Dan. ix. 27. This is upon the same people. The passage we are considering seems to describe a way of escape, or deliverance from the trouble mentioned, and must apply only to the people upon whom this trouble was to come. In the New Testament, this time of trouble was to come upon the same people.

"When ye therefore see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet stand in the holy place. Then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains. For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be," Matt. xxiv. 15, 21. This is the same time of trouble spoken of by Daniel the prophet, and it is upon the same people.

"But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains. For in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be," Mark xiii. 14, 19.

Here we have the same trouble, and upon the people. "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains. For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled. For there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 20, 24.

Here we have the same trouble, upon the same people, and in the land of Israel. Now it will not do to apply this distress in the land, to any other land, or this falling by the sword to any other than Daniel's people, or the being led away captive into all nations, to any other people than Israel, or Jerusalem being trodden down of the Gentiles to any other city than Jerusalem. Neither will it do to apply the deliverance from this trouble as described in the text we are considering, to any other people than the people who suffered the tribulation. Then it is not true that Dan. xii. 2, has reference to the general resurrection of the wicked, in order to punish them a second time.

As there has been a mistake as to the people to which this text refers, it may be there has been also a mistake as to what the text means. It may not refer to a literal resurrection of the dead at all.

As strong language as this is used in reference to the dry bones of Ezekiel, and yet that description does not relate to a literal resurrection.

After describing the dry bones in the open valley, and the manner by which they become an exceeding great army, the Lord said to Ezekiel, "Son of man these bones are the whole house of Israel. Therefore prophesy and say unto them. Thus saith the Lord. Behold O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves. O my people, and brought you up out of your graves. And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land."

The bringing the whole house of Israel out of their graves into their own land, is the same as to gather them from among the heathen whither they be gone, and bring them into their own land.

"For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land," Ezekiel xxxvi. 24. Again, "Thus saith the Lord; behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever," Ezekiel xxxvii. 21, 25.

After the children of Israel have [illegible] up out of their graves, or out from among the heathen, or, out of all countries, where they have been scattered, all of which descriptions mean the same thing, they, and their children, and their children's children will dwell therein for ever. This will not be claimed of people who have been literally raised from dead.

As the vision of dry bones represents the gathering of the whole house of Israel out of all countries whither they have been driven. So, the waking from the dust of the earth represents the delivering of the same people from the time of trouble which is to come upon them. The New Testament also sustains this view. Paul, in speaking of the blindness which has happened to Israel in part, or, of their fall, or, of their being cast away, or, of the time of trouble which was to come upon the them, says, "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead." he said, "that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written. There shall come out of Zion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." "For this is my covenant unto them who shall take away their sins." Rom. xi. 15, 25, 27.

The time of trouble that Israel was to pass through was to be so great that the deliverance is compared to life from the dead. Hence the figure of waking from the dust of the earth, was used to represent their deliverance from so great a trouble.

Thus, the objection of Dan. xii. 2, falls to the ground. Now the Old Testament is a complete unit on the punishment of the wicked. The whole of it is in harmony with the law given to Adam. The only law by which all men have been appointed to death. The punishment under this law is to die once so as not to live, and return to dust. It is final, never to be repeated. It is now easy to see that "the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. Not a jarring note to be found in the whole of the Old Testament, covering a period of more than 4,000 years, of the world's history.

Then, this notable passage, instead of proving that all the wicked will be raised from the dead and punished again contrary to the law; and instead of being in conflict with the complete sense of every judgment of God revealed in the Old Testament, it is simply a figure by which to represent the deliverance of the people of Israel from the greatest affliction that ever happened to any people.

[With all deference to Bro. Simonds we must say that we believe that Dan. xii. 2, teaches a literal resurrection, but at the same time do not believe that this passage teaches the resurrection of the wicked. Will give an exegesis some time in the future.—ED.]

Conference Report.

The Indiana quarterly conference of the Church of God, met at Argos, Marshall county, Indiana, on Thursday evening, Oct. 30, 1878, and held over the following Sunday. Brother C. C. Ramsey, of Floyd, Iowa. Brother J. P. Wecthee, of Ohio, and Brother J. M. Stephenson, of Chicago, were present and preached the Word. The meetings were well attended, and all seemed to feel that it was good to be there. Quite a number of the brethren and sisters came in from a distance to attend this meeting, which added much to its interest. Sister Maria Fennimore, aged eighty-two years, came twenty miles to attend the meetings, and her exhortations in the social meetings were cheering, being full of experience and trust in God. How blessed it is to have such a staff to lean upon in the decline of life. There being no business brought before the conference the whole time was devoted to preaching and social meetings. This meeting will be remembered by many who were privileged to attend it, as one of the bright spots in their Christian experience. May our heavenly Father preserve us all unto his heavenly kingdom. Amen. R. C. RAILSBACK.

SELECTIONS.

Darius' Tomb.

Among the most remarkable tombs of the ancients may be noticed the sepulchre carved out of the living rock by order of Darius, the warrior and conqueror King of Persia, for the reception of his own remains; and which is existing to this day at Persepolis, after a duration of twenty-three centuries. The portico is supported by four columns twenty feet in height, and in the centre in the form of a doorway, seemingly the entrance to the interior, but it is solid; the entablature is of chaste design. Above the portico there is what may be termed an ark, supported by two rows of figures about the size of life, bearing it on their uplifted hands, and at each angle a griffin,—an ornament which is very frequent at Persepolis. On this stage stands the King, with a bent bow in his hand, worshiping the sun, whose image is seen above the altar that stands before him, while above his head hovers his ferouher or disembodied spirit. This is the good genius that in Persian and Ninevite sculpture accompanies the King when performing an important act. On each side the ark are nine niches, each containing a statue in bas-relief. No other portion of the tomb was intended to be seen, excepting the sculptured front; and we must therefore conclude that the entrance was kept secret, and that the avenues were by subterranean passages so constructed that none but the privileged could find their way. We were told by Theophrastus that Darius was buried in a coffer of Egyptian alabaster, and also that the early Persians buried their dead entire, preserving their bodies with honey or wax.

A Wonderful Fact About the Bible.

The words "immortal soul," "deathless soul," "undying soul," "deathless spirit," "disembodied soul," "disembodied spirit," "eternal torment," "eternal suffering in conscious misery," "eternal misery," "unending misery," "unending torment," "everlasting woe," "endless woe," "never-dying soul," and all their kindred words are words that never, in a single instance, are found in the Bible. But from the copious manner in which these words are passed to us from the pulpit, and through the press, we should, without reading, suppose the Bible full of them! The word "immortal" occurs but once in the whole Bible.

The Jews in India.

The English and Scotch societies have missions among the Jews of Cochin, an extensive region along the western coast of southern India. Late reports describe these people as far less wealthy and important than a century ago, though beginning to rise again. They are of three classes: the white, the brown and the black Jews. With the white class, trade in poultry is the principal means of living; the brown are traders on a much larger scale, while the black Jews are mechanics of all sorts. The women of all these classes are workers in lace, embroidery, etc. Hebrew books are found in almost every house, and are much read. They look upon their present state of exile as temporary, and expect soon to be restored to Jerusalem.

POETRY.

"Awake, Awake, Put on Thy Strength, O Zion."—Isa. lii. 1.

ABBY A. PERRY.

"Awake! O Zion, now awake!"
The promised hour has come;
Jerusalem, thy garments take
And shine forth as the sun!"

"Arise, and shake thyself from dust,"
O captive daughter now;
"Oppressors Lands, O Lands and hust,
Her to them longer bow."

"For tho' ye sold yourselves for naught,"
Thus saith thy Savior- God:
"I have thy great deliverance wrought
From the oppressors rod."

"No money hath thy ransom paid,"
But thou dost know my name;
On me, thy many sins were laid;
For thee, thy Lord was slain.

"How beautiful the feet of Him
That doth good tidings bring;"
"Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice,
Together shall they sing."

The Lord will bare His holy arm
Before the nation's eyes;
And they shall come to Him and learn
"When Zion doth arise."

They'll boast no more o'er Abr'm's seed,
For when their King shall come,
He'll with the Gentile nations plead
His kingdom is "the stone"

That shall all other kingdoms break,
And they'll consume away;
All thrones and kingdoms He will shake
In that tremendous day!

Then with His ransom'd church He'll reign
With justice and with power;
Hasten, O Lord, and come again;
O bring that joyful hour!

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find one dollar to apply on my subscription to THE RESTITUTION, whose visits cheer my heart. I have access to many papers, but none of them talk on themes that are dear to all the waiting faithful children of God. I should be glad to do more for the paper, but am struggling hard to pay debts whose accumulated interest is a hard burden to bear. I am glad that the command to "owe no man anything" does not refer to debts of a financial character, for if it did I should stand condemned, and patiently await the execution of the sentence.

However I feel anxious to be relieved, as it would not only add to my enjoyment, but it would give me opportunities to stand in defence of the precious truth. To all who may have an interest in my welfare, I wish to say to you through THE RESTITUTION, that my determination to secure a home with God's people in the coming kingdom grows stronger as we approach nearer the glorious time when mortality shall be swallowed up of life. If any timid souls ask if I have grown cold in my love to God and the brethren, say to them no! I cannot help loving God more and more as I see his goodness displayed in the wonderful plan of redemption, and my heart goes out in sympathy to every devoted child of God who is striving to attain the Christ-like character. To all such let the holy injunction be repeated, "Be ye therefore steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for asmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Glorious encouragement! Let us buffet the waves a little longer; the heaviest surges will soon spend their force; the last struggle will soon be over; the palm of victory, the crown of glory awaits all the faithful. Are you ready for the coming of the Son of Man to-day? Yours waiting for the kingdom of God,

J. F. WAGONER.

Beaver, Ind.

Editor Restitution:—I am very thankful to you for sending me the paper without money in advance. I should have written to you before now but have been waiting to get some money but have not succeeded yet. We are, dear brother, very poor in this world's goods; can scarcely get the very necessaries of life, but still we love the paper so dearly that we are willing to make a sacrifice for it. If you will and can continue the paper I shall be very grateful, and as soon as possible I will send you the money. The paper is read by several beside my self. I am trying to do what good I can by getting as many readers as I can.

Well, I am entirely alone (my companion is a believer but not a member) and surrounded by United Brethren. They are very nice people—a splendid field for labor if they only had the right kind of a leader, and if I only had means to defray expenses I should call for some able brother to come and talk with them.

Your sister waiting and hoping for a better time coming.

E. J. DAVIS.

Editor Restitution:—I love THE RESTITUTION. It seems I could not do without it, it is so full of plain truths. I may send on new subscriptions soon, for I would like it taken and read in my neighborhood.

We have no preaching and I need help. It's not long since I began to learn the truth, and I am weak yet, but by diligent study of God's word, I hope to grow in grace and knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. The Scripture, once so dry and irksome, is now delightful. I thank God that I was blessed to meet some of the brethren and sisters to teach me the truth as it is taught in the Scriptures. I have been a member of the M. E. church for thirteen years, and consequently am assailed on every hand, but I thank God I have his word to bear me up.

CHAS. V. ANDERSON.

Brooklyn, Md.

Editor Restitution:—I am trying to live in the faith. I am constantly in prayer for the prosperity of our Zion. May God help us to live faithful in the divine life till our blessed Redeemer comes to make up his jewels, and take his ransomed home.

Dear editor, go on with the good work until our faith turns to sight, our prayer to praise. I want to continue to take your good paper if I can. I have been showing your paper to a good many and most are well pleased, and some say they will subscribe. I am the only one that I know of who is taking THE RESTITUTION in this country. More would believe in the soon coming of the Savior if they could hear the doctrine advocated more. Your brother,

ELD. BOOTH.

Miner's View, Kan.

Editor Restitution:—I write to let you know that I have not forgotten you, nor the cause you are advocating, though I have seemed to be negligent in sending my subscription for the present volume of your worthy paper. I have been absent from home the most of the time since May. I have been with people the most of the time that take THE RESTITUTION, so I did not send for mine, and so forgot that my subscription was due, till I went home and saw the wrapper. Enclosed, please find $2.00 to renew my subscription. I am much interested in your paper, and all others, that advocate the cause of Israel, which is the cause of God. Is it true that Ezekiel xxxvi. is being fulfilled to-day before our eyes? and that our hearts are made glad by the tidings that reach us, that Israel and the Jews are returning and building the "unwalled villages" spoken of in Ezekiel xxxviii. "Praise the Lord, O my soul," that I am permitted to live in this day, though "darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people" on this great subject; it assures us that the "set time to favor Zion has come," and so we must believe that the "Lord ere long will arise upon Zion, and his glory will be seen upon her;" "the Gentiles will come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." Let us continue to "pray for the peace of Jerusalem," being assured that "they shall prosper that love her."

I have made the acquaintance of a Jew recently, (Prof. Rosedale,) who was born in Jerusalem, and has spent the greater part of his life there. He is a gentleman and a scholar. He speaks thirteen languages, and writes seven. Mr. R. has been connected with many expeditions in the Holy Land, as interpreter and excursion contractor, having traveled the same route from Egypt to Canaan taken by Moses, who led Israel (under God) to the Land of Promise. Being a native of Jerusalem, he has made his country a life study. He has been lecturing in many cities and towns in America within the past two years with marked success, interesting and instructing the people. He is assisted by his step-son, (or has been,) but they have returned to Palestine. The son is to remain there, but Prof. R. expects to return immediately to this land and engage in lecturing, with an entire new outfit of articles and some animals to illustrate his lectures and interest the people in that Bible land, so full of wonders of the past, and promises of future and eternal glory, under the reign of Messiah, who traveled over that land; "the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," preaching "the gospel of the kingdom," and proving by his works that he was the Son of God as well as the Son of David. I hope many of the readers of THE RESTITUTION will have an opportunity to hear Prof. R. and become acquainted with him. He is a Christian Jew, believing in the future glory of Israel under Jesus, the true Messiah, and, therefore, a beloved brother. His wife was the widow of one who went to Palestine under Adams. Her husband died in a few weeks after their arrival in that land, leaving her a lone widow to struggle on with her children, who are now grown up and educated—a blessing to her who bore them. She is a very worthy woman, and has become strongly wedded to that land, preferring it to the land of her nativity. May God preserve them, and all who love the truth, unto eternal life, is the prayer of your sister,

NEWS ITEMS.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The correspondent of the Daily News at Constantinople telegraphs as follows: "No official communication of an intention to send the British fleet to Turkish waters was made to the Porte, but the Porte, hearing of such intention, made inquiries and objected to such a step as unjustifiable and unfriendly.

A despatch from Vienna to the Standard says: "Private letters from Constantinople confirm the reports of an extremity of the distress in the financial affairs of Turkey. Even the pilgrimage to Mecca, which has hitherto been provisioned at the expense of the government, is unable to get any assistance—an event which has never before occurred since the establishment of the Ottoman Empire."

THE AUSTRO-GERMAN ALLIANCE.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—A despatch from Berlin to the Pall Mall Gazette says: "The understanding between Germany and Austria extends to the Egyptian question. It is announced that the two governments will proceed conjointly in whatever measures are taken for the protection of the interests of the Egyptian bondholders."

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 6.—The Golos declares that it is time for Russia to offer the Poles the hand of friendship, and thus secure such allies in Germany and Austria that no Austro-German alliance will be dangerous to Russia.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S ILLNESS.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The Post's Berlin dispatch says Prince Bismark's physician has just returned from Varzin. His report of the Prince's condition does not allay the alarming rumors lately current.

GERMANY PROTECTING HER FRONTIER.

BERLIN, Nov. 6.—In order to neutralize the stronghold of Belefort, on the French frontier, a fortified camp is to be constructed at New Breisach, near the left bank of the Rhine.

THE FLOODS IN SPAIN.

MADRID, Nov. 5.—Floods have occurred in the Province of Jaen, causing great loss. There has been a renewal of the floods in Murcia. The Imparcial (newspaper) proposes that tablets be placed in facades in all the municipalities of the districts visited by the recent disastrous floods, bearing inscriptions, [illegible] the date of the fate given in Paris [illegible] aid of the sufferers, and the names of the newspapers which initiated and carried it out, and that a serenade be given to the French Ambassador at Madrid as an expression of the gratitude of the Spanish people toward France.

LONDON, November 9.—The Daily Telegraph's Vienna dispatch says a strong force of Montenegrins has marched on Gusinje, pillaging and burning everything before them. More than 300 Albanian Mussulmans were mercilessly slain.

A Times' dispatch from Calcutta says there seems to be little doubt of the Ameer's treachery. The general opinion is that he will be sent as a state prisoner to India.

The war between Chili and Peru continues. The latest advices report the capture of the Peruvian town of Pisagua by the Chilians.

LEWES, Del, November 8.—The steamship Champion, from New York for Charleston, was run into and sunk yesterday morning off the capes. Thirty-two lives are reported lost. Twenty-five persons are said to be saved. The ship Lady Octairo, from Breakwater for New York, came in collision with the steamer Champion, striking the steamer amidship, and sinking her in five minutes. The collision occurred twenty-five miles off the capes at 4 o'clock yesterday morning. The Lady Octairo is badly damaged, and is being towed to Philadelphia. The Champion left this city Thursday. Captain Lockwood commanded.

[The Appeal]

Don't Smoke, Boys.

A British Physician, observing the large number of boys under fifteen years of age on the streets with cigars and pipes in their mouths, was prompted to examine the breath of this class of smokers, and for that purpose selected thirty-eight boys between the ages of nine and fifteen. In twenty-two of these cases he found various disorders of the circulation and digestion, palpitation of the heart, and a more or less marked taste for strong drink. In twelve there was frequent bleeding of the nose, and twelve had slight ulceration of the mouth, caused by tobacco. The doctor treated them for their ailments, but with little effect until the habit of smoking was discontinued, when breath and strength were soon restored. The effect of tobacco in creating a taste for strong drink is unquestionably very great. If the testimony of some tobacco-users and medical men is of any weight, one of the most radical methods of keeping the youth from being led to intemperate drinking is to deny them tobacco.

BREVITIES.

A missionary who returned from Zululand before the late war gives the pronunciation of Cetywayo as "Tsewayo."

Indian corn was first grown by Europeans in this country at the James river settlement in Virginia, in 1608. In 1609 more than forty acres were grown by the Virginia planters.

According to an official report 160 Turkish mosques and holy schools were destroyed in Roumelia and Bulgaria during the Russian occupation of these provinces; and about the same number of mosques and schools have been destroyed since the Russians left.

Surprising as it may seem, the agricultural products of one year amount to nearly as much in value as the products of all our mines since 1849. The estimated yield of the mines during twenty-seven years—1849–1875—was $1,617,000,000. In 1877 the total value of the agricultural production of leading staples was $1,591,000,000.

During the year ending September 30, 1878, the following number of railroad accidents and of persons killed and wounded therein in the United States were recorded: Number of accidents, 813, persons killed, 182; persons injured, 762. In the same period ending September 30, 1878—Number of accidents, 770; person killed, 200; persons injured, 659.

The discovery by explorers in Alaska that the Yukon river is navigable for steamers 2,600 miles, is important, and places that stream among the largest rivers in the world. About 600 miles from its mouth it receives a very large navigable tributary. The basin formed by the confluence is twenty-four miles wide. The Yukon is nearly as large as our Mississippi. There is snow for six months, and without roads dog-sledges find good travelling. Game abounds and Indians have an easy life.

A French geographical paper, the Exploration, has received from Lisbon startling tidings of an English scheme for a railway from the river Zambesi through Livingstonians, "a Scotch town," to the northern coast of Zanzibar. Mr. Stanley started the idea; Manchester merchants have taken it up, the Government approve it, and a company with two millions capital is to be formed. Central Africa and its treasures, bywails the Exploration, are to share the fate of India and Australia while the French Sahara railway scheme hangs fire.

Eight thousand two hundred and fifteen miles of railroad are now open in British India. During the present year the very important Indus Valley line connecting the port of Kurrachu in Scinde with the Punjaub Railroad at Moultan, has been completed, and thus with the exception of the crossing the Indus at Suk Kuz a continuous communication by railway via Labor Delhi, Agra, and Benares to Calcutta, about 2,120 miles is established. The lines in upper India proved of great service in the recent campaign.

Eminent German statisticians have recently published an estimate of the total amount of capital invested in the construction of railroads since Stephenson's experimental locomotive first glided over a double rail, revolutionizing the transport system of our earth. The result of their calculations is the amazing sum of seventy-five billiards of francs, or fifteen thousand millions of dollars. The event that inaugurated the expenditure of such an amount as this—nearly fifteen dollers a head for every human being inhabiting the terrestrial globe—is worthier of celebration by jubilee ceremonies than the anniversary of a great battle.

Prof. Klebs of Prague and Prof. Tommasi of Rome have been examining, during the past spring, into the physical poison which produces marsh fever. They examined the lower strata of the atmosphere of the Roman Campagna and its soil. In both they discovered a microscopic fungus, consisting of movable shining spores of a long oval shape. With these spores animals were artifically infected with intermittent fever of the true marsh type, and they showed precisely the same enlargement of the spleen as human beings who have caught the fever in the ordinary way. Tommasi and Klebs have given this fungus the name of Bacillus malaria, as it grows into the shape of small reeds.

Dr. Fischer of the Imperial German post office has just published a pamphlet showing the comparative postal and telegraph statistics. The letter post of the world for 1878 amounted in round numbers to 3,800,000,000 letters, or about 9,250,000 daily; and the numbers have been increasing daily at an astonishing rate. Thus in Japan the number of post offices in 1872 was 1,159, and in 1876, it had risen to 3,649. The number of separate articles which passed through the Japanese post in 1878 was 47,000,000, of which 26,000,000 were letters, 10,000,000 post cards, and 9,500,000 newspapers. Post cards were first brought into use only in 1865, and now they are employed in almost every country of the world. The parcels post has however, not yet got beyond the first stage of its development. The number of telegraphic dispatches sent in 1877 amounted for the whole globe to nearly 120,000,000, or an average of 365,000 daily.

The Lord's love is as free as the air; full as the ocean; boundless as eternity; immutable as his throne; and unchangeable as his nature.

STETSON—In Ellsboro, Erie Co., Penn., Oct. 9, 1878, at his residence, our brother, Dr. G. W. Stetson, aged sixty-four years.

Our dearly beloved pastor has only lain down to rest for a while, having "fought the good fight of faith." In hope he awaits the crown of life so soon to be given to all who love the appearing of the Life-Giver. The church have lost a true friend of God; nevertheless, faith claims him alive from the dead, when "Thy dead men shall live." To him religion was no mystery. It was a sealed way for forty years.

He came to Edinboro six years ago, and was recognized as pastor of "The Church of God" (commonly called Adventists), and has been a faithful servant of God and the church until up to May 3rd, when he was stricken down with the spinal fever, and from which he did not wholly recover. During the time he has been with us, the Lord through his instrumentality has added forty-eight members to this church, who have heard and believed. May the dear ones who survive follow him as he followed Christ, remembering his prayers and exhortations which were offered in demonstration of the spirit and of power. Words of comfort were spoken by brother C. T. Russell, of Pittsburgh, Pa. N. WESTCOTT, per request.

POETRY.

[Church Journal and Messenger.]

"Let not Your Heart be Troubled."

I know not now how strong the faith must be,
How high the courage I shall need to die;
But Jesus knows, who tasted death for me;
His tender love will all my wants supply.

Alone, my fainting heart and flesh would dread
The river's depth, the valley's awful gloom;
But through their darkness life itself has led—
Death's shadow only lingers at the tomb.

Yes, Lord, the river knows Thy presence well;
It cannot hide Thy foot-prints with its flow;
And when the rising waters round me swell,
The stones of witness I shall see below.

Alone, my soul would fly in swift dismay,
From light unveiled and perfect holiness;
But O! exceeding fair is its array—
Thy blood its cleansing, Thine its righteousness.

Thou art my refuge, Thou my sure repose!
What then these fears but faithless doubts of Thee—
Whose lifting up led captive all my foes;
Who from the sting of death hast made me free?

It may be that my feet must touch the brink,
Before the fords of Jordan I discern;
But all along the way are food and drink,
And steadfastly the lights of promise burn

Thy staff the King of Terrors cannot shake;
"Nor height nor depth" Thine own from Thee divide!
To "fall asleep," and "in Thy likeness wake,"
This is my hope, dear Lord, for Thou hast died.

COMMUNICATIONS.

An Open Letter---Review of a Funeral Discourse.

Brother McNeily:

SIR:—Having been present, and hearing you preach the funeral of my little grandson on the 14th ult., I beg leave to give a brief review of the discourse, through THE RESTITUTION. I have neither time nor space to notice all the points on which I consider you in error, hence will content myself in noticing a few of your most glaring errors. Text, 1 Thess. iv. 14. On which, after positively denying, and even ridiculing the idea of a literal and future resurrection, you commented as follows: "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him." You ask, where from? From the grave? Then you answer, no! from heaven. You then introduce the following testimonies as proof of this grave assertion: Jude xiv., where Enoch is spoken of as having prophesied that the Lord would come with ten thousand of his saints to execute judgment upon the ungodly, and Zech. xii. 5. "And the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee." Now, that you grossly misapplied and misconstrued these texts, will appear very evident from a close and critical examination of the texts with their pretexts and contexts.

First, then, to the text. "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him." You say. "from heaven." Nay, verily, Brother Mc, for they have not gone there. If the righteous went to heaven at death, we would naturally suppose that, surely David, a man after God's own heart, went there. But what is the evidence in the case? Peter: "Men—brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, (not was dead and, resurrected, as you told us,) and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." "For David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts ii. 29, 34. Set this down as Samuel against Peter, No. 1. Which shall we believe?

But, that the saints who shall have died when Jesus comes, have not gone to heaven, we will hear Paul in the text under consideration, of whom you spoke very highly and eulogizingly in the discourse under review.

1 Thess. iv, 13: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep." They are asleep, then, Brother Mc, and not in heaven in the celestial paradise of God, enjoying all the bliss and happiness imaginable, as you told us in that funeral sermon. No, no! They are asleep in the earth, even as David expected to be. But he expected to awake from that sleep. Hence, he says, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." Psa. xvii. 15; Acts ii, 34. So, then, we see that David did not expect to go to heaven when he died. And Peter, on that ever memorable day of Pentecost, said that he had not gone there. So we have Samuel against Paul and David.

Now, mark, Brother Mc., the 14th verse of the 4th of 1st Thess. was put in, by Paul, as a reason why those Thessalonian brethren should not sorrow for their dead, as those having no hope, because they are only sleeping in Jesus, and when the Lord comes they shall awake. "For (because) if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, them also who sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him." Now, Brother Mc., let Paul answer. Rom. viii. 11: "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised Christ from the dead shall also quicken (make alive) your mortal bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in you." Hence, if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, in a like manner as Jesus was raised from the dead by the Father, he will also, by his spirit, quicken (make alive, Webster,) or bring his saints from the dead, even as he did Jesus. But when will this take place? At the death of each saint separately? Nay, verily. But, as Paul says, "At the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead (in Christ) shall be raised incorruptible, and we (i. e., the living saints) shall be changed." 1 Cor. xv. 52. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, (after having been changed,) shall be caught up together with them (the resurrected ones,) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. iv. 10, 17.

But you told us that the saints are now continually being resurrected as they die, and instantly fly away to heaven. You acknowledged, however, that you could not just exactly tell us how this was brought about, nevertheless, it was so. Set this down as Samuel against Paul, No. 2. For surely the saints will not come from heaven with Jesus, when, according to Paul, they must first be raised from death, at the sounding of the last trump, and then be caught up with the living, changed ones, to meet the Lord in the air.

Neither will Jesus go back to heaven from whence he then comes, but he will then come with all his saints to the earth, to establish his kingdom and reign over the house of Jacob forever. Luke i. 32, 33.

Once more. Paul says, the saints shall all be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. What does this language indicate?

For illustration, suppose you have a dear friend gone into some distant country on some business detaining him for a number of years, but at length you receive a message from him informing you that he was coming to see you at a certain hour on a certain day, and, knowing what train he was coming on, at the proper time you would tell your wife that you were going to the station to meet your friend, would she for one moment conclude that when you met your friend at the station, that you would go with him to where he had come from? Would she not rather conclude that you went to meet him to escort him to your own home? Most assuredly, the latter; for that is the only idea that such language could reasonably convey to her. Even so the saints will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air to escort him to earth with shouts of praise and adoration, as he was once escorted into Jerusalem at his first advent. This accounts for Paul's speaking of the coming of our Lord with all his saints, at the close of the third chapter of 1st Thessalonians, as well as the prediction of Enoch referred to by Jude, and the prophecy of Zechariah xiv. 5. "The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."

Mark the expression, Brother Mc., "all the saints." Not merely a portion, or a majority of them, as you have it. You told us in that funeral sermon, that the righteous, as fast as they died, were resurrected, and then they winged their way straight off to heaven—the celestial paradise of God—and that when the Lord comes to change the living saints to take them off to heaven, those resurrected ones, (as you term it,) will come with him. But, Mark, Brother Mc., this would not be coming with all the saints by a long ways. So that here we have Samuel against Paul, No. 3.

But, pray, what sort of a resurrection do you believe in? You deny the resurrection of the body. And you say the immortal part, or man proper, never dies. What, then, is resurrected? For, to be resurrected, is to be made alive again. See Webster's dictionary. Hence, that which never dies, cannot be resurrected.

But, in arguing the position that many of the saints would never die, you referred us to the following language of Paul: "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." 1 Cor. xv. 51. This I indorse with all my heart.

But when you undertook to prove the present immortality of the soul inherent in man, you took the language of Jesus referring only to this same class of saints, and you applied it to all believers on the Son of God. Thus you attempted to prove that none of the saints die. Hence, such a thing as there being any dead in Christ would be an impossibility. Hence, we here have Samuel against himself, as well as against Paul, No. 4.

Here is the text: "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Take these words, isolated as they stand here, and it would prove your theory. But, my friend, let me tell you, in all kindness, and with the best of feelings toward you, that you wrested this part of a sentence entirely from its connection, and you made such a notorious misapplication of it that, if you give me a license to use the Savior's words on another occasion in the same way, I will prove that you shall go and hang yourself.

But, let us look at the above text in its proper connection, and then we shall at once see the absurdity of your application. John xi. 21-26: "Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." See how strong her faith was. But she still goes a little further, and says: "But I know that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee." Intimating to Jesus that she believed that even now, Jesus could restore her brother to her in life again. Hence, in order to sanction the idea, "Jesus saith unto her, thy brother shall rise again." Martha now being so full, and overjoyed, at the idea of having her brother restored to life again, that it seems she did not wish to fully betray her feelings before Jesus and his disciples, but rather, partially to conceal them, she says to Jesus: "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." With reference to this language, although you did not directly say that Jesus reprimanded, or corrected her, you did say that she was in error on that point, or Jesus would have sanctioned it, which you say, he did not do. Let us see. "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life." This, you say, proves a present resurrection. That is, that the resurrection is now, and was then continually going on, as fast as individuals died. Strange, Indeed! You told us that my daughter's child, which had only died the day before, was resurrected and gone to heaven already! Whilst Lazarus, one of Jesus' beloved disciples, who had been dead four days, was not yet resurrected and gone to heaven! For, mark, Brother Mc., Jesus did not say to Martha, "Thy brother is risen, and gone to heaven." No, no. But, "thy brother shall rise again." But, in this, we have Samuel against himself, No. 2.

But, what are we to understand Jesus to mean, when he says, "I am the resurrection and the life?" Simply this: That he had the power then to raise up from death whom he would, as well as to resurrect all the dead saints when he comes, at the last trump. "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead (in Christ) shall be raised incorruptible, and we (i. e., the living saints) shall be changed." When? Answer: "At the last trump." And not simultaneously with their dying. 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52; 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. And as further proof of these glorious facts, let me refer you to the following language of Jesus, John v. 21, 25: "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." This was truly verified in the case of the widow's son of Nain, as also in the case of the ruler Jairus' daughter, and in that of Lazarus, the brother of Martha. But this is not all. "For the hour is coming, when all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." John v. 28, 29. But mark, Brother Mc., it is those that are in their graves, that shall hear his voice and shall come forth. But you would not have your imaginary spirit-man go to the grave; and, therefore, he cannot be called forth from thence. So this is Samuel against Jesus, No. 2.

But when will this coming forth take place? With regard to the saints, Jesus says: "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 44. "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." Now, Brother Mc., what do you say? Do you still claim that Martha was wrong in referring to the resurrection at the last day? We will now see whether Jesus sanctioned Martha's expression, or not. Having given her to understand already, that he was about to restore her brother to life again, in the expression, "I am the resurrection and the life," Jesus now proceeds to confirm her idea with regard to the resurrection at the last day, by showing her that, although those believing in him should die, they should live again. "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." Not is living, but "shall live," future tense; Brother Mc. Samuel against Jesus, No. 3. But this is not all; for those saints who shall be living at the second advent of Jesus shall never die, but they shall be changed from mortality to immortality, in a moment, at the last trump, which you so successfully proved in your discourse referred to. Then let us see what Jesus says with regard to that matter.

John xi. 26: "And whosoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die." Now, what class of believers does Jesus refer to here? Evidently, to those living at the time referred to by Martha, in the resurrection, at the last day. Whosoever liveth then, and believeth on Jesus shall never die. For had he had reference to believers then living, as you claimed, to prove your pet theory of immortal soulism, he would simply have said, "Whosoever believeth in me, shall never die." The word "liveth," in that case, would have been entirely superfluous, besides your application of the above text is equivalent to charging Jesus with telling a falsehood, for you know that Lazarus was one of his most beloved disciples, and yet Jesus said that he was dead. He had died, notwithstanding he had believed on Jesus. So that it is a notorious fact that your application of the above text is false. Hence, we have Samuel against Jesus, No. 4.

Now, permit me once more to return to 1 Thess. iv. 13-18. Here, Paul informs his brethren that he did not wish them to be in ignorance concerning the dead, and admonished them not to grieve for their dead ones as others who have no hope. To Paul the hope of the gospel was what would buoy him up under trying and distressing circumstances. Hence, he here sets forth a portion of his hope, referring to the coming of the Lord in connection with the resurrection of the dead in Christ; for, without these two items the Christian's hope would be a blank. Therefore, in every chapter of this epistle, he refers to the Lord's coming, as also on many other occasions. In Acts xxiii, 6, he thus addressed his Hebrew brethren: "Men, and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the Son of a Pharisee; of the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question."

Mark, Brother Samuel, it is the "resurrection of the dead," not of the living. See also Acts xxiv. 15, 21. In truth, to talk of any other resurrection than that of the dead, would simply be nonsense. For a man must first cease to live before he can be resurrected—quickened, or made alive. Resurrection is defined, by our standard lexicons, as a revival, a vivification from the grave, and not a standing up in a new life.

Having thus given a brief sketch of his hope, in showing that the living saints at the coming of Christ, should have no advantage over the dead in Jesus; for the latter shall rise, or be raised first, then the living ones shall be changed, and then all be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air, forever to remain with him; Paul admonished his Thessalonian brethren to comfort one another with these words. But what were the means of comfort and consolation presented by you to the bereaved parents on the occasion herein referred to?

Ah! that is the point. Instead of referring them to Paul's consoling words, (although you read it before the audience, you mystified and explained it all away,) you told us that the child of the bereaved parents was not dead, but was already resurrected, and had winged its way to the celestial paradise of God, and being already engaged with the shining retinue of angels, in singing praises to God and the Lamb. Thus, by the unscriptural imaginations of your own, and others' brains, you undertook to comfort and console those distressed parents. Hence, in this we have Samuel against Paul, No. 5.

You also represent death as being a most gracious friend and benefactor, whilst Paul speaks of it as an enemy to the human race. 1 Cor. xv. 26. He says: Death was brought into the world by sin. Rom. v. 12. He also says, that it is the wages of sin. Rom. vi. 23. Yet you would call it a friend! So we have Samuel against Paul, No. 6.

As I believe in giving a man credit for what good he does, I will just here say that I fully concur with you in a declaration you made at the closing up of your anti-trinitarian sermon on your last visit here. You will doubtless recollect that in your showing that the sacrifice made in the death of Christ was not a mere human, but a divine sacrifice; you remarked that Christ died wholly—that all there was of him suffered death on the cross. See 1 Pet. iii. 18. "Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit." This is just what we believe as a people, and what we contend for, and for which we have been sneered at and stigmatized as infidels, because we believed that man dies wholly. What is death? Webster: Death, extinction of life; dead, destitute of life; die, to lose life, to expire. Now, does this correspond with the Bible definition of death? Let us see. Gen. v. 5: "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." Now, if all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, he must surely have ceased to live at the expiration of that time. Thus, in his case, at least, death was the extinction of life.

But, again, Isa. xxxviii. 1, Isaiah to Hezekiah: "Thus saith the Lord, set thine house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live." Hence, in Hezekiah's case, to die, was to cease to live. And, mark you, thus saith the Lord.

But, I must return to my task.

In speaking of the bleasedness of your imaginary, immortal soul, or deathless spirit, you referred us to 2 Cor. v. 1-8. But, having neither the time nor space here to enter into a full detail of all the matter contained in this text, I will simply give it a passing notice for the present.

In the first place, then, I will notice that you assume that the words "house," "tabernacle," "building" and "body," all mean the same thing, and that they all refer to the human organism. Now, this is a bold assertion, but you left it entirely destitute of any proof, knowing that it is an easy matter to make assertions, but not quite so easy to prove and sustain them. So far as my memory serves me, I recollect of no text in the Bible where any one of those words except "body," is ever so used. And it is often used figuratively, referring to a number of individuals collectively, as, for instance, the "church" being called the body of Christ.

Now, then, we come to the text, or rather pretext.

It is worthy of notice that Paul, in the preceding chapter, is contrasting temporal with eternal things, saying, "We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." Then comes in our text, which we will paraphrase as follows:

"For we know that if our earthly house (present dwelling place) of this tabernacle (temporary arrangement) were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Now, mark, Paul does not say that this building is to remain eternally in the heavens, as you represented it, but that the building is "eternal" in its duration. This is doubtless the inheritance of which Peter speaks, saying, it is "incorruptible, undefiled, and that (it) fadeth not away; reserved in heaven, ready to be revealed in the last time; for you who are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation." 1 Pet. i. 4, 5. John also seems to have had a vision concerning this glorious inheritance, for he says: "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God." Rev. xxi. 2, 3.

Brother Samuel, this does not look very much like us flying away up yonder to get to God, does it?

But, to return to 2 Cor. v. 2: "For in this (present temporary dwelling) we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." Does the expression "our house which is from heaven," indicate that this building is eternally to remain in heaven? Nay, verily, but rather as Peter says: It is reserved in heaven, ready to be revealed in the last time for those who prove themselves worthy of the inheritance.

Verse 4: "For we that are in this tabernacle (dwelling) do groan, being burdened; not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." But here I must leave this text, as I wish to notice a few other points yet.

As a proof that the building referred to above, is not to come down to us, but that we are going up to heaven to get into it, you referred us to John xiv. 2, 3, emphasizing very strongly on the "many mansions," the "place" he was going to prepare for his disciples, and the word "there" in the last clause of the third verse. Now, let us look at this text in its true light. "In my Father's house are many mansions; if not, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place (position) for you. And if I go and prepare a place (position) for you, I will come again and, receive you unto myself; that where I am, ye may be also." I have omitted the translators' supplied words, because, by leaving them out, the obvious meaning of the text is more clear.

But what are we to understand by the expression, "I will come again?" Does he mean to say that he would come every time that a saint dies? No, indeed. The word "again," signifies once more. "I will come once more, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, ye may be also." Unto them who look for him will he appear the second time .... unto salvation." Paul, Heb. ix. 28. But where was Jesus when he said, "I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am ye may be also?" Mark, Brother Mc., he did not say, "that where I am going, ye may be also," but, "where I am." On the mount of Olives, near Jerusalem, is where he then was, and that is where he is going to come to first, when he comes again. Brother Mc., you summoned the wrong witness again.

I will notice one more point, and then I shall stop, as I have already extended my letter much beyond what I had intended.

You took the position that there is a certain living, deathless entity in man, which you termed the immortal soul, or deathless spirit. You also claimed that this entity was the real person or man proper, and that the body was simply the house occupied by the said tenant, and that at the death of the body the tenant simply moved out. And as proof of this assertion, you referred, first, to Gen. ii. 7: "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul."

Now, Brother Samuel, what was formed of the dust? Your witness says, "man," not a house for a man to live in. What was breathed into his (the man's) nostrils? Your witness says, "the breath of life," not a living, or immortal soul entity. What became a living soul? Your witness says, "man," not the breath of life. But, to anticipate this conclusion, you claimed that the verb "became," meant, come in possession of. Let us see. Webster: Become, to fit, or befit; to be made. As for instance, George Washington became, or was made president of the United States. Hence Paul says, "And so it is written. The first man—Adam—was made a living soul," not a living soul put into the man. 1 Cor. xv. 45. But where was this written, as quoted here by Paul? Answer, Gen. ii. 7. "And man became (was made) a living soul." This is Samuel against Paul, No. 7. Well, you have got the wrong witness on the stand again. Now for your next.

You referred us to Eccl. xii. 7. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Now, in the first place, I would ask, who are included in this text? Is it only the righteous? as you claim that they are the only class who go to heaven. But it is a fact that Solomon here speaks of man in general, embracing both the good and the bad. Hence, he cannot mean that the person goes to God at death, and that, too, from the simple fact that he does not say so, for the word "soul" is not found in the text. But, in order to anticipate this difficulty, you assumed that spirit meant soul, and soul meant spirit; that the two words were synonymous, meaning the same thing. Let us see. Heb. iv. 12: "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." Now, sir, if the two words mean the same thing, pray tell us how soul and spirit can be separated or divided asunder. But that they do not mean the same thing, is evident from the fact that they are joined together by the co-ordinate conjunction "and." Samuel against Paul, No. 8.

But, if spirit does not mean "soul," what does it mean? Let Job answer. "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God in my nostrils." What did God put into the man's nostrils? Answer: "The breath of life." And this, Job says, is the spirit of God in his nostrils. And this is what returns to God when the dust returns to the earth. Now, if you tell me what this breath of life was before it was breathed into the man's nostrils, I will tell you what it will be when it returns to God. If you say that it was a living, conscious entity, then I ask, does he have a great reservoir of such beings somewhere, in readiness to supply each human body that comes into existence, or is he continually engaged in creating them as fast as needed? Now, either of those positions must necessarily implicate God as being one of the immediate and direct parties engaged, personally, in bringing every child into existence, whether legitimate or illegitimate, and that would be ridiculous and God-dishonoring in the extreme.

But, once more, if it is a fact that the real person, or man proper, originates directly with God, and the body, which you simply term the house or tent occupied by such tenant, only originates with earthly parents, pray tell us how, and when, that spirit-man ever became your child, as you told us that two of your children had departed and gone to heaven? Will Brother Samuel answer?

But here I must bid you adieu. And now, in conclusion, let me ask you, will you come out man-like, and in a fair and and public discussion, undertake to defend and sustain what you preach? If so, you have only to write out your propositions, and you can be accommodated. I would urge this in particular, in order to relieve you of the painful necessity of hereafter resorting to funeral occasions in order to palm off your unscriptural dogmas upon the people.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Notes of Recent Travel and Sojourn with the "Household of Faith." No. I.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

At Glasgow, Port Washington Iron Works, Collingwood and Cleveland, Ohio. One week in, but not of the Moody and Sankey revival meetings at Cleveland. The great machinery of the "craftsmen" which evolves the modern cry of "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Interview with Mr. Moody. His criterion of the rightfulness of his proceedings avowed to be "success." Ignorant of the gospel and faithless of "the promises," he declines all discussion, however courteous and friendly, of the points at issue. When cited to the case of Paul at Athens, at Corinth and in Ephesus, in reasoning out the Scriptures with the Jews and "disputing daily with devout persons in the markets," encountering the epicureans and stoics, etc., he replied that Paul at Athens "came nearer a failure" than anywhere else because he was so disputatious. He is, therefore, wiser than Paul. Vain efforts to stay the tide of shallow fanaticism which sweeps along in his meetings the unthinking, emotional, giddy multitude. Our protest, readily published by the daily press, some evidence that our antagonism to mere sensationalism in religion was discerned and appreciated by some. It is now as it was in the days of Noah and of the coming of the Son of Man. The more excellent way is, still, like its author, despised and rejected of men. But, as Noah was vindicated by the divine interposition, so shall the saints be when Jesus comes in his kingdom in great power and glory.

My "card" in THE RESTITUTION, expressing a desire and readiness to spend sometime with the brethren scattered abroad in "laboring in the word and doctrine" was promptly answered by calls from brethren in Salem and Glasgow Iron Works in Ohio, Wytheville, Va., Henderson, Ky., and Elizabeth, N. J. Circumstances beyond control prevented acceptance of all these and restricted me to Glasgow Iron Works, and thence, pursuant to an urgent invitation, to a visit and sojourn of more than a week with the brethren in Cleveland, Ohio. At the first of these points, known as "the Glasgow, Port Washington Coal and Iron Co's Works," I was cordially received and welcomed by Brother Wm. Rennie and his sister—wife—the latter of whom, in the temporary absence of her husband, on my arrival, (October 4th,) with characteristic Scotch kindness and energy, sped me onward, with an escort, to show me the way, some two miles distant, to a large gathering of the people, convened in a Sunday school pic-nic, at which an appointment for me and others to speak, had been made before my coming. Finding myself thus suddenly confronted at Buckhorn, a station on the Marietta, Columbus and Cleveland railroad, by a large assembly of parents, teachers, scholars, and other citizens, to each and all of whom I was a total stranger, I listened with more than a mere lookeron's interest to the opening address of Professor Dodd, of the high school, near by—a minister, I learned, of the "Disciples' church"—who gave sound advice to the children and eulogized Sunday schools as the great means of civilizing and Christianizing the rising generation, etc. His somewhat hurried address being ended, he hastened away, as he said, to fill an appointment elsewhere. After some excellent singing it was then announced that, after a recess for refreshments, which had been bountifully provided and of excellent quality, and to which all were hospitably invited, an address would be delivered by myself, and that the day would be concluded by a discourse by "Rev. Mr. Hoagland," of the M. P. church, to be followed by prayer and singing. I thus found myself a mere layman and a stranger sandwiched between two clerical, orthodox orators well known to the people, and, doubtless, suspiciously on the alert as to any dangerous heresies which might be dexterously insinuated into the tender minds of the Sunday school flock by a stranger. With a view, therefore, of exercising any such captious spirit, and allaying the fears of my possible clerical critics, I commenced by asking the patrons and teachers and scholars present, if it had ever occurred to them to enquire, when and where the first Sunday school began? who was the first teacher? who the first scholars? and what the first lesson taught? I added that, although Robert Raikes, of London, some hundred years ago had gathered the street boys of that great city into schools to teach them the alphabet and to read and spell, and had thereby been regarded as the founder of the modern Sunday school, yet that the first Sunday school was long before that. And that as I saw before me the bright and earnest faces of many boys and girls who had, perhaps, never heard the question answered, I hoped they would always remember the secret I was about to tell them. Pausing to fix their attention, I added that the first Sunday school was opened at the era of creation—in the garden of Eden—in Paradise; that the Lord God was the first teacher, and Adam and Eve the first scholars in that school; and the first lesson they were taught, was obedience to their parent.

The statement seemed new to them and obviously caught their young minds, and without reading, I rehearsed, in familiar terms, to them, the Bible narrative of these facts. That the Bible told us all this wonderful history of the first Sunday school in the two first chapters of Genesis. How that the Lord God, having finished the creation and placed man at the head of it, on the sixth day of the week (our Friday) rested on the Seventh Day (our Saturday), and commenced the work on the first day of the ensuing week (our Sunday) of teaching the man and woman he had made the knowledge they needed and the duty he required of them, which was to obey his command—to keep his law—the only law he had as yet required them to observe, and this was formed or organized in the garden of Eden, the first and oldest Sunday school in our world. Without rehearsing here the Bible details which fill in this outline of the subject, I referred both teachers and children to the Bible itself—the whole volume—as God's Sunday school book, the oldest, the most interesting and instructive, and only perfectly true record and history of our race and world, and as abounding in the most simple and attractive accounts of those whose lives it records, particularly the biographies of such wonderful men as Adam and Noah and Lot and Job and Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, of Moses and Samuel, of David and Daniel, of John the baptist, and Peter, and James, and John, and Paul, and always and above all of that, greatest of all our fallen race, the Son of the Highest, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Savior and Redeemer of our world, yet to come to us from the right hand of the Father, as the second Adam, the Lord of glory, the future monarch and ruler of all the nations upon earth.

I reminded them that Adam recited his first lesson in giving names to every beast of the field and every fowl of the air which the Lord God had formed and brought before him; and that "whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof." Deeming the occasion fit and appropriate, I enforced the lesson of Scripture that the religion of minor children is obedience to their parents. That such was the command in the New Testament, citing Ephesians vi. 1-4, and Colossians iii. 20, 21, and at the same time, as the context showed, parents were required to "bring their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." That such was God's appointed plan for the duty and government of each, and which, if pursued, would render both happy.

Followed by Mr. Hoagland, I was gratified to hear his earnest endorsement of what I had offered, in an exceedingly strong and excellent address on the general subject. Tarrying after the close of the agreeable services only long enough to take leave, and to express to Mr. H. my favorable appreciation of his discourse, which I ventured to tell him, was liable to the single criticism of being "too short," I soon found myself again at the hospitable fireside of Brother Rennie who had returned after his constrained absence from home.

In that ready sympathy and communion of faith and feeling inspired by our mutual trust and hope and joy in the coming salvation, and our ardent and grateful thankfulness for the "exceeding great and precious promises" of future blessedness, which already afford us, in the firm persuasion of their truth and certainty, a foretaste of that "divine nature" they will secure for us when Jesus comes. We felt, though personally strangers, yet as well acquainted with each other as if we had passed our lives together. The secret of this grateful unity and fellowship, though strange and incomprehensible to "those without," is well known and heartfelt to those who learn from the same book, who, therefore, speak the same thing and are taught of God to love one another "and to be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." With our Blessed Lord as a common magnet—the central luminary of the Christian system,—in being drawn to him, we are of necessity, drawn nearer to each other, so that we may feel what we sing with the spirit and in the understanding also,— "Blest be the tie that binds

Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

The history of Brother Rennie's experience and progress in the truth well deserves a memorial record if we had the time and space to write it. It proves what can be accomplished by those divine graces, faith and patience. Having learned the truth in the old world (as we call Europe), and holding on to the precious treasure—the knowledge of the gospel of the kingdom of God, through much contention and opposition, and with characteristic national tenacity, he migrated to America with his wife, also in the faith, from Glasgow, Scotland, some six years ago, to take an active and highly responsible position for some large capitalists in Great Britain, chiefly Scotchmen, in the management of this large and valuable property at Port Washington, Ohio, in which millions of money had been invested. Chosen for this position, by his known energy, integrity and capacity, though a young man, scarcely yet thirty years of age, he speedily developed such peculiar qualifications for a more elevated trust, that he has been recently appointed, on the recommendation of two of the directors of the company who have visited and inspected their works personally, to the chief directorship and management of their large interests. This has devolved on him very onerous and pressing duties, notwithstanding which he has found time and opportunity "to sound out the word of the truth of the gospel" in the midst of unpropitious surroundings, in a community largely composed of opposing sectarians, and has, after an unrequited labor, (patiently endured for more than five years continuously,) at length and since the beginning of the present year, gathered into the fold of the good shepherd, a "little flock" of some twenty members—male and female—earnest and honest people who have intelligently received and "obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us" in the Holy Scriptures, Rom. vi. 17, and who being thus made free from sin, have become the servants of righteousness. Ib. 18.

It was truly gratifying to meet this faithful little band, who were taught the truth by our faithful and indefatigable brother, and who gave gratifying evidence of their joy and happiness in having found the pearl of great price. On two First Days, and on near every evening of the week we assembled for worship and praise and edification in our most holy faith from the lesson of the divine word, our meetings being supplemented by a fair attendance from the neighboring villages of Port Washington and Wolfe's station, and the surrounding country. The attention, as well as attendance at these meetings was good, and we indulged the hope and faith that the word of the kingdom so diligently and acceptably sown by our dear brother, whose hands the writer most willingly sought to hold up during his long fight with the Amelekites,—may bring forth fruit unto victory in the end. I learned from the brethren that they had enjoyed and been greatly refreshed and built up by the acceptable labors of our beloved brethren, Stephenson and Sweet, who had visited them and set forth to the people in glowing terms, the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Thus we see how wise it is to heed the divine exhortation, "Be not weary in well doing for in due time we shall reap if we faint not." Our dear brother seems to have been able, "through Christ strengthening him," to obey that difficult yet harmoniously consistent duty of being, at the same time, "diligent in business, fervent in spirit and serving the Lord."

Taking leave of the kindhearted and earnest brethren with whom I had sojourned so agreeably, and grateful for the Christian sympathy and hospitality of Brother and Sister Rennie, and accompanied on the way by the former, we journeyed to Cleveland, whither I had been invited by the brethren there. Arriving in the midst of the Moody and Sankey whirlwind, which had roused the city to an extraordinary pitch of religious excitement, I must defer to a future number some account of what we saw and heard.

A Hint to the Little Folks.

Did you know little children, that you ought to kneel in the worship, just the same as your fathers and mothers? It is not giving God the reverence due him, if you sit up straight as little sticks, while prayer is made, nor is it even good manners, to act in that way. It annoys your friends, especially when you are away from home. If you do not care any thing about religion yourselves, be courteous enough to respect the feelings of others. I have seen grown people do the same thing, but I hope you will never be guilty of the like. Your true and loving friend.

SELECTIONS.

[Harper's Bazar.]

"How Long Have I to Live."

It is not everyone who asks himself this question, because, strangely enough, it is the belief of most persons that their lives will be exceptionally lengthy. However live assurance companies are aware of the credulous weaknesses of those whose lives they assure, and have therefore compiled numerous tables of expectancy of life for their own guidance, which are carefully referred to before a policy is granted. The following one of these well authenticated tables in use among London assurance companies, showing the average length of life at various ages. In the first column we have the present ages of persons of average health, and in the second column we are enabled to peep, as it were, behind the scenes of an assurance office, and gather from their table the number of years they will give us to live. This table has been the result of careful calculation, and seldom proves misleading. Of course sudden and premature deaths, as well as lives unusually extended, occasionally occur, but this is a table of the average expectancy of life of an ordinary man or woman.

Age.	More years to live.
1	39
10	61
20	41
30	34
40	28
50	21
60	14
70	9
80	5

Our reader will easily gather from the above tabulated statement the number of years to which their lives, according to the law of averages, may reasonably be expected to extend.

Enon Near to Salim.

Prof. J. W. McGarvey writes in the St. Louis Christian of a visit to Enon and Salim, (setting out from Nablous, the ancient Shechem), the place where John is said to have been baptizing, "because there was much water there:"

"The 'much water' we found all the way, and, although the season was exceptionally dry, pools well suited for baptizing were abundant. We rode into a number of these to try their depth. But we wanted to find, in addition to the 'much water,' an open space on the bank of the stream suitable for the assembling of the great multitudes who flocked to John's place of baptizing; and for several miles we found no such place. We pursued our pathless way on the slopes of a narrow ravine, with high and precipitous hills on each side. We had to ford the stream frequently, and its banks were everywhere so thickly crowded with a jungle of oleanders in full bloom, that we could not always pass where we would. Never, in a single day, have I seen so many oleanders. For as many as five miles, their line of mingled pink and green was as continuous as the current of the stream which nourished them. Finally, after a fatiguing ride, during which both our dragomen and our escort became discouraged and fell behind, there suddenly opened before us a beautiful valley among the mountains, about one mile wide and three miles long. Bedouin tents were pitched in groups here and there; herds of camels, to the number of three or four hundred, were grazing, or drinking, or moving about; and swarms of brown skinned boys, both large and small, were bathing at different places in the stream. Here, then, was the open space required, and a more suitable place for the gathering of a multitude could not be found on the banks of any stream in Palestine. It is identified as Enon by the only man who has ever made a thorough and scientific exploration of the country, and it is now accepted as such without dispute from any quarter. We cut an oleander cane apiece from the bank of the stream and we took a bath in one of its pools."

Gospel Consolation.

In one of his sermons Dr. Morton Brown says; "Dense as is the gloom which surrounds death to all, it is at death that the gospel especially shines and triumphs. Dark as is the mouth of the tomb, it is there that the gospel scatters its brightest radiance and inspires its noblest hopes. In the busy scenes of life, the things of sense oppose the gospel, stifle its claims, obscure its glories, and retard its work. But from death the world recedes; it shrinks and leaves an open space for religion to administer its balm, to assert its claims, and to reveal its power. Before death infidelity trembles, above death Christianity triumphs."

"To the sleeping prisoner in the grave infidelity offers no release, but Christianity leads captive death and the grave. It takes the the Christian by the one hand, and carries its flaming torch in the other; it enters the gloomy chambers of the dead; it shows the Angel of Mercy watching at the mouth of the sepulchre; it points to the inmates of the tomb as at rest without a disturbing dream; that like sleep it is only for a season, and that at the resurrection Christ will say in effect to all what he said in reality of Lazarus, 'I go to awake them out of sleep.'"

A Wonderful Flower.

A correspondent sends from San Francisco a brief account of the flowering of that strange and wonderful lily, the Victoria regia, which created a furore of excitement in that city, where such an event had never before transpired. Travelers on rivers and lakes in tropical climes describe the Victoria regia as one of the most remarkable of vegetable productions. Springing from the depths of the river or lake, it pushes up to the sunlight a strong and solid framework of nerves and fibers, strengthened by very projecting partitions such as no other plant possesses, jagged and irregular beneath the water, but opening out upon the surface smooth leaves nearly circular in form, from six to eight feet in diameter, which float there thus securely anchored, like miniature islands of green. So firmly are these leaves supported by the frame work beneath that a person of ordinary weight can stand upon them without sinking; and the birds of the region where they grow often fly to them as a resting-place at night to avoid beasts of prey, and sometimes resort to them for the purpose of hatching and rearing their young. The flowering of the San Francisco specimen is thus described: "The streets were thronged with carriages and the cars crowded going to gaze upon the great lily in bloom. The tank is twenty feet in diameter, and about four feet deep. The flower is about fourteen inches in diameter, of a bright crimson, shading off at the center to a light creamy pink. The stamens are like gold tipped with crimson. The leaves are of immense size and strength, six feet in diameter, with ribs as large as a cane. A lady weighing eighty-five pounds stood on the unsupported leaf. It was amusing to listen to the expressions of amazement and admiration of the hundreds of persons who come to see this wonderful flower.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Truth cannot part from holiness of life and charity of heart.

Self-inspection is the only means to preserve us from self-conceit.

If you want to annoy and puzzle and baffle a man full of tricks and duplicity, you have only to practice a straight forward and simple integrity.

The essence of true nobility is neglect of self. Let the thought of self pass in and the beauty of action is gone, like the bloom from a soiled flower.

Don't wait for your fervor to cool before you act. The workman at the foundry might as well wait for the molten iron to cool before pouring it into the mould.

Is not every face that habitually turns towards us with affectionate, guileless smiles, beautiful in our eyes? And will not an habitual frown distort the noblest features, and render them hideous?

He is below himself who is not above an injury. Plato said that when an injurious speech was offered to him, he placed himself so high that it could not reach him.

FAREWELL.

How often it is said
I sit and think, and wonder too, sometimes,
How it will seem when in that happier clime,
It never will ring out like funeral chime
Over the dead.

No tears! no tears!
Will there a day come that I shall never weep?
For I bedew my pillow in my sleep.
Yes, yes; thank God! no grief that clime shall keep—
No weary years.

The line of conduct chosen by a boy during the five years from fifteen to twenty will, in almost every instance, determine his character for life. As he is then careful or careless, prudent or imprudent, industrious or indolent, truthful or dissimulating, intelligent or ignorant, temperate or dissolute, so will he be in after years, and it needs no prophet to cast his horoscope or calculate his chances.

"The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord." Rev. xi. 15.

The coming events of the kingdom of God,
Cast in glory their shadows before,
And my being would leap from its prisoned abode,
And the King in his beauty adore.

He comes, and his Spirit that lingers below,
In the hearts of the chosen and tried,
Is quickened, and tells, in its mystical flow,
The approach of the Bridegroom and Bride.

The love and the joy and the peace, of the elect,
Like the day-star arise in the soul,
And we taste the first-fruits of the Eden of rest,
And hasten to enter the goal.

All glory, all glory, to Him that was slain,
Who hath wash'd and redeemed us to God,
For he cometh with power, in his kingdom to reign,
And the Earth, to his sceptre is bowed.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOV. 10, 1879.

COMMUNICATIONS are accumulating on our hands just now. We will do the best we can with them, taking the interests of our paper fully into consideration.

WE thank those kind friends that remember the financial wants of THE RESTITUTION. All the aid that comes is needed, and continued assistance, too, in order to get through the year without some embarrassment. Hitherto God has aided us and we trust him still.

BY consulting the news column it will be seen that the prospects for a very long continued peace in Europe are far enough from being assuring. That peaceful relations between England and Turkey will be much longer maintained is exceedingly doubtful. The Mediterranean fleet, under Admiral Hornby, is menacing the government of the Sublime Porte with an invasion of Turkish waters unless certain reforms are speedily carried out. It is conjectured that Britain will occupy Asia Minor in the event of Turkey's non-compliance with England's demands through her minister. Then the British and Russian frontiers would be brought almost together in Asia Minor as they are likely to be in central Asia as a result of the conflict in Afghanistan. The prospects for peace are gloomy indeed. A new phase will soon be given to the Oriental question—particularly as concerns Palestine.

THE HORNET.

And I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee. Ex. xxiii. 28.

Moreover the Lord thy God will send the hornet among them, until they that are left and hide themselves from thee, be destroyed. Deut. vii 20.

And I sent the hornet before you, which drave them out from before you, even the two kings of the Amorites; but not with thy sword, nor with thy bow. Josh. xxiv. 12.

Hornet is the common popular name given to a stinging hymenopterous insect of a very formidable character, in some of its species, according to the above quoted Scriptures. Hornets, like wasps and bees, live in society, and in nests containing males, females, and neuters, the last two of which are armed with a venomous sting. Their nests are of a rounded form, and are made of materials gathered by the insects, and prepared by their mandibles into a sort of soft pasteboard, and inside these nests they make horizontal combs, consisting of hexagonal cells, with the openings downward. In these cells the larvæ are inclosed and fed by the matured insects until they attain their full growth, when they line their cells with a silken covering, and in this undergo their metamorphosis into the perfect insect. Ordinarily there are about 150 individuals in a nest. Hornets prey upon other insects, especially flies, upon ripe, sweet fruits, and rob bees of their honey. Hornets, as it appears from sufficient testimony, infested many parts of the east. Cruden says:

"Hornets are a sort of strong flies which the Lord used as instruments to plague the enemies of his people. They are of themselves very troublesome and mischievous; but those the Lord made use of were, it is thought, like the flies wherewith he plagued Egypt, of an extraordinary size and pernicionsness. It is said they live like the wasps, and have pestilent stings like the bees, and that if twenty-seven of them sting man or beast it is certain death to either. Nor is it strange that such creatures did drive out the Canaanites from their habitations; for many heathen writers give instances of some people driven from their seats by frogs, others by mice, others by bees and wasps; of which see Herodotus, Diodorus, Pliny, Ælian, Justin, etc. And it is said that a Christian city, being besieged by Sapores, king of Persia, was delivered by hornets; for the elephants and beasts being stung by them, waxed unruly, and so the whole army fled."

Notwithstanding what is said in Scripture, and the allusions of historians to the formidable part enacted by these insects, some have been disposed to treat the whole account contained in the Bible in a metaphorical manner as signifying a certain terror or madness that seized upon the enemies of Israel. But the following will go to prove that God's word is extremely literal in all its historic statements. We make the clipping from a very late paper, which shows most conclusively the formidable nature of this insect in our times:

"The following from Nature will give some idea of the insect pests of India:

"On one occasion I was showing some friends over the famous 'Arrah House,' and opened a small window to let in more air and light. In doing so I unwittingly disturbed the adhesions of a great hornets' nest, and one of the infuriated inmates at once stung me on the left temple. The pain was intense and the swelling immediate. Aware of the constitutional disturbance which would follow, I made for home (about five hundred yards distant), and reached the threshold of my drawing-room, and there I was brought to an instant standstill, unable to move hand or foot, and trembling like an aspen leaf. I was laid on a sofa, and asked for a glass of port wine, which soon revived me. This dreadful hornet, nearly two inches long, deep brown, with a broad yellow band across the abdomen, builds large globular paper nests, and is not rare in the Himalayas, where it may often be seen in the pines. The hillmen dread it extremely, and with good reason, for a swarm, and even a few individuals, will attack you fiercely and follow you for miles. Griffs, who have fired at a nest, against the remonstrances of the hillmen, have paid dearly for their rashness. When attacked, the hillmen squat down, and drawing their blankets closely around them, await the subsidence of the storm, rarely escaping two or three stings. I have known one of these hornets to kill a child by its sting; and many horses have been destroyed by an infuriated swarm. These are the dreadful animals which assisted in the expulsion of the Amorites of old."

The Lord is under no necessity of raining down fire and brimstone, in every instance, to destroy the ungodly. Neither is he compelled to shower down heavy hailstones upon mailed warriors, nor to send abroad the right-aiming thunderstrokes against armed hosts, to demonstrate his own almighty power. What would be the fate of a host of a hundred thousand men armed with all the destructive implements of modern warfare, should the Lord send swarms of thousands of these dreadful insects, like the ones alluded to in the above extract, with stings filled with venom as deadly as the poison of asps or scorpions, or as lurks in the serpent's deadly tooth? The lion is the king of beasts, but one has well said—"A lion may perish by the puncture of an asp." Through pestiferous insects alone God could depopulate the world.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Second Death.

TO JOHN:

My Dear Brother:—Your mind of late, like many others, seems to be considerably exercised about the second death. In your last short article, you, by definition show that the word "Second" has order in it. In this I think you to be correct, and also your examples I think to be good.

In talking of the "second advent" of course implies a first. But the second advent will not be to the same generation of people to whom the first was. Likewise the second covenant when made is not with the same generation—the same identical persons of Israel with whom the first was made. Then apply the facts in their force as they occur in the illustrations to the second death—the point illustrated—and we have a correct exposition of the phrase.

Your citation at the end of your article from Heb. ix. 27, I think inapplicable. The appointment is not to all men, nor to man generally, but to men—the High Priest under the law. To these it was once appointed to die—representatively in the sacrifices—and after the offerings before the ark of the covenant, the Lord's presence met at the mercy seat, then they come forth out of the tabernacle to judgment to the people. So Christ has once offered himself up for the sins of the people, and to them who look for him will he appear the second time without (a) sin (offering) unto salvation. Look the context over and abandon your error.

Yours in love,
MORTIMER.

The Covenants of Promise.

God gave Abraham the land bounded by the Mediterranean Sea and River Euphrates. God spoke in this wise: Get thee out of thy country and from thy kindred, from thy father's house unto a land I will show thee. And Abraham passed through the land and the Lord said unto Abraham, to thee and thy seed (which is Christ) will I give this land. Gen. xii. 1, 6. Some say he inherited in this present life. Abraham said Lord, God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it? He said take me a heifer of three years old, &c. When the sun was going down a deep sleep fell upon Abraham, and lo a horror of great darkness fell upon him! That was typical of the state of death. Look at the many centuries that have passed since Abraham and still he is sleeping in the dust. And God said thou shalt go to thy father, in peace thou shalt be buried in a good old age. When Sarah, Abraham's wife died, he had no land to bury her out of his sight. He purchased the cave of Machpelah for 400 shekels of silver. How many I have heard say Abraham inherited it, and the old bible is already fulfilled.

We will now turn to the New Testament for the promise that he should be heir of the world, not to Abraham only, but to all that are of the faith of the faithful Abraham. Rom. iv. 13, 16. Now, to Abraham and his seed were the promises made, not unto the seeds of many, but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ, and if ye be Christ then are ye Abraham's seed and heir according to the promise. Gal. xvi. 29. When Paul was brought before king Agrippa he said, and now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our father, unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night hope to come, for which hope's sake I am accused of the Jews. And if ye be Christ' then are you Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. They (the Saints) were stoned, sawn asunder tempted, being destitute, tormented and afflicted, of whom the world was not worthy; they wandered in deserts and in mountains. These all having died in faith received not the promise.

Now listen to the testimony of a dying man. Stephen, in speaking of Abraham gave him no inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child. Abraham will receive this land when he awakens from the dead and then the Gentiles will say, surely our fathers have inherited lies and vanities wherein there is no profit. Jer. xvi. 19. MRS. LOU BUTLER.

Conference Report.

The annual conference of the brethren of the Abrahamic faith of northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin, met according to previous appointment at Lanark, Ill.

Met on Friday evening for preaching. Brother Haughawaut, of Iowa, delivered a very interesting discourse.

Met again Saturday morning at 9 a. m. Meeting called to order, and Bro. J. Arnold appointed chairman. A committee of three was then chosen to make arrangements for succeeding meetings, namely, Bro. Elliot, of Lanark, Mitchell, of Plum River, and Middlekauff, of Oregon. An hour was very pleasantly spent whilst the committee withdrew, with remarks from quite a number of brethren, after which brother Haughawaut addressed the meeting. We then adjourned to meet again in the afternoon.

Preaching by brother J. Arnold followed by brother Haughawaut. Adjourned to meet again in the evening. Preaching by brother Haughawaut.

Met on Sunday morning at 9 o'clock for social meeting, after which brother Haughawaut addressed the meeting on the responsibility of baptism. Adjourned to meet at brother Elliott's at 1:30 o'clock, and from there proceeded to the water, where two intelligent believers were buried by baptism.

From thence we proceeded to the meeting house and brother Jacobs addressed the meeting, followed by brother Mitchel, after which a goodly number partook of the Lord's Supper. Adjourned to meet in the evening.

Brother Haughawaut addressed the meeting. Adjourned to meet at some indefinite time and place as brother J. Arnold may announce.

Had a good meeting.

The Soil and Climate of Palestine.

An anonymous correspondent of the Jewish Chronicle calls attention anew to the "Regeneration of Palestine." We quote a few of his remarks, specially having reference to the growth of trees:

"That there is a climatic co-relation between the earth's moisture and its verdure and fruitfulness, by the presence or absence of forests, is a fact that has been recognized by writers in physical science, as Marsh, Herschell, Humboldt, and others; by scientific societies and by legislatures, as well as by practical observation and by uniform tradition. The generalized fact is simply this: That forests, tempering the heats of summer, are favorable to the condensation of vapor and the precipitation of rains. It is said, and I believe that the fact is well attested, that the rainfall of St. Helena, owing to improved modes of culture and the planting of trees, is more than double what it was during the imprisonment of Napoleon. The average rains of Egypt are thirty days in the year, whereas sixty years ago, during the sixteen months' occupancy by Napoleon, there was not a drop of rain. About fifty years ago, Mehemet Ali caused many millions of trees to be planted for the purpose of ameliorating the climate and of increasing the amount of rain, and the result has been not only favorable, but strikingly marvelous. Gen. Loring, formerly of the American army, now in the service of the Khedive, informed me in September, 1877, that he witnessed at Cairo a few years ago, in the month of July, a rain and thunder storm scarcely surpassed by a storm in the Rocky Mountains. The rain fell in torrents, the streets were flooded, the lightning blazed along the sky, and the inhabitants fled to the streets and prostrated themselves upon the ground, thinking it was the day of doom. In Utah, Salt Lake has risen seven feet since the planting of trees in the valley, and less irrigation is now required than formerly. The water marks indicate that in ancient times the water was much higher than it is now. The states of Illinois and Iowa, prairie states, have for years paid premiums for tree-planting, and the results are protection in summer from the heat, and in winter from the cold, as well as a more equable distribution of the rainfall. And it is reported that the Pacific railroad company has appointed an officer to superintend the planting of trees to produce forests, and that even the laying of the iron rail was attended with marked amelioration of climate, owing, as is supposed, to electrical influence. .... In the days of Jerusalem's greatness, there might have been seen by any one looking across the gorge to Olivet, not only the olive and the vine and fig, but the myrtle and the pine, and the white blossoming almond. Jerusalem is to-day a Jewish poorhouse or prison, and the Mahommedan holds the key. .... Palestine, now lying low in the dust, may be restored to more than its pristine grandeur and glory. It is a land of mountains and plains and valleys. It has within itself almost every variety of soil and of climate. The productiveness of the soil is amazing, wanting only water and culture. The maritime plain is a natural wheat field; the plain of Esdraelon is not only fertile and easily watered; it is a line prepared by the hand of Nature for a railroad across the Peninsula. The Jordan valley is tropical and will bear tropical fruits, and, with irrigation from the mountain springs and from the Jordan river, it will yield large exports of untold value, for which the markets of the world are waiting. There is only wanted a beneficent government and patient industry, and all these things shall come to pass."

So far the correspondent of the Jewish Chronicle. The beneficial effect upon the climate of Palestine, of the cultivation of trees, is vouched for by Lieut. Charles Warren (of exploration fame) in his pamphlet "The Land of Promise, or Turkey's Guarantee," published in 1875, which advocated the farming of the country for the benefit of the bondholders of the Porte "with the avowed intention of gradually introducing the Jew, poor and simple, to occupy and govern the country." He says:

"The heat of the sun causes a moisture to rise from the trees and soil beneath them, which, on reaching the higher and cooler winds, is condensed into visible vapor, constantly forming as the breeze passes over the grove, so that each grove, so to speak, supplies its own umbrella. The climate is thus changed. Where were hot glaring sun, dry wind, dry earth, stony land, absence of vegetable products, are now to be found fleecy clouds floating through the balmy air, the heat of the sun tempered by visible and invisible vapors, groves with moist soil, trickling streamlets issuing from the rocks, villages springing up apace. Palestine regenerated. This is no dream. I have seen this change take place in Palestine in three years, on a small scale. Why is the Lebanon so different to the hill country of Palestine? In a great measure, because, by reason of its position and conformation, its woods have not been cut down, and its people have not been ground down to the utmost. Again, on the east of Jordan, in Gilead, I have seen the same. After riding for miles through ruins in the glaring summer atmosphere, through a country denuded of trees, nearly choking with the scorching wind, I came upon a district where the ancient woods had not been cut down. Immediately a change was felt; clouds were seen hanging over the woods, the air became soft and pleasant, the sun's rays beat less fiercely, flowers were seen under the trees, blackberries on the brambles, water gushing out from the hillsides, birds chirping in the shade. This was not due to any change in the atmosphere generally, but was entirely local, and due to the presence of trees. In fact, there are spots where you can, on the same level, change the climate in an hour by passing from the bare land to that which is well wooded. This matter I have frequently examined into in Palestine. I mention one particular instance. During a prevalence of hot winds at Jerusalem, I noticed two clouds constantly stationary a few miles off, in an otherwise cloudless sky. On riding over towards them, I found them to be hanging over two large olive groves about seven miles off, recently planted by the Greek convents. Although the wind was blowing briskly, the moisture ascending was condensed as quickly as it rose, and formed an umbrella over these groves."

The Dean of Westminster on Baptism.

Dean Stanley's paper on Baptism, in The Nineteenth Century for last month, contains some very significant statements. We can only find room for a sentence or two. On the primitive "mode," he says: "The water in these Eastern regions, so doubly significant of all that was pure and refreshing, closed over the heads of the converts, and they rose into the light of heaven new and altered beings. Baptism was not only a bath, but a plunge—an entire submersion in the deep water, a leap as into the rolling sea or the rushing river, where, for the moment, the waves close over the bather's head, and he emerges again as from a momentary grave; or it was the shock of a shower-bath—the rush of water passed over the whole person from capacious vessels, so as to wrap the recipient as within the veil of a splashing cataract. This was the part of the ceremony on which the apostles laid so much stress. It seemed to them like a burial of the old former self, and the rising up again of the new self. .... It was a complete change from the idolatries and profligacies of the old heathen world to the light and purity of Christianity." Again, "The change from immersion to sprinkling has set aside the larger part of the apostolic language regarding baptism, and has altered the very meaning of the word."

Yet this "setting aside" of apostolic precept and practice seems rather to gratify Dean Stanley than otherwise. Indeed, he is proud of it, as "a striking example of the triumph of common sense and convenience over the bondage of form and custom." He regards immersion as "peculiarly unsuitable to the tastes, convenience, and the feelings of the countries of the north and the west." We cannot but ask ourselves—How shall this "triumph of common sense" abide the day that is to try, as with fire, all doctrine! "hay, wood, and stubble?" Or how, in the eyes of the Faithful and True Witness, will a discipleship appear which openly prefers its own "tastes and convenience" to the Master's command? Let us beware of the fate foreshadowed in Luke xii. 47.—M. W. S.

Portrait of a Pope.

Shelley, the Poet, says: "Religion, in the mind of an Italian Catholic, is adoration, faith, submission, penitence, blind admiration; not a rule for moral conduct. It has no necessary connection with any one virtue. The most atrocious villian may be rigidly devout, and, without any shock to established faith, confess himself to be so. Religion is, according to the temper of the mind which it inhabits, a passion, a persuasion, an excuse, a refuge; never a check.

While Alexander VI. was Pope, Hieronymus Porcius wrote, maintaining the doctrine of the Papal infallibility, and asserting that he only is a Christian who worships and blindly obeys the Pope. To a hypercritical intellect it would almost seem that the theory of Papal infallibility when applied to Alexander the Sixth, is subjected to some slight strain. This is the truthful portrait of this infallible Pope as given in the last number of the Nineteenth century.

"The life, the actions, and the character of this pope will forever remain a moral problem. It must be remembered that he was pope. He was not merely an almost incredibly wicked man, but he claimed to be the vicar of God. Apart even from the darkest crime which stains his infamous memory, his life was a long breach of the commandments which say, thou shalt not steal; thou shalt do no murder; thou shalt not commit adultery; thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor. Alexander the Sixth is, perhaps, the greatest and the foulest criminal in history; and he is, furthermore an occupant of the chair of St. Peter, the infallible pontiff of a church which claims to be connected with Christianity.

"Alexander did not hate or condemn the world; he was no Titanic skeptic or atheist, whose profound disbelief in divinity, and raging scorn of humanity led him to despise heaven and to defy hell. No, he believed—in his way; but he could turn from incest, from adultery, from murder, to worship the virgin, to perform mass, to fulfill any of the highest and most mystical functions of sacrodotal sacredness. He was nearly always successful; he was invariably happy. In him were blended materialism and superstition. He touches humanity chiefly in his love for his children, but is otherwise as infrahuman as he is undivine. It would almost seem as if some demon had, in mockery of men, created a being who should thrive through unsurpassed wickedness, and who—as the profoundest effort of most devilish satire—should be placed on high in the then chief office of Christendom, and be worshipped by millions as the infallible representative on earth of the all-wise, all-merciful, omniscient, and eternal God."

Useless Accumulation of Capital.

Once it was remarked to Lord Erskine that a man dying had left £200,000 ($970,000) whereupon he replied, "That's a poor capital to begin the next world with." Truly it was so, for if, on the other hand, the man had given it away in charity he would thus have really laid it up as a treasure in heaven, where, in a certain sense, he would have possessed and enjoyed it, whereas in this case he left it all behind him on earth when he died, and thus really lost it.

What a failure was that man's life! He got no good of his £200,000 in this world, and did not get himself ready for the next. What did he do? What is the grand result of his life, of his toil, of his anxious days and sleepless nights? He raked together £200,000. What did he do with it? Kept it as long as he could—until he died. What became of it? He left it to those that came after, and to the squabbles of the courts. If any good to the world ever came out of this £200,000, no thanks are due to him.

He kept it as long as he could, and left it only because he could not carry it with him. If he had only "converted it" as the bankers say! And it was convertible in the blessings of the poor; into the sweet consciousness of having done some good while he lived; of having spread the Gospel of Christ and saved souls and bodies. But he did none of these things. He raked it together, kept it, died, left it, and it made his last bed no better.

"The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully; and he thought within himself, saying, "What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my goods? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou has much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God" (Luke xii. 16-21).

Rebuilding Jerusalem.

The scheme for the rebuilding of Jerusalem seems to be now seriously contemplated. Sir Moses Montefiore and the Jews of the old school cast their longing eyes toward the ancient city of their solemnities. Not only has the great Jewish baronet repeatedly journeyed to Palestine, that he might improve the condition of the resident Jews, on whom he has lavished large sums, but he is now working away for the re-establishment of the Jews at Jerusalem, and with that view has recommenced the building of that city.

He has recently given orders to prepare for cultivation all the land in the front of the Judah Torah houses in Jerusalem. The rocks will be removed, terraces built all along, as it used to be in the time of King Solomon, and divided into twenty-two partitions, so that every inmate of the Torah houses may cultivate the necessary vegetables, etc., for his family. Sir Moses has also caused a very large cistern to be constructed in the center of the field, which will secure a full supply of water for all of them. There will be a beautiful veranda in front of the houses, so as to protect the inmates from the glare and light of a burning sun. The veranda was sent direct from London.

He has also had a new entrance made in the centre of the boundary wall, built a lodge for a watchman, and had a large bell affixed to one of the houses, to give the alarm in case of emergency. The Jews in Jerusalem, on the whole, are very poor, and just now are suffering great trials and privations; but many of them are beginning to lift up their heads, believing that their redemption draweth nigh.

Eastern Siberia is said to be menaced by famine; the prices of grain are higher than they were ever known before, and the poorer classes are already suffering severely. The harvest is an extremely poor one, and during the winter it is expected that the population will be in a terrible condition of want. The cattle plague has increased the evil, there being in many villages not one beast left alive.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

If any of the brethren residing in the following counties of Kansas, viz., Washington, Marshall, Nemaha, Brown, Doniphan, also Atchison county, Mo., desire me to visit them as I am passing through, they will please address me by card at Clay Center, Clay county, Kan. M. H. MORSE.

The Lord willing, I will be at Remington on Friday before the fourth Sunday in this month. J. E. HAVEN.

POETRY.

Peace.

When winds are raging o'er the upper ocean,
And billows wild contend with angry roar;
'Tis said, far down beneath the wild commotion,
That peaceful stillness reigns forevermore.

Far, far beneath, the noise of tempest dieth,
And silver waves chime ever peacefully;
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it bloweth,
Disturbs the Sabbath of that deeper sea.

So to the heart that knows Thy love, O Purest!
There is a temple sacred evermore;
And all the babble of life's angry voices
Dies in hushed stillness at its peaceful door.

Far, far away, the roar of passion dieth,
And loving thoughts rise calm and peacefully;
And no rude storm, how fierce soe'er it bloweth,
Disturbs the soul, O Lord, that dwells in Thee.

O Rest of rests! O Peace! serene, eternal!
Thou ever livest, and thou changest never;
And in the secret of thy presence dwelleth
Fulness of joy forever and forever.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—As our financial scheme, recently stated in our conference report, is now perhaps to restate, it will help to get it into action. Let it be understood by all concerned, that it is proposed to the church in Michigan. Also, that it is optional with each brother or sister to adopt it or not, but it calls for so light a tax, that it seems that every one can pay it without distress; and is so easy and simple a way of securing equality in our contributions that we can conceive of no good reason why each one shall not at once adopt it. Let us restate it:

1. Each brother pays fifty cents and each sister twenty-five cents on the first of January each year.

2. Each brother or sister having property is to ascertain from the township tax roll the amount of their assessment, deduct from it one-third of their indebtedness, and then pay one-fourth of one per cent., that is, twenty-five cents on each $100, remaining, one-half on the first of March, and one-half on the first of September.

To avoid confusion from the change now being in our state, in the rate of assessment, let the assessment of 1878 be used for the first payment. We hope the brethren named to see to it will each at once ascertain who will adopt and get it into action as soon as may be.

Editor Restitution:—There is but few of the one faith here. We met last Sunday at 2 o'clock. Brother Crockett read three chapters, Gen. vii., Dan. vi., Matt. vii., and reasoned out of the Scriptures until 11 o'clock and then we took the Lord's Supper. We all met at one o'clock. Brother Crockett delivered a delightful sermon from Heb. xi. 1, 2, 3. It was a Sabbath long to be remembered by those who are seeking for the truth. I don't see how anyone can escape if they neglect so great salvation. If we hold out faithful we shall receive the glorious promise, even eternal life in the world to come. I am so thankful that the gospel of the kingdom has been preached in this part of the world. It has brought me to see what I must do to be saved, and I can't see why others can't see what they must do. I wish every one could see what a condition they are in. I hope God will bring them to see before it is too late. I don't see how they can escape if they neglect so great salvation. Jesus says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Glorious rest!

Your sister in hope,

Wytheville, Va.

Editor Restitution:—I have not written for some time to you, and, of course, thought a few lines from this part of the country would not be out of place, providing you have time and space to insert this. Your invitation to write articles on practical Christianity is to the point. This arguing and harranguing on some certain theory is getting too commonplace, and, in fact, outsiders seem to think that we do not agree among ourselves, and more so when sarcasm is used, which should not be. "Practical Christianity," how few of us understand it, and, if we do, how few of us practice it. It is one thing to preach and another to practice what we preach. Do we make a profession? let us practice it. In every branch of business that is carried on in the world be it mechanic, farmer, merchant, army or navy, they must all practice if they would be perfect in the knowledge of their calling. These are just brought up as a matter of illustration for the moment. We are called upon to be soldiers of Christ, then let us "put on the whole armor of God that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil," etc. Eph. vi. 11. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good," etc. "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice, and be ye kind to one another, (are we?) tenderhearted, forgiving one another even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Eph. iv. 29, etc., and also read 5th and 6th chapters; all good advice, and ought to be practical, too, if we would only heed it. Oh, dear brethren and sisters, do not let yourselves get wrapt up in the affairs of this life too much. Let us be considerate, give at least one-fourth of your time to God. We need not stop short off altogether from our labors, but let every thought, word and action stand out in bold relief. Let us devote part of our time to finding out how such and such a one are getting along, speak a kind word here and drop a cheer there. Like sunbeams, they will seem pleasant and bring cheer with them; it costs nothing and goes a great way. Let us not forget one another. Let us pray for one another whether absent or near, for the time is not far off when he will come whose right it is. Brethren, be careful about "I have married a wife and cannot come," "I have bought a yoke of oxen and cannot go," etc.; the Savior's own words of warning, and let us not chill. A short time ago the words of warning were at fever heat almost. Be careful that we do not cool off too suddenly, and about the time we got cold, the Savior would come, would it not be said, I can shoulder part of this, too? We are none of us perfect.

And now, in conclusion, I would say this, that it seems as if the cause were waxing cold. I don't know as it is, but it seems so. I want to see some good and short articles written in our paper. I do not say exclude all lengthy ones, for that would not do; for some are really good; but when an argument comes up, do not prolong it like the resurrection of the Wicked has been. It is all well enough to have a friendly discussion and then done with it. We sadly miss Brother Renner's familiar face from among us, he having returned to Illinois a few weeks ago. A kinder heart or patient man we rarely ever meet. But we hope that he will better himself financially, for it has been up hill work for him while in California. Success, Brother Renner, and do not forget us.

Yours as ever, dear Brother Chaplin, and others, in the soon-coming of our Lord,
THOS. HUGHES.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find one dollar, for I see that my time is about out for the RESTITUTION, and I like to take it and will as long as I can, although there are some who would deprive me of it if they could. It is all the preaching I get. I can not persuade anyone to see the need of salvation, or try to prove the truth. Pure truth can hardly show its head. There are plenty of Pharisees who think themselves so much better than others, but the Lord knows the heart, and sees not as poor sinful flesh does, —but I want to rejoice in tribulation. I wish I could write better so as to tell some of my thoughts in regard to waiting and watching to see that sign. I often feel that I should like to be one of the "hidden ones." The Lord knoweth them that are his. If I could do more good and find some to rejoice with in the truth and in the love of God, for the word speaks of the church of God as being one body, and if one member suffer, all the members suffer, I should like it, and should like to see love for one another. When the spirit is willing the flesh is weak. The disciples found it so when the dear Savior was in his agony and said to them "Could you not watch with me one hour?" What a comfort to know that our Savior knows and pities our weakness. Let us pray for each other that we may be the salt of the earth and the light of the world the little time we may have.

Editor Restitution:—The paper is still a welcome visitor to me, and I hope as long as I live to peruse its pages and compare the spirit of the brethren and sisters with the Spirit of Christ, as I find it in his word, and by faithfully pleading with God for wisdom and understanding I may grow in wisdom and truth. I hear some very dear brethren talking about enlarging THE RESTITUTION, and using a part of it for advertising, which would pay the expense of the paper. It seems to me as though it would be very much like our immortal soul people, who preach in their meeting houses on Sunday and use them through the week for socials, concerts, or, in the words of Christ, use it for a house of merchandise to keep up expense. Now, I think the gospel teaches pure and undefiled religion, coming out from the world, keeping ourselves unspotted; touch not the unclean things. This mix in the world with the gospel to keep up expenses is like taking rotten apples to make cider; if we can't see the difference we can taste it.

Yours in Christ,
P. A. BROWN.

Editor Restitution:—In hope of the precious promises God has made unto the fathers, and to us who were afar off. Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: if we are truly the sons of God the world will not know us; and why? Because we are not of the world. If we were of the world; we would mind the things of the world, and therefore would have fellowship with the world. We cannot serve two masters. Have we all, who profess to be waiting for the glorious consummation of the things promised, cut loose from the world, and the things that pertain thereto? Have we prayerfully considered this matter, and in the light of the Scriptures, which are unmistakably clear. Are we asking ourselves this most important question. 'Am I ready to meet my Lord,' or are we deceiving ourselves and being carelessly carried along with the tide of the world, drinking of its pleasures, mingling with the giddy and ungodly in such things as are leading multitudes to ruin and destruction. Are our feet upon the rock Christ Jesus? Have we fixed our eyes firmly upon him, or do we cast them wistfully upon the stream of worldly pleasures, wealth, position, and honor. "Come out of her my people and be not partakers of her sins, ye receive not of her plagues." Rev. xviii. 4. If we reach out and grasp a position in political ranks, if we bend all our energies in striving to gain a portion of the wealth that glitters and sparkles in all the gaities of life, are we not deceiving ourselves? We are commanded to abstain from the appearance of evil; if we contaminate ourselves with the things of the world, are we not of the world. Oh, these spots of which we are commanded to beware! "The world passes away and the lusts thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever," John ii. 17. Who is it that overcometh the world? He that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? Is this alone to save us? Are we not to strive to live in accordance with the teachings of this same Jesus and his inspired Apostles adding to our faith, knowledge and virtue, by putting off the lusts and sins of the world? showing a constant growth of good works, being sober minded, and above all of sound speech and sincerity, that the world may not be ashamed, having no evil to speak of us. Are we lending every effort in this direction that he, who has bought us with a price, may say "well done, good and faithful servant." Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of us should come short of it. Do we fully realize the awful consequence of being left, when Christ shall come to gather his jewels; left, because we have deceived ourselves, growing carelessly indifferent, allowing the sinful pleasures of the world to overcome the love of Christ and his kingdom: then awake to righteousness, for "godliness is profitable unto all things" giving the blessed assurance of life eternal.

The truth is gaining little by little in Stockton, notwithstanding the indifference of many and strenuous opposition of a few. Our little band now numbers twenty members, several interested ones are searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so. We find many honest hearted ones among those who are being led by blind teachers; many who would rejoice with us in the glorious hope we have, if it could be made known to them. Brothers, and sisters too, for we can work together in the good cause, are we doing all we can in this direction? Suppose each one, in the coming year, should be the instrument, in God's hand, of bringing one soul into the 'bondage of the truth," what a number would be saved from the doom that awaits the children of darkness; what a joy in heaven. We also would have the blessed assurance of saving a soul from death and hiding a multitude of sins.

THE RESTITUTION is a great source of enjoyment and comfort to the waiting ones scattered over this broad land. The letters of the brethren and sisters are eagerly read by us, on the Pacific Coast, many of them from old friends and neighbors. May we soon be united by the coming of our King, is my daily prayer.

A few lines concerning the times in California. My attention was called to this by reading Bro. Renner's letter in THE RESTITUTION. Monopoly and oppression is the order of this age. We meet with them everywhere, not alone in this state. The world over the poor man must do the work; in this state he has not the six months of cold dreary climate to struggle against often using all that he has earned during a short summer. Wages are better here, while provision is not much higher, than in the states. With a few exceptions where mechanics have ruined their own trade by taking jobs at low rates, and doing inferior work, prices are good, the products of the soil are in good demand, and the soil itself yield under our California sun double and sometimes triple the the quantity raised in the eastern states.

Many people come here, get homesick and go back to the states dissatisfied. Others come, and can not be hired to go back east to live; people are not all alike, therefore opinions regarding certain matters differ. Where upon this earth can man find a resting place, free from disappointments, anxiety and vexation of spirit? Knowing as we do, the adverse circumstances against which Bro. R., struggled, marked with misfortunes, accidents and disappointments, we all sympathize with him trusting his future will be more prosperous in this life, and in the age to come joy without measure.

A WAITING PILGRIM.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find two dollars, for THE RESTITUTION, for another year, and one dollar a free will offering. I love to read THE RESTITUTION, for the truth's sake. I am in my seventy-fourth year, and still my heavenly Father gives me health, and strength. I can truly say with the Psalmist David, goodness and mercy, all my life has surely followed me, and in God's house for ever more my dwelling place shall be. Yours, in hope of an entrance into the everlasting kingdom, and may God bless you in all your labors of love.

NEWS ITEMS.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 13.—There is a strong tendency on the part of the Turkish Cabinet to enter into an actual alliance with Russia. The Grand Vizier and Osman Pasha, Minister of War, especially advocate a close understanding with Russia. It is said that the Sultan has been gained over to their views. It is rumored that Osman Pasha will soon go to Livadia on a special mission.

The Porte has asked Minister Layard to explain the approaching movement of the British Channel squadron to Turkish waters. At a recent interview the Sultan told Minister Layard that his ministers had submitted to him a proposition for the immediate introduction of reforms in the administration of Turkish affairs, but his authority over his subjects would suffer if he appeared to act under pressure from the British government. Minister Layard promised to communicate the declaration of the Sultan to Lord Salisbury. Under these circumstances the order to Admiral Hornby to sail eastward is declared at the Porte to be inexplicable.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 13.—The Novoe Vremya says that a proposal is being discussed in financial circles in that city for submitting to the government a plan for the construction of a railway from Orenburg to Tashkend, and thence by the way of Samarcand to the Russian frontier in the direction of India.

TILSIT, Nov. 13.—The German authorities have prohibited Russian steamboat traffic on the Prussian section of the River Niemen as a retaliation for a similar prohibition by the Russians on their portion of the river.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Mr. Wilson United States Consul at Jerusalem, in a dispatch to the Department of State, says that Great Britain is pressing upon Turkey certain reforms which Turkey is unable to carry out. She has neither the men nor the means required to support a just and equitable administration. The Lord Chief Justice of Cyprus remarked recently that Constantinople must go to the Greek or it would fall into the hands of Russia. The reason it has not been given to the Greek, he said, is because of the jealousy of the European powers, and because of the incapacity of the Greek for so great a trust. The Consul also says that Jericho is dead. Tiberias might as well be. Damascus is declining. Nazareth and Bethlehem are improving. Lebanon is the summer resort of Cyprus people.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The Standard's Vienna correspondent says a scheme is attributed to Russia for gaining the support of Italy. It is represented that Gen. Ignatieff will be appointed Ambassador to Rome.

A PANIC.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—On the Stock Exchange the Russian and Turkish securities were very flat. A heavy decline has taken place on the rumors of political complications. The trouble on the Stock Exchange originated in Paris, where there is a panic in consequence of the rumor that the British fleet has been ordered to enter the Black Sea, which the Russians will probably make a casus belli.

FIGHTING IN AFGHANISTAN.

SIMLA, Nov. 14.—A body of Safes numbering one thousand, who attacked a foraging party of the sixty-seventh regiment, were routed by Gen. McPherson at the junction of the Panshier and Cabul Rivers. The enemy suffered great loss. They were pursued six miles. The British loss was four killed and five wounded.

MADRID, Spain, Nov. 14.—Advices from the Canary Islands report the occurrence of heavy floods, which caused some loss of life, the downfall of many houses, destruction of the cochineal crop, and considerable damage to other crops and other property.

DIPTHERIA IN RUSSIA.

LONDON, November 15.—Diphtheria, which for several years has made great ravages in Russia, seems to be gaining more and more ground. "The disease," says the Novoe Vremya, "has attained such frightful proportions in some of the regions that the percentage of mortality far exceeds that of births. In the small district of Mirgorod, where the epidemic has been raging since 1875, there were 414 died from the disease. In 1876 and 1877 there died 1,303 persons. In Odessa, since May last, diphtheria snatched away 70 per cent. of children, and in Stavropol, in the course of four months one-half of the infant population fell victims to the disease. In Kishenoff, and in the Kieff and Poltava, the epidemic has been raging for the last two years without interruption. In the vicinity of Kaplonoska, in the government of Kharkoff, fifty children died in two weeks. In the hamlet of Nukomobka more than 200 infants have been carried away by disease since January last, in addition to a large number of adults. In the village of Tamarofka, not one child has escaped the epidemic. The Mariopal district showed an average daily death roll of ten.

The Novoe Vremya adds a long list of places where diphtheria is raging in the same frightful degree, and even worse. More than eleven vast districts are afflicted with the disease. The mortality both of youthful and adult population is so enormous that the government has appointed a special commission under M. Karel, physician in ordinary to the Emperor, to inquire into the causes of the epidemic, and has issued strict injunctions to the local authorities about the measures to be adopted for the arrest and extinction of the disease."

Correction.

In my article entitled "Do the Scriptures teach a resurrection," published in last issue of THE RESTITUTION, in 1st column, 15th line, read "which" for "while." In 2d column, 12th line, read "a flood of light upon the text" for "a flood of doubt upon the context." About the middle of the 2d column read "which" for "while."

POETRY.

The Love of God.

L. M. BURGESS.

My lips can never voiceless be,
For "the love of God constraineth me"
The love of God, that wondrous love
That stirred all heights of world's above;
All heights—all depths to bring release
From sin to us and give us peace.

Oh, wondrous love that bore to see
The dearest drops in agony,
In contumely, death and pain
For such ungrateful hearts to gain
The gift we know not how to prize!
We daily, hourly sacrifice
Anew the Lord who for us died,
And o'er His gracious gift decide.

Oh, Father, touch my heart with fire,
And every utterance inspire,
That I may never speak Thy name
But with the love, the grief, the shame
That fill me now, and may it be
That Thy salvation I may see;
And never, never, to Thee draw
Thy smile, my light, thy love, my law,
Till passing from this life I be
Wholly submerged and one in Thee.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Journal of Travels and Labors.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Since my last report I have visited the Indiana, Illinois and Iowa conferences. The report of these meetings have appeared in our paper. Since the adjournment of the Iowa conference my labors have been confined to the state of Kansas. Having spent the fourth of July in a pleasant grove on Lake Michigan in the vicinity of Chicago with a group of cherished friends, Mrs. Stephenson and I seated ourselves in the reclining chairs of the elegant cars of the Chicago & Alton railroad for Kansas City, St. Joseph and the state of Kansas. They would have been exceedingly pleasant but for the intensity of the heat and the dust which filled the cars. This is one of the safest, most elegant, and best managed trains leaving the city. When within about thirty miles of Kansas City, the east and west bound trains collided, piling up the engines and front baggage cars in a heap of ruins. Our baggage being on the second baggage car was not injured. No lives were lost, and no serious injury issued.

Having failed to make connections at Kansas City, we traversed the city in small incommodious street cars. Kansas City gives every evidence of enterprise as a railroad center, and commercial emporium. But the intensity of the heat at the depot, walled in by towering bluffs and ranges of hills was intolerable. The air was perfectly suffocating, being as hot and dry as though it had passed through a fiery furnace. The narrow streets wind their serpentine course around hills and over bluffs. On either side of these streets are ranges of low, but well filled, stores and business houses. From the height of Prospect Bluff one has a fine view of Kansas City and Wyandotte at the mouth of Kansas River. But as a queenly city with picturesque scenery and fair proportions it should not be compared with its aristocratic sister, St. Joseph. But as a railroad center and commercial emporium the comparison will be at no distant period what it was twenty years ago between Chicago and Milwaukee. Kansas City contains nearly thirteen thousand more inhabitants, and as a railroad center St. Joseph is only an adjunct.

At 7 p. m., we took the Council Bluff railroad at Kansas City and passed on to St. Joseph, stopping a few days to visit our old friends and sisters, Margaret Rock and Carrie Williams, formerly Margaret and Carrie Harris.

Since my return to Kansas I have visited Severance twice. The first meetings were held in a school house near brother John Biner's, and two miles and a half south of Severance. The last meetings were held in a school house in the village of Severance. My two discourses on Sunday were on the authenticity of the Holy Scriptures. In the forenoon I endeavored to prove that there were no irreconcilable contradictions from Genesis to Revelations. I also answered the leading objections to the harmonious teachings of the Bible. My theme in the evening was, "No conflict between the Bible and Science." Our congregations are always quite large under favorable circumstances. The best attention was given to these discourses.

The harmony of brethren and sisters has been somewhat disturbed by spiritualism. If those who so strenuously advocate the restoration of miraculous gifts, would only wait until they could demonstrate the high claims they have set up, there would be no division or trouble in this age. Those who do not believe in the restoration of miracles should be careful how they quote texts and apply them to the present times which record the most stupendous miracles ever wrought.

I next visited Scott's school house near Merrill, Brown Co., and gave one discourse at a school house west of brother Saylor's. Between the meetings, forenoon and evening, at Scott's school house, four were immersed, making seven in that neighborhood who have obeyed the gospel. We always have interesting meetings in that community. There are a dozen obedient believers in that vicinity, who are walking consistently with their profession, and whose influence is good. We hope that others will follow the example of those who have recently obeyed the requirements of the gospel. It will be remembered by many in Illinois that our good brethren and sisters, C. A. and E. M. Saylors, reside in that neighborhood. All who know them will testify to their love of the truth, and their zeal for its promulgation. They also like Kansas, its climate, soil, and all that go to make it a desirable home, except the article of timber, and this impediment is being fast overcome. There is, perhaps no soil on the globe in which all kinds of wood adapted to this climate will grow more rapidly. For all kinds of fruits, berries and roots indigenous to the same latitude, Kansas is unsurpassed. The water is generally good, and the excess of good soil as far as I have traveled, is unsurpassed by any country from ocean to ocean. It will be subject to drouth more or less occasionally, until a much larger breadth of surface shall be broken so that the earth can absorb the rains and give the water back to permeate the air, from clouds which will descend in genial showers to water the earth. Most of the water falling upon the undulating prairies flow over the hard turf-bound surface and down the rivulets, brooks and rivers into the great bodies of water without irrigating the earth.

I consider Kansas, as far as I am qualified by personal observation to testify, is one of the most healthy states in these United States. Its fine bracing air and cool refreshing nights, make it the proud peer of California or Oregon. I have enjoyed better health the past summer, and more genuine physical comfort in working, eating, drinking and sleeping than during the hot summer months of three decade of years, except the three summers I spent on the Pacific slope. And its usually pleasant winters are more agreeable than the long, gloomy, rainy, muddy winters of Oregon and California. And the cheapness of the land make it available to the poor.

I next visited Frankfort, Marshall county, and delivered four discourses at Osborne's school house to fair and very attentive congregations. Also one discourse to a well filled school house and attentive congregation about six miles south of Frankfort.

I next called on brother Moyer six miles west of Clay Center. Had a very pleasant visit with brother Moyer and his amiable companion, and brother and sister Chapman from six miles east of Clay Center. Preached twice in the school house near brother Moyer's Saturday and Sunday evening. There was a large gathering from quite a distance present in the evening and listened with marked attention and apparent interest to a discourse on the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers. The morning of the same day I spoke to a crowded house eight miles from brother Moyer's. More interest could not be manifested anywhere. All were anxious to have more meetings. I think much good might be done there by an efficient preacher and a protracted effort. The same is true of every place it was my pleasure to visit.

I next called on our excellent brother Clover, near Glen Elder, who has done more toward keeping up meetings and holding up the banner of truth in that part of the state than all others. He accompanied me in all my subsequent travels in these parts, and a more zealous, congenial and good-natured companion it has seldom been my privilege to enjoy, and being a good singer he contributed much to the interest and sum of good which was accomplished at our meetings. All who know him respect and have confidence in him as a man, neighbor and Christian. He is a workman who need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. The brethren talk of furnishing him a rig to travel and spend his time in the proclamation of the word. I spent several pleasant days with brother and sister Clover in their own quiet pleasant home.

I next visited brother Barnhill's neighborhood, preaching two evenings in a sod school house near brother Thompson's, or Dr. Thompson's, formerly of Indiana, with whom many will be acquainted, as well as brother Barnhill, son of Hugh Barnhill, of Argos. Saturday and Sunday evenings I spoke in brother Barnhill's house and Sunday morning and afternoon the meetings were held in a grove near by, on brother Barnhill's place. On account of the place of the meetings having been changed, and it not being generally known where the meeting would convene, the congregations were not large Sunday morning and afternoon, but the house was filled in the evening. Brother Barnhill informed me a few days ago that the people were anxious to have me visit them again, and that if I should do so, there would be a general turn out.

I preached four evenings at a school house near brother Lott Clover's, and notwithstanding it was a very busy time hay harvesting, the school house was clearly filled with as attentive, and to all appearance as thrillingly interested listeners, as I have seen grouped together anywhere.

I next visited a neighborhood the same distance north that brother Barnhill's is south, and there are about the same number of brethren and sisters at both places, namely, about a dozen or fifteen at each place. There are, perhaps, eight or ten believers in brother Clover's neighborhood, but I think with efficient labor such as brother Clover and others will bestow, there will be additions. The same, I think, is true of Brother Barnhill's neighborhood.

Our meeting Saturday evening near brother Hull's, Jewell county, was a failure on account of the storm, but Sunday morning, afternoon and evening, the commodious school house was jammed full, and better attention and interest I have never witnessed. I hope to be able to visit them again.

With a large turn out from all the forementioned places, I went to the conference which convened in brother Noe's neighborhood from Friday evening till Sunday evening. There was a good turn out of brethren and sisters from all parts of north and central Kansas. They organized by electing brother Clover president, and brother Edwin secretary. Everything was done decently and in order. All moved on harmoniously without one jarring note of discord. The conference had been appointed in view of my attending and doing the preaching. I delivered six discourses. By request I delivered a connected series of discourses on what we must believe and do to be saved. There were fair congregations from the neighborhood on Friday evening and Saturday, and a fine turn out to the three meetings on Sunday. It was a season of refreshing. There are some twelve or fifteen brethren and sisters near where the meeting was held. All expressed themselves highly gratified and well paid for the trouble of preparing for it, or coming so far to it. These from different parts resolved to keep up their weekly meetings at their respective places of residence, or in their respective neighborhoods, so as to keep the fires of zeal and interest burning. The first quarterly conference is to be held in brother Clover's neighborhood near Glen Elder, the last week in November. All united in requesting me to attend both the quarterly and annual conference, to which I shall be happy to respond. Brethren at Antioch, Ill., will remember brethren and sisters Noe and Gates residing in the vicinity of the school house where the conference convened.

On Monday evening I preached to a well filled schoolhouse and an intelligent congregation near brother Henry Messimore's, his daughter and her husband, and brother Everhart's. The audience gave their undivided attention to a discourse on everlasting punishment. Bro. and sister Messimore wishes to be remembered by their many friends east. Their address is Glasco, Kansas. Bro. Noe's address is Cordova, Kansas. Your brother in hope.

To Those of Like Precious Faith, Greeting.

It has been some time since I have had any thing in THE RESTITUTION, and we want to let the brethren throughout the country, know that we are growing stronger in faith and in the knowledge of our blessed Master, notwithstanding all the opposition and persecution that Satan and his host can array against us, we can look back through history and see all the scoffings, trials and cruel mockings that was heaped upon the Captain of our salvation. Yes even led as a lamb to the slaughter to die the ignominious death of the cross and so opened not his mouth. Here we see one that went about doing good to all humanity that came in his way. See him as he treads along the walks, uplands or on the mountain top. See him in the wilderness or desert, or where you will, he is the same always with a cheering word to poor fallen man. See him as he raises the widow's son, her only hope of sustenance—she was broken hearted—the Savior knew this and he could not have done any other act that would have been so consoling to the widowed mother as they were fast hastening on to deposit her only son in his last resting place. He stops the bier, speaks to the dead one, and he sets up. Oh, what joy now springs up in the bosom of that mother in flowing gratitude to her Lord, to see her son that was dead but now he is alive again ready to come at her bidding.

See him as he heals the lame. See him as he opens the eyes of the blind and unstops the ears of the deaf. And again, see him at the tomb of Lazarus, come from a distant place that he might comfort those whom he loved and raise his best friend from the gloomy and dark grave. See the sister of him that was dead meets him on the way and weepingly says "Lord if thou hadst been here my brother would not have died." But the Savior answers her consolingly and assures her that her brother shall live again, and this she very well understood, that he would rise at the last day. They come to the tomb and the Savior says, where have ye laid him, and when one doubts he assures her that he is able to raise him from his slumbering tomb. They removed the stones from the mouth of the cave, and the life Giver calls, and he that was dead came forth to greet his once sorrowful but now happy sisters. What a happy meeting? But was it more happy than the meetings will be on the golden shore where we shall meet to part no more forever, when that gladsome day shall come? But will he come again? Yes he is faithful that has promised and the angels said, when he was ascending he will come again, O bless his holy name, for then we will have peace and good will will flow from man to man. But how is it now? Look around and see the oppressed everywhere. How long will it be so? Until he comes whose right is to rule the nations of earth.
